An exhibitor may depend upon capacity at the night shows if this picture is run in the afternoon against any fair competition—that is, if the local telephone service holds out! It is one that will prompt every woman with a husband to advise every woman she knows with the same attachment to "take him to see 'What Do Men Want.'"

Miss Weber excels in selecting a cast. Claire Windsor excels in her part.

The story is one that might happen anywhere and does happen everywhere. Exteriors, which evidence California, are of good scenic value, while the interiors call for sets that tell part of the story, and hit the mark. It is smoothly told, working up enjoyable suspense, and though intensely dramatic, has sufficient comedy relief to avoid strain. It proves Lois Weber, as a director, is competent, painstaking and that whatever else she may or may not know, she KNOWS MEN.

It is based upon the tendency of masculine restlessness, using as a living illustration, a young man of an everyday family, whose parents have other children, mostly sons. He wants to be an inventor and finds his father's interruptions, bringing him back to earth and the work that has been laid out for him, very disconcerting. He wants the prettiest girl in town, wants her badly enough that he marries her. Then he wants children and they put in an appearance, one by one. He wants to be a successful business man and achieves great honors, at the same time encumbering wealth.

An eventual quarrel with the beautiful wife, who long before sensed his indifference, decides the man that what he really wants is freedom. Then he wants to be the object of feminine flattery, finds gratification in being numbered one among a swift "smart set," neglecting his family. When "gay lady" forgets to cover her inclination to be promiscuous, he registers disgust and wants his wife. Returning home, just in time to misunderstand the call of an old admirer he wants to kill the intruder, after leaving his wife to entertain herself, for many months. He insults her womanhood, pride, self respect by accusing her falsely, and when he leaves, never wants to see her again. Learning later that she was not unfaithful, he wants her back. In the end we learn that what a man really wants is the knowledge of what he does want, but the thrilling drama offers reason to introduce plain truths that will make men fidget and women tell the local exhibitor what good pictures he is playing, these days.—Length, 6 reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"What Do Men Want," latest screen production, the work of the heralded woman motion picture director, Lois Weber, is scheduled for ———— theatre on ————. It is life personified, the characters enacted being representations of the very people we know, sometimes reflections of ourselves. This is a picture that may be said to fairly live and breathe. It aims at humanity at large, and "hits home."

The center of interest is a man, who, as a boy wants to be an inventor. He wants a beautiful girl for a wife, then he wants to be father of her children. When he has amassed a fortune, the result of his inventions, he wants to forget to be a lover, and be just a husband. He nexts wants to be free, wants the society of gay women. When he is saturated with that, he wants his wife back, but wants her to accept him after all his shortcomings, yet be the same, herself. It is the most vital portrayal of human life yet seen on the screen.

PROGRAM READER

"What Do Men Want?" Happiness? Wealth? Position Freedom? In the great photoplay, the one that has surpassed any of Lois Weber's previously wonderful work, is illustrated why men seem always seeking the unattainable. Restless, constantly searching man. What is he looking for? If you saw "Where Are My Children?" "Hypocrites," "Scandal," or "The Price of a Good Time," then you know Lois Weber is as competent a director as any man who has ever made a similar motion picture. But you will not realize the volume of her understanding of life, the depth of her wonderful insight into human nature untiil you see "What Do Men Want?"

CATCH LINES

"The way to a man's heart is through his stomach," quoth a wise old sage. Is it? See Lois Weber's "What Do Men Want" and find out if the heart or the stomach plays the most important part in man's life, especially after marriage. And if both stomach and heart are satisfied, what does he want next!

"PLAYTHINGS OF DESTINY"
(Louis B. Mayer-First National)

Unconvincing Story of Domestic Complications

THERE is a title tacked upon this picture which indicates that big drama might be unfolded. It carries one of those titles which might lead the spectator to believe that he is to see a dramatic treat. But "Playthings of Destiny" never rings true because of the arbitrary development of the plot, the false notes which constantly creep in, and the faulty characterization. Besides, the leading figure is one that does not develop a bit of sympathy.

Imagine a woman living up in the regions of the North who falls in love and marries a young settler and who promptly leaves him because of certain scandal connected with his life without going to the trouble to give him a hearing and permitting him to offer some sort of explanation. Yet this young wife believes the gossip of an adventuress whose character is so obvious that any woman with real intuition could not be deceived. She loses all sympathy for herself when she hastily packs her belongings and departs in a raging snowstorm. The elemental side of the picture is first rate, there being no argument over the detail to provide fitting atmosphere and backgrounds. The young husband had been adventurous in his youth and had failed to acquaint his wife with his callow days. Consequently she believes the evil talk, which indicates that her character is mighty shallow—not to trust the man whose name she had taken.

We next find her being rescued by a man who inveigles her to accompany him to a tropical country. There is no discussion over the other husband. She willingly commits bigamy without waiting to discover whether her first spouse is dead or not. And when she is living a lie in the tropical region torn by doubt and suspicion the first husband bobs up again and enters her life in the most arbitrary fashion. It is a most convenient episode. He is ushered in with a dramatic entrance, being introduced as a governor general or some similar dignitary. Years have passed and his hair has grayed at the temples. The woman is the mother of a little boy. So to the conflict. The second husband realizes there is some understanding between the two people and after an argument or two gracefully exits himself from the scene. The reason of the wife leaving her husband is never explained. She shows no real humility for causing so much sympathy. She has not only ruined his life, but that of the second husband, who has been led to believe that the child is his own.

The picture, upon this false premise, defies realities and one has little sympathy for the characters because they insult the intelligence. The players are first rate in their respective roles, the continuity is well arranged and the sets and photography all that could be desired. The weakness is found in the plot.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Playthings of Destiny" starring Anita Stewart, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. This is a striking romance of the frozen north and the tropics and permits the talented and beautiful star splendid opportunities to display her versatility. It is a dramatic picture which allows the assembly of players to flash their individual talent to advantage. Miss Stewart does some of the best work of her career in the role of Julie Leneau who was unwittingly led into marrying a man she did not love when she was really the wife of another man she did love.

She depicts the emotions of this woman tossed in a maelstrom of doubts and suspicions—a woman who has no choice but to believe that the man she loves with all her soul has tricked her into marriage when he has a legal wife living. Her flight from his cabin through a raging blizzard, her losing fight against the elements provides a series of tense dramatic moments. The picture presents a fine cast that includes Herbert Rawlinson, Walter McGrail, William V. Mong and others.

PROGRAM READER

The drama of a girl who married once for love and once to forget love—the drama of an Arctic blizzard splendid in its reality in which the girl is caught and taken out of her old life—taken to tropical shores—the drama of a girl who believed ill of her husband and left him—the drama of a girl who staked all on a new found friendship. Then old memories creep back. The husband of other days returned. How did she release herself from this predicament? See Anita Stewart in "Playthings of Destiny," a First National picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. Prominent in the cast are Herbert Rawlinson, Walter McGrail and others. A big, dramatic picture. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have Anita Stewart and Herbert Rawlinson to play up—the former as star—the latter as leading man. The story you can describe as a tense romantic drama which carries all the necessary elements to keep the spectators contented. Play it up as a stirring drama of the North and the tropics. The title can be played up in some sort of a prologue. You can send out some teaser ads. as outlined in the press sheet issued by First National. Some of these are cleverly worded so that you can excite curiosity among your fans. Bill it as a drama of human pawns on the chessboard of marriage.

CATCH LINES

She married two men, the second after she believed her first husband dead. See the stirring drama, "Playthings of Destiny."

"THE JOLT"
(Fox)

Fairly Entertaining Picture on a Hackneyed Theme

THE Fox co-stars, Johnnie Walker and Edna Murphy, have been given an orthodox story for their latest expression—a story which has been used often in various guises, but which serves its purpose for program houses. It is likely that most audiences will be fairly entertained because of the wealth of heart interest and the note of redemption found in the plot. It is all about a returned buddy who, unable to find work, takes up the life of crime with which he was formerly identified before he joined the army. To go back to the beginning, let it be said that the hero fell in love with a little French girl and married her and thus was influenced through her sympathetic personality to redeem himself. His life had been saved by his buddy.

This scene is important because it is the pal who bobs up later to rescue our hero from the depths. The action discloses the ex-soldier looking for work and unable to find it. His little love-nest seems to be on the verge of falling to pieces, and in a moment of despair he listens to the entreaties of his former crook friends to pick up some easy money. The hero is not exactly a weak character. There is a gentle scene which shows him giving up his one opportunity to another ex-service man who has children to feed. The picture builds obviously so that one can foresee the finish coming far in advance—that is if one has remembered the buddy left in France. The hero is commissioned to rob a safe of a man lately returned from Europe. He does this reluctantly, but thoughts of the ever present "wolf" at the door urge him on in his despair. But just as he gets his hands upon the fatal papers, the youth is confronted by the pal who saved his life.

There is some double-crossing argument concerning the "outside" man watching the house and the plot picks up a melodramatic chase which involves the chief villain. Eventually the culprits are caught and things end happily. The picture, because of its faint martial note, the friendly comradeship, is likely to get over with the youth of the land. It is not of much consequence in so far as dramatic qualities are concerned, but it contains a human touch which is recognizably real. The co-stars adapt themselves to their roles in a pleasing fashion, while Raymond McKee as the buddy makes the character thoroughly sincere.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Jolt" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— starring Johnnie Walker and Edna Murphy presents an interesting story of a young war veteran, Johnnie Stanton, who returns to the United States with a French bride. Unable to obtain employment, he goes back to the criminal gang with which he was formerly identified. They plan a night burglary. In the midst of this enterprise something happens to Johnnie that changes the whole course of his life. Indeed he is violently "jolted" back into the straight path, with ultimate happiness for his loyal little bride and himself.

Johnnie has rescued the young woman from the crook who had lured him back to crime. Through Terry Nolan, his buddy in France, all turns out well. The picture offers a story of human interest and according to reports is entirely entertaining. The co-stars fit into their roles with an adaptability which features their abundant personality and talent. A capable cast renders good assistance.

PROGRAM READER

That a man "may be down, but is never out," is interestingly told in "The Jolt," the Fox picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— starring Johnnie Walker and Edna Murphy. The story also furnishes another proof that a good woman's love is the greatest blessing that can come into any man's life. How a young soldier returns from France with a native bride—how he stoops to crime because of his inability to find a job—how he receives a jolt which changes the course of his life is told in five reels of human interest drama which builds through scenes which demand the spectator's undivided attention. There is a delightful romance which accompanies the action. It is one of absorbing interest and should not be missed.

SUGGESTIONS

The Fox co-stars, Johnnie Walker and Edna Murphy, have a story here which is strong in human interest. Any mention of this element would be a good line for exploitation. State that the stars are getting over in their pictures. Mention that Johnnie Walker scored a sensation in "Over the Hill," and that he is continuing the good work. Describe it as a story of a boy who "came back" and a girl who helped him. Play up the theme as one which stimulates kindliness and sympathy. Play up the cast. A mail campaign coupled with teasers and program readers would stimulate curiosity to see this picture. Play it up as an interesting human picture.

CATCH LINES

His buddy had saved him, and later he saved his buddy. Then came the jolt that brought him back to the straight path and a bride. See "The Jolt."

The romance of a valorous thief and his pretty bride. See "The Jolt."

"CLAY DOLLARS"
(Selznick)

Star Has Interesting Rural Comedy-Drama Here

RURAL comedy-dramas unquestionably run true to type. A small town setting with the ever faithful characters slightly exaggerated for dramatic effect, and sufficient details of a faithful pattern—these are enough to compose a good working skeleton for any story, provided the author and director have remembered to add the necessary trimmings and homespun touches to make it interesting. Lewis Allen Browne, who wrote the story, and George Archainbaud, the director, have provided enough entertaining hokum and atmosphere to make the picture genuinely entertaining. Of course they have had the assistance of a good cast, with Eugene O'Brien contributing as neat a performance as one could expect. The character parts are ably taken care of by Arthur Housman, Frank Currier and Ruth Dwyer.

That the director has caught an idea of American small town life stands as a credit when one stops to remember that he is more or less a stranger to the customs of the country. If he has shown lapses here and there regarding characterization he has more than made up for it by his technical skill. The dominant note is humor and he has splendidly maintained it. In fact by adding the necessary humorous element he has prevented the story from following a conventional groove. Main Street is being shown up pretty much on stage and screen these days. But Archainbaud has remembered that human nature is pretty much the same everywhere. So if the small town is depicted, at least you don't see any harsh ridicule of its customs and people. He is best with his comedy relief which depicts a snappy barn dance and a pool room episode. And these features fit in nicely without the least semblance of padding.

The plot concerns a swap in real estate which carries some real genuine bartering—a scene which will be appreciated everywhere. The hero arrives in the town to take possession of his late uncle's valuable property, only to discover that a certain money-grabbing Squire has traded his marsh land for the rich acres. Rather discouraged, the youth accepts a job as hotel clerk and the romance enters when he falls in love with the proprietor's daughter. The comedy intrudes pleasantly and with a good spirit of banter and "give and take," to be replaced by the effective finish which shows the youth outwitting the old skinflint by pretending that the marsh land is suitable for making clay bricks. The land shark swallows the bait, hook, line and sinker. And his threats are useless when the law stands ready to assert itself. Frank Currier is excellent as the skinflint, and Arthur Housman is clever in a comedy part.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A small town story of a land shark who attempted to outwit a keen youth from the city is "Clay Dollars," the Selznick attraction which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Eugene O'Brien as the star. This little homespun comedy-drama is rich in its comedy element and the really lifelike touches which go to make up the average American small town. You find the rural hotel, the poolroom and all the habitues. And Mr. O'Brien fits into the role of the city youth with a splendid abandon and enthusiasm, assisted by a cast that includes the capable Frank Currier, Arthur Housman, Ruth Dwyer and others.

The plot revolves around a city youth, who migrates to a small town to take possession of some valuable property. He discovers that a certain dignified native owns the estate, having traded in his own marsh lands. The youth learns later that the land shark came into possession contrary to law and by a clever ruse outwits the old man and wins back his property. The picture scintillates with humor and realities and is at all times interesting.

PROGRAM READER

Suppose you came down from the city and inherited some valuable property in the country. What would you do? Would you sell or take possession? Suppose then that you found your property had been traded in and that you only possessed some valueless marsh land. What would you do? Suppose you found yourself up against a clever land shark who had the law covered from every angle. Would you fight? Come next ———— and see what Eugene O'Brien does with such a story. Come and see "Clay Dollars," a picture of country life, country real estate and country atmosphere and people. Come and see an excellent comedy-drama of life.

SUGGESTIONS

This is Eugene O'Brien's cleverest picture in some time and you should make a good spread with the announcement that he is coming in the best rural comedy-drama of the season. Since this star has a great following especially with feminine fans it would be well to send out your mail campaign calling attention to the fact that the popular star is appearing soon. The title is a winner and can be exploited in various ways. Bill it as a comedy-drama with a homespun touch—which is certain to get over. A rube quartette or an ensemble laid against rural background would help. The picture is certain to please. So don't mince words.

CATCH LINES

He learned how to make dollars from clay and he showed up the country land shark. See Eugene O'Brien in "Clay Dollars." A clever picture of rural life.

"THE SILENT CALL"
(H. O. Davis-First National)

Vivid Dog Story Enacted Against Impressive Backgrounds

A PICTURESQUE German shepherd dog around which a triangle story pivots—a marvelous array of impressive backgrounds through which the action is perfectly blended—make up a picture that compels attention because of its rugged appeal and the call of the open spaces. "The Silent Call" is not so strong from a story angle. Really the plot is quite subordinated by the grandeur of scenery and the exploitation of the dog, who dominates the action from beginning to end. It does not matter that the plot may be punctured for its crude touches—that it relies heavily upon primitive melodrama which seems quite removed from realities. What does matter is the force and sweep of this eloquent Western which centers around the picturesque dog.

The animal is instrumental in bringing about an introduction of hero and heroine, but his main object is to prove his loyalty when circumstances place his friends in jeopardy. The dog is tried for his life because of his activities in killing sheep, but he bounds away with a love for life like a stag at bay. Whatever peregrinations the story takes up, the dog is there lending a significance because you actually catch the spirit of the big outdoors. Somehow the nature of the dog and the impressive backgrounds, revealing towering mountains and landscapes of unsurpassed beauty, discounts the limitations of the plot, which revolves around a group of outlaws determined to circumvent the hero and embarrass the heroine. Her father is captured by them, but when they seek the girl the big, trustful dog becomes a true minion of the law.

The story even drops its thread to show the characteristics of the specie—the fact that he is a wild, untamed creature who can reveal a nature as gentle as a dove under the guidance of sympathetic voices and hands. You follow this picture with the keenest suspense. The rugged exteriors demand it. And the dog, fighting the cause of all revolutionary spirit, carries on the vital element. There comes a climax which is quite startling. The girl is kidnapped and carried away by one of the brutes, but the dog takes up the scent and vivid is his punishment. He hunts down the criminal and pursues him. It is an uneven struggle and finally the villain plunges into the river to avoid the sharp teeth and ferocious strength. A battle in the water is short and swift. "The Silent Call" contains a good romance which is developed from sharp conflicts and contrasts. But it is the dog who makes the picture a rugged document. Certainly the offering presents as good a dog story as has ever been flashed on the screen. He is well trained and follows the cues with an intelligence almost human. Laurence Trimble's direction is praiseworthy in the manner in which he has kept the action vital and so brought it out that it seems in perfect harmony with the vivid backgrounds.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Among the many features of interest which are booked at the ———— theatre none should give greater entertainment than "The Silent Call," which comes next ———— for a limited engagement. The story adapted from one which appeared in a popular magazine offers a dramatic plot that involves a number of human actors and also the characterization of a remarkable dog, half wild and half domesticated, enacted by Strongheart, the most famous police dog in the world—a dog who served his country in the late war.

The background of the story is the Sierra mountain region which has been transferred to the screen in all its impressive grandeur. The action comprises a series of thrills which develops from self-sacrifice, the saving of human lives by the dog, and the punishment of those who are dishonorable. It unfolds a tense line of melodramatic moments—all of which build the keenest suspense. And the beautiful backgrounds are among the most impressive ever caught by the camera. A notable cast which includes John Bowers, William Dyer and Kathryn McGuire renders perfect interpretation.

PROGRAM READER

His fangs bared to despoilers; his shaggy body hunched to spring; an animal heart pulsing with dog-devotion to the girl who had shown him the first touch of human kindness—and fighting the call of his kind, the cry of the wolf-pack echoing through the wilderness. That's Strongheart, the wonder dog of the screen—the famous dog who served in the war—the dog who is probably the most famous dog in the world. This wonder dog appears in the amazing picture of primitive emotion and passion entitled "The Silent Call," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a big drama of big people—a drama of the big outdoors—a drama of men and women who lived and loved and struggled. But best of all it is a drama of a wonder dog.

"RIDING WITH DEATH"
(Fox)

Carries a Large Supply of Dramatic Vitamines

UNQUESTIONABLY the most conspicuous feature of this photoplay is the fact that Buck Jones has changed his name to Charles. Of course he will continue to use the picturesque cognomen, Buck, but only in connection with a parenthesis or two. It will be hard to identify an actor of Westerns with such a simple, orthodox name as Charles, but probably he will be known as Chuck before the long winter night is over. Taking up the picture, one discovers that while it is of obvious design, it is nevertheless packed with crisp action of the most adventurous kind. Jones is up to his familiar tricks here—such as riding like a phantom horseman, shootin' to kill, and executing a "mix" or two by doubling for himself in stunts.

Since the story concerns a Texas Ranger one knows for a certainty that plenty of dramatic vitamines or calories will be offered before he bobs up at the finish safe and sound like the representative of the Northwest Mounted. Place the Canadian officer in a Southwestern setting, call him a Ranger, and you have "Riding with Death." The author has resorted to "that thar mortgage" to reveal his plot. A skinflint sheriff holds the fatal papers and when he threatens the venerable property owner it is Jones who rides to the rescue and straightens out the complications. The plot may be hackneyed, but so fast is the action and so keen is the suspense that one has no time to notice the arbitrary and obviously trite theme.

The hero commands sympathy because he looks like an outsider in the love stake. The other fellow has ridden into town to get the necessary money to cover the mortgage and is killed in making his return journey. The Ranger buries him and starts the hunt for the assasin. The latter is the sheriff and he suggests to the old ranchman to release his daughter for matrimonial purposes. So the hero has a double object—to hunt down the criminal and save the girl. The villains have him cornered and stage a thrilling gauntlet scene—a gauntlet which he must run through to certain death. The suspense is keen here. However, the hero is saved because the arch-villain's signal is not flashed. The finish reveals a genuine thrill when the Ranger puts up a battle against overwhelming odds and pulls the v llain from a roof—a scene followed by a crash through an adjoining building. The picture holds up with its backgrounds and atmosphere and carries adequate acting throughout. You will like it because there is someth ng doing every minute.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An exciting and entertaining western photoplay entitled "Riding With Death," is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— week with Charles (Buck) Jones as the star. The story was written by Jacques Jaccard with the star especially in mind. And the vehicle fits him since it calls upon him to flash his abundant talent with the shooting arms and the saddle. It is a typical Jones picture because it displays plenty of the dash and daring which have accompanied his stories since he became a star.

Mr. Jones appears in the role of a Texas Ranger bearing the cognomen "Dynamite" Steve Dorsey. The young man is called upon to live up to the name when he rides through a county ruled and terrorized by a crooked sheriff and the latter's henchmen. The story is strong in plot and tremendously fast in action. The love theme is developed most effectively. The friendship of two men who are such good pals that they remain pals in spite of the conflict in desire is faithfully and appealingly portrayed. Mr. Jaccard also directed.

PROGRAM READER

Do you like fast action and hair-raising thrills on the screen? Do you like clever horsemanship and quick shooting on the trigger? Do you like to see this kind of a story balanced with a tremendously appealing romance? Then come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see "Riding With Death" with the fearless Charles (Buck) Jones as the star. It is an exciting and always entertaining story this "Riding With Death." It is crammed with startling action and goes slam-bang to a finish which is thrilling to say the least. The story concerns a Texas Ranger who has his difficulties restoring order from chaos. Remember next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture with an attractive title. It is compelling enough to attract any one's attention. They will want to see who is riding with death. Tell them that Charles (Buck) Jones is coming in a heroic part—the kind of part which has established his popularity. Play it up as a tense, exciting, thrilling photoplay about a Texas Ranger who has his troubles mapped out for him. Play up its snappy action and its appealing romance. Bring forth that it is an appealing story of the Southwest with something doing every minute. Tell that Betty Francisco and Jack Mower are in the cast. Use stills of Jones and his horse.

CATCH LINES

He was after a bad gang, for clean shooters do not shoot from ambush. See Charles (Buck) Jones in "Riding With Death."

"THE FOX"
(Universal)

AFTER making this feature Harry Carey undoubtedly took a holiday. He deserved it inasmuch as he acted in the capacity of author as well as star. In writing a thoroughly picturey plot he has not neglected to provide himself with an exceedingly fat part. Indeed there is not a scene which he does not dominate, and all the familiar little details which one has come to expect in a Carey offering are here intact. Bearing the cognomen of Ol' Santa Fe, the title sort of gives the story away before the picture has progressed through many scenes, one sort of suspects that he is some government agent—a marshal or secret service man.

The story gets off rather slowly and develops a whimsical touch as Carey is revealed as a "good-for-nothing" type—a sort of drifter. There is some first rate comedy which concerns him rescuing Breezy Eason, the tiny juvenile, whose life was so tragically cut short, and together they find themselves in the local bastile. The sheriff of the community has a tough time of it suppressing the Painted Cliffs gang, and his job is in jeopardy. Carey gets a position on his promise of good behavior in the local bank, the president of whom is no other than the leader of the gang. There it is that the drifter learns some important information. He next presides over the local restaurant and the first real punch is disclosed when a stormy battle in which tables and chairs and crockery are tossed around with abandon occupies the short but snappy scene.

The picture is a trifle episodic since it relies upon these incidents for its appeal. When Carey comes to the rescue of the sheriff and captures the two outlaws who have shot up the local library, one begins to get the drift of things. There is a slight flaw discernible here, which shows the set devoid of characters while the shooting is taking place, but which is instantly populated when the pursuit is taken up. The natives come from all sides in a jiffy. When the picture presents the open country one begins to appreciate the collection of inspiring shots of the Mohave desert country with its sand and cliffs and natural caves and dugout. The romantic note is almost neglected and is not missed because of the concentrated Western melodrama which is next introduced. The U. S. Cavalry is called into service and it is a battle royal, although the titles explaining the bowl and cliffs seem unnecessary in view of the impossibility of gauging the scenes accurately. The title writer waxes somewhat poetic here, but he stimulates plenty of spirit in the breast of the spectator. It is a compelling picture—a Harry Carey picture from stem to mizzen. It could be trimmed in some early scenes thus quickening the action.—Length, 6,900 feet.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is said to be Harry Carey's master picture is coming to the ———— theatre for an extended engagement beginning next ————. This picture is entitled "The Fox," and is written by the popular Universal star, whose recommendation of being human is more than emphasized here. It is a picture which carries a vigorous sweep and power—and dash and romance. It is a picture which reveals an excellent balance of comedy which punctuates the dramatic scenes and gives it a fine contrast. It embodies all those qualities that one has come to expect from a Carey offering. There is a thrill in nearly every turn of the plot which concerns the capture of a daring band of outlaws. The vigorous action builds evenly and surely straight to a powerful climax which carries a rich and spectacular appeal—a climax in which a troop of U. S. cavalry participate. The scenery is magnificent, the details finely arranged and the acting and direction always capable.

PROGRAM READER

Harry Carey in his greatest picture is coming next ————. Come early—avoid the rush. You will see the biggest Western of the year—one of the biggest Westerns ever made. You will see a terrific sandstorm, a great battle between hundreds of outlaws and a band of U. S. cavalry, a rush of throbbing action along the blazing Santa Fe Trail. You will see the star—the "he's human" star— in a hundred and one thrills. You will see reckless riding, great gun-play, extraordinary thrills, and a hundred absorbing episodes. So come and see "The Fox." The picture sensation of the year. Remember next ————.

CATCH LINES

Don't let "The Fox" get away from you. See Harry Carey in his greatest picture. It contains the thrills of a hundred pictures.

"THE SPEED GIRL"
(Realart)

In Smashing Light Comedy—Bebe Daniels Soars

THE story of Bebe Daniels, incorporating episodes of her own life, relying upon the recent one which claimed so much publicity (her arrest for speeding) for the idea. In it, Miss Daniels is at her best, supported by a splendid cast and worthy production.

It is a "speedy" vehicle for an attractive star, one able to give it the life, animation and vim that Miss Daniels personifies. Relates of the life of Betty Lee, a child born with the "speed mania" and permitted to cultivate it from the time she learned that an express wagon would run at full speed down a steep hill, until loop-the-loop stunts in a aeroplane were necessary to satisfy the cravings of the "speed girl."

Love affairs were the only things that did not go fast with Betty. She first loved a young ensign, who becomes a lieutenant in time, and who saved her from being thrown from the back of a runaway horse Betty had "speeded" into winning a race. To the officer she was staunch and true. until a young millionaire, whose attentions were previously unwelcome, plots to blacken the hero's reputation in the eyes of Betty, meantime become, rapidly, a motion picture star. Without realizing that her lover will be courtmartialed if he fails to reach San Diego in time to catch his seagoing vessel, Betty sets his watch back so that he misses a connecting train. When told the extent of her mischief she agrees to drive him to his destination, or overtake the train. Villain takes opportunity to get in some dirty work, notifies speed authorities, but Betty steps on the accelerator, leaving the motorcycle cops in the dust until she sees her wrong righted. She is arrested and sentenced to ten days in jail, where an unfortunate girl. the victim of the villain, is serving sentence for a crime of which she is innocent. The acquaintance of the two girls under adverse circumstances eventually straightens out a tangle which had almost drawn Betty into matrimony with the wrong fellow. There is considerable melodrama in the five reels of snappy entertainment, well directed and generally pleasing.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

She craved speed, did pretty Betty Lee, reckless heroine of "The Speed Girl," Bebe Daniels' latest Realart picture which opens at the ———— theatre next ————. She craved speed and she got it. This swiftly moving comedy-drama written specially for Miss Daniels' use by Elmer Harris, is a gentle satire on the modern mania for speed, and amusingly shows how young people develop a craze for swift locomotion. The little speed girl gets into the most thrilling complications, such as a race with a train, an exciting skid in an auto.

Miss Daniels ends her rapid adventure with what should have been a restful term in the county jail. But even there—things happen. The star is supported by a cast which fully meets the requirements of the action. Theodore Von Eltz is leading man, while Walter Hiers supplies his inimitable kind of comedy. The comedy has a touch and go which means zippy action throughout. It is keen and funny.

PROGRAM READER

Step on it! Give her some more of that gas! Oh baby! See us go! Watch our taillight! Oh baby, here we come, there we go! Folks, when you come to the ———— theatre next ———— you are going to see a zippy, snappy, fast, gingery comedy all about a little speed girl, who stepped into her auto, stepped on the throttle and found herself speeding beyond the limit. Oh boy how she flew! Did she get into trouble? Did the cops stop her? Did she land in jail? Did they take her car away from her? Was she as fast in romance and other lines of occupation? Oh boy, we'll say she was! So come and see the Realart comedienne, Bebe Daniels, in her very newest comedy-drama. See "The Speed Girl."

SUGGESTIONS

As this is the age of speed you can work up a deal of capital exploitation concerning the desire for speed by every means of locomotion. Men are running faster. Men are breaking records in autos, on foot, horseback, in locomotives, in areoplanes, and women, too. Play up that Bebe Daniels is the speed girl of the movies. Tell that her picture is breezy and flash through with plenty of dash and speed. Play up this story as ideal for the star—that it was written especially for her. Emphasize the value of speed to travel anywhere nowadays. Play up Walter Hiers as appearing in the cast. Put over a prologue in line with the theme. Run strips of auto races. Present an all comedy program.

CATCH LINES

See Bebe Daniels in "The Speed Girl." Oh, boy! How she did step on the gas!

times ahead. And so it goes. The situation at large is slowly on the mend. That is certain.

There is no question at all however but that the exhibitor today is, on the whole, considerably demoralized.

And naturally so.

The war situation is completely reversed. Where people formerly spent money regardlessly (some exhibitors must realize that it wasn't their showmanship that did it) they are now economizing and shopping. They haven't soured on pictures, they are not "bilious"; they will never turn from the picture entertainment so long as the admission is kept cheap. But they are no longer just drifting in through the doors. They are buying entertainment, making up their minds before they go in. And the big picture with the big advertising gets the money. So we hear, on all sides, that the big picture, even with a high rental price, is the only one that pays. The exhibitor, in his blind effort to make something pay, evidently overlooks the fact that a lot of other carefully chosen pictures would also pay if he put the same advertising force back of them.

In what we are about to say we are not criticizing the exhibitor. He has our sympathy, as has any business man these days; we'd appreciate some, ourselves. Nor are we overlooking the fact that some rental prices today are selfishly, blindly and outrageously high, and some exhibition values set on weak pictures are due solely to the other fellow's waste and war inflation and bad judgment generally.

But we do believe that the exhibitor today, many a one at least, is too slow to adjust himself to the new and evident order of things.

He is not looking the issue squarely and coolly in the face. He wants—naturally, of course—to cling to the days of an easy-spending public. He won't realize that this era is utterly gone, never to return; and that in its place there's the other extreme of the thin or the closed purse. He won't realize that today, as never before, two things are necessary, if he is to stay in business till the better days a year away; one is judicious economy, the other is extreme effort.

The writer recently asked a man high up in the New York commercial world what was mostly wrong with business today. He got the unexpected reply: "The trouble today is fundamentally with the retailer in all lines. He is stubbornly clinging to war conditions, war prices and volume and ease of trade. He will not deflate himself—get down to normal bedrock—put his shelves in order, and especially his own business mind, to fit the normal order of things. He won't go out and get it—get trade; he's still waiting for it to pour in."

The exhibitor is the motion picture retailer. Is he in this category?

We don't say he is. And if he is—he is not alone to blame, by a long shot. But we suggest the thought—for the benefit of the exhibitor himself and therefore the trade at large. What is it that the exhibitor can do today to "see it through"—through the present stiff business condition and into the better times that are assuredly ahead?

Dear Sirs:

Film producers are so criticised when they don't, that it appears only just that they should be commended when they do.

I have just seen the beginnings of your serial "Winning of The West." Are you backing the theories of some of our social philosophers, with your investment, or have you, too, tired of trappings, grease paints, and impossible artificiality?

As one interested in popular recreations in their social values, I personally must heartily approve, whatever your purpose, the effort to portray the romance of actual history. In your line, the departure from the accustomed trend of movie serials seems to me like Kipling's beginnings in poetry, or Pennell's in art. You have, it is true, inserted a heart or two, and one knows of course that they will beat as one before it ends, but perhaps that was force of habit. At all events, there is gripping interest in those pioneer days, and power in those pioneering men. There is romance in the actual. One must be glad that you have begun to exploit it.

For History, like other studies, needs vitalizing. It must become living, visible, to most of us, if we are to profit, as we should, from the past. No thrill is so deep as that which attends achievement. Make past achievement real to our youth, set them to thinking along achievement channels, cultivate in them an appetite for the sense of having accomplished things, and you have become an educational force.

Because I feel that you are on the proper trail, I can only say that if this picture succeeds it will serve you right.

Very truly yours,

V. K. Brown

Motion Picture News Says:—

"The Christie product continues to be clever, original, honestly funny, well directed and well acted. 'Falling for Fanny' was a splendid example of their high class work, and 'A Pair of Sexes' is a close, very close, second. It has a story by Sam Taylor, built up from a most amusing farcical idea; it has been directed by Frederic Sullivan in such a way that the very limit of fun is extracted from the high spots of the story; and it has such admirable comedy types as Neal Burns, Viora Daniel and Henry Murdock in its cast."

ALL THE NEWS OF ACTIVITIES IN THE TERRITORIES

CHARLES (Chic) SALE'S feature, His Nibs, will be State righted. This is official. Alexander Beyfuss, Vice President and General Manager of Exceptional Pictures Corporation, announced this fact last week. And to the State rights man this piece of news is, so to speak, sweet music. Chic Sales is more than an artist—he is an entertainer. There is a difference between the two. We know scores of artists whom we admire, but who do not entertain us. But an entertainer—he entertains. And every time we have seen "Chic" we have thought more of him.

His Nibs is good entertainment from whatever angle you look at it. Properly exploited it should make big money. And we are happy to read that Mr. Beyfuss already has negotiated for the use of space in The Saturday Evening Post and "fan" trade papers. Such men as Mr. Beyfuss and such firms as he heads are a blessing.

"Charles Sale has succeeded in contriving a charming novelty that is as clean as a hound's tooth, and as down-right funny as anything that has featured its way into our view for a long time."

By ARTHUR JAMES, Editor-in-chief.

"There is no difficulty in devising exploitation ideas for 'Chic' Sale in 'His Nibs.' . . . Although he has played mostly the 'big time,' he is as well known in most rural districts as President Harding."

By EPES WITHROP SARGENT, Exploitation Editor.

Altogether novel and very entertaining is "His Nibs," starring Charles (Chic) Sale, distributed by Exceptional Pictures Corporation. Here is a production that is entirely different from anything yet presented on the screen. It is a character comedy, or more correctly a multi-character comedy, as Chic Sale appears in seven distinct characterizations, each differing from the other and each one well done. His portrayal of "His Nibs" is one of the best characterizations ever seen on the screen.

By C. S. SEWELL.

The picture is fine. It is a distinct novelty very well handled and has many points of popular appeal."

By WM. A. JOHNSTON, President.

With each moment replete with real humor; really artistic characterization, and undisturbed continuity flow, a picture is bound to "get over." "His Nibs" in that class. Charles "Chic" Sale is the picture.

The exhibitor, small or big, country or city, is assured of a box office medium which may well be classed with "Down on the Farm" and "The Country Fair." To the wise exhibitor no more need be said. And, in addition to equal exploitation advantages, it is better entertainment than the two mentioned.

By GEORGE D. GOULD.

"'His Nibs' is entertainment, pure and simple. . . . 'His Nibs' is a play within a play. The idea on which the picture is built is novel and unique."

By J. S. DICKERSON, Exploitation Editor.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

This offering is a distinct novelty. It is a burlesque on the old time picture theatre on a country town and the trials and tribulations—all comical—of an exhibitor who is Jack of all trades in his theatre. The novel nature of the film is, of course, emphasized by the fact that the star plays practically the whole picture himself. There is comedy and plenty of it, and it is upon that the picture makes its bid for popularity.

Few pictures have ever contained such clearly indicated opportunities for showmanship and at comparatively little expense. Here is a chance for the exhibitor to try a real novelty on his patrons, and that is something which does not happen once in a blue moon.

By GEORGE T. PARDY.

EXHIBITORS HERALD

Here is something novel in the line of comedies with a popular stage comedian making a successful bid for even greater popularity through the medium of one of the most laughter-provoking pictures yet shown. In "His Nibs" Chic Sale not only proves his versatility as a comedian, but also shows that he is an artist of exceptional ability.

We have had close to an overplus of dual roles in pictures recently, but it remained for Chic Sale, long a favorite of the vaudeville stage, to give us a picture in which the star plays seven parts, and makes each character a distinct personage with an artistry that is little less than marvelous. "His Nibs" is in a class by itself.

All in all, the initial venture of Mr. Sale in pictures has provided a classic in comedy which will undoubtedly set a mark that even this gifted funmaker will be long in passing.

This is the acme of droll comedy, unique characterizations and rural types such as the cinema has never before presented. Charles Sale outshines all previous efforts of screen stars thru his picturization of seven distinct roles. Hats off to the producer of this most humorous film. The picture carries one hundred laughs.

This type of picture stands in a class by itself. There have been innumerable rural comedy dramas on screen and stage, but this clever comedian has gone one better and made "His Nibs" a classic of the celluloid. His impersonation of seven different types has not been surpassed in my recollection.

Such a picture is worth the highest praise and we are confident that the public will not be slow to express its appreciation

Dear Mr. Moyer;

We all love praise. So it was with a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction that I stood, nightly, in our lobby and hears the compliments and enthusiastic praise from our patrons who had just witnessed the performance of George Arliss in "Disraeli". "Give us more of this kind of pictures"; "a finished production"; "Arliss is perfect"; and so on.

The box office, however, is always the real test of any attraction and I must say "Disraeli" surely stood that test. Had a big opening Saturday and Sunday and the picture built every day. On Friday, the last day, we had a line out until after 10 p.m. waiting to get in.

Yours sincerely,

William A. Johnston, editor of the Motion Picture News, says:

"We offer our sincere congratulations to Inspiration Pictures, Mr. Richard Barthelmess, Henry King, director, Henry Cronjager, photographer, and to all those who were engaged in the making of what, in the writer's opinion, is one of the very best results of perfect co-ordination in picture making and one of the finest pieces of photographic realism ever put on the screen."

The Exhibitor's Herald says:

"A notable achievement. An intensely interesting and well developed drama worthy of the most profuse praise. In direction, subtitling, good acting and careful attention to detail it stands out as a superb piece of cinema craftsmanship. Seldom has so forceful and direct appeal to the heart been so effectively presented. It will stir the most jaded picture devotee to unusual depths. Andrew J. Cobe, Manager of the Central Theatre, on Broadway, New York, now playing "Molly O" says:

"'Molly O' a tremendous success. I consider it a greater box office picture even than 'Mickey.' The big crowds at the Central Theatre were delighted. It has humor, pathos, thrills and dramatic appeal. One picture in a thousand. The Exhibitor who wants an exceptional picture that appeals to all Classes should get 'Molly O' quick."

Sam Katz, of Balaban and Katz, owners of the Tivoli, Riviera, and a circuit of the largest theatres in Chicago, says:

"'Molly O' a great success. No picture this year has satisfied our audiences as it did. Chicago newspaper critics enthusiastic. BOX OFFICE RECEIPTS PROVE audience satisfaction. Melodramatic finish gives life to beautiful story."—

James P. Dunlevy, Strand Theatre, Akron, Ohio, wires:

"'Molly O' opened today to best business in months. It's splendid. Our patrons unite in praising it as Mabel Normand's very best picture, bar none. Congratulations to Mack Sennett."

Edward Grossman, Denver, says:

"From the first flash 'til the final fade out, you know you are sitting in on 'picture history.' It combines all the elements that appeal to every class—a happy combination that causes traffic congestion. You thrill, you laugh, you cry and you want to see it again. That's 'Molly O.'"

"Seeing It Through"—(A Prize Contest)

MOTION PICTURE NEWS offers 12 prizes—First Prize $100.00, Second Prize $50.00 and 10 prizes of $5.00 each—for the twelve best 500 word articles from exhibitors on the general subject of how to make a theatre pay under present business conditions.

Read the following editorial, and then read the further specifications of the offer.

The subject of our editorial last week was "Seeing It Through."

Briefly, we said this: we have not editorialized upon present and future trade conditions, in particular we have avoided empty optimism because, first the whole situation was not of the best, and second because no general statement could be made to fit the widely varying conditions all over the country—

That business in general was on the mend, slowly but surely, looking to a return to normal and healthy conditions by the Fall of 1922—

That in the meantime it was up to producer, distributor and exhibitor to "see it through"—through the present period of business reconstruction to the sound, normal basis several months ahead of us—and this by the exercise of sound economy and increased effort.

That the exhibitor at large—and this with no desire to pick upon him or to shield any other branch of the trade—was demoralized simply because he had not succeeded in adjusting himself and his business to the new basis of the American dollar, its new purchasing power for him and its spending inclination, so far as the public is concerned.

To illustrate:

An exhibitor came into our office last week. His theatre is in one of the industrial sections, first and hardest hit. His city, because of unemployment still, isn't much better off. We know of houses in similar situations which are losing money today. This exhibitor's profits are normal.

He started to put his business house in order last summer. He reduced his labor bill, his music bill, his rental bills. He cut the program trimmings. He showed us the savings effected, in figures, and the aggregate was large.

He didn't reduce advertising—he even increased it a little; but he revised it, selecting new mediums and new methods to reach new patrons. He didn't reduce admission prices, but he revised them for certain classes of seats, also to interest a new patronage.

And he is "seeing it through" with flying colors

He will contribute an article in this contest. Many exhibitors similarly situated with simiiarly sized houses will be vitally interested in its valuable facts.

We want articles from industrial, agricultural, mining and other sections, from city neighborhood and rural community houses, from large and small theatres—from all types of houses—so that houses similar to these types elsewhere may know how the other fellow is successfully "Seeing It Through."

Let the articles be boiled down—practical, definite, FACT stories. We suggest the limit of 500 words.

The leading point in many exhibitors' minds will be high rentals. That is a big question. This contest can do little to clear it up. The distributor and exhibitor must work it out together; some are. We suggest that this point be waived in the articles, simply so that the series may be made more useful, and immediately useful.

Let the articles confine themselves to what can be done to cut down house expenses and what extra effort and new ideas can be used to increase patronage.

To quote from last week's editorial: "What is it that the exhibitor can do today to 'See It Through'—see his business through the present stiff trade situation and safely into the better times that assuredly are ahead?" That is the general theme and purpose of the contest.

To recapitulate. Let the articles be kept down to 500 words. Give facts. Send to the Editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. If desired, names of contributors will not be published. In this case give general location of theatre and seating capacity, and send the writer's name in a sealed envelope. The contest will close December 20. A committee of impartial judges to be announced next week will make the awards.

VOL. XXIV DECEMBER 3, 1921 No. XXIV

Paramount Managers Are Guests of Company

Dinner at Commodore Closes New York Convention; Boston Office Leads in Competition

AS one of the closing features of the week's convention of Paramount district managers, officials of the company on Thursday night of last week entertained the visiting managers and home office department heads at a dinner in the Commodore Hotel.

Elek John Ludvigh, secretary and treasurer of the company, was toastmaster, and the speakers included Adolph Zukor, S. R. Kent, Thomas Meighan, H. G. Ballance and each of the district managers. Mr. Zukor discussed the present situation in the industry and the Paramount product, and Mr. Kent spoke on the distribution department's policies and plans for selling the big Paramount pictures which are to be released in the near future.

One of the principal features of the dinner was the reading of a telegram from Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president, bearing the greetings of the production department at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. After congratulating the assemblage upon the fact that the convention was the most memorable in the history of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. Lasky said in part:

"I have viewed a number of our pictures just completed and in the making and can sincerely say to you that each production shows advancement. Some months ago we purchased and produced 'The Sheik,' and I said it would prove a great box-office attraction. I believe we are beginning to see the fulfillment of that prophecy.

"Let me prophesy again and say that Cecil B. DeMille's "Saturday Night" will create new records; that Tom Meighan in 'If You Believe It, It's So" will achieve greater popularity than in any Meighan production that has preceded; that 'The Champion,' starring Wallace Reid, will prove itself a champion among box-office pictures; that Jack Holt in 'While Satan Sleeps' will prove a masterful, rugged, Western outdoor picture, superior even to 'The Call of the North;' that Penrhyn Stanlaws' production, 'The Little Minister,' will prove a real step forward, for here is truly a masterful production—one that will enhance the value of our trade mark and one to which we can point with pride.

"But, gentlemen, I have kept the best for the last. Just wait and hold your breath for the arrival of Gloria Swanson in 'The Husband's Trademark.' I have seen it and I know not only that we have surpassed 'The Great Moment,' but that we have one of the great pictures of the year. The big melodramatic finish in 'The Husband's Trademark' has all the thrill of the ice floe scene in 'Way Down East.' If ever a picture deserved the name of 'Special,' this is the one."

Announcement of the winning exchanges in the Paramount Week sales competition was made by the committee of judges at the home office at the close of the convention. In the distribution of the $6,000 in prizes, the following exchanges participated as follows: First prize, $1,500, Boston; second prize, $1,250, St. Louis; third prize, $1,000, Salt Lake City; fourth prize $750, Cincinnati; fifth prize, $750, Seattle; sixth prize, $750, San Francisco.

The prizes were awarded on a point system which made it impossible to forecast from week to week during the contest the probable winners, the basis of the system being as follows:

Sixty per cent. of the points were determined by the percentage increase of the exchange's net rentals for Paramount Week over the weekly average of its net rentals for the first twelve weeks of the calendar year.

Fifteen per cent. of the points were determined by the percentage increase of the exchange's net rentals for the week previous to Paramount Week over the weekly average of its net rentals for the first twelve weeks of this calendar year.

Fifteen per cent. of the points were determined by the percentage increase of the exchange's net rentals for the week subsequent to Paramount Week over the weekly average of its rentals for the first twelve weeks of this calendar year.

Ten per cent. of the points were determined by the percentage increase of the exchange's sales of accessories covering the period of four weeks ending with Paramount Week, over the weekly average of its accessories sales for the first twelve weeks of this calendar year.

The actual work of the convention, which had sessions each day last week, ended Friday night with a final meeting in Mr. Kent's office, and Saturday was spent in cleaning up details.

Sub-Franchise Holders Convene in Atlanta

Advisory Board Appointed to Deal with First National Home-Office on All Complaints

THE local get-together of the sub-franchise holders of First National held in the Hotel Ansley, Atlanta, Ga., Monday, November 14, rivaled the national meeting in Chicago for healthy enthusiasm and constructive achieveemnt. Sponsored by R. D. Craver, original franchise holder for this territory; C. R. Beacham, branch manager of the Atlanta exchange; and Willard C. Patterson, representative extraordinary of First National's field forces in the Southeast, the occasion proved one of the most significant in the history of the oragnization.

As regional chairman named by the southern delegation at Chicago to lead the sub-franchise holders of Georgia, Florida and Alabama in the local activities, Joe Burton of Toccoa proved a capable and enthusiastic presiding officer. After he had called the meeting to order he tendered the floor to R. D. Craver, who welcomed the sub-franchise holders, touching briefly upon the purpose of the meeting, and then traced the growth of the exhibito organization in this territory.

Called by the chairman to deliver the message of the Chicago meeting, Willard Patterson made a stirring address and won the endorsement of the local sub-franchise holders.

Other speakers were C. R. Beacham, branch manager of the Atlanta Exchange; B. H. Mooney of Mudd & Colley Amusement Company, Birmingham, Ala.; Sig Samuels of the Metropolitan and Criterion theatres, Atlanta, Ga.; Louis Kalbfield of the Grand theatre, Palatka, Fla.; Barney Beacham, Orlando, Fla.; and E. A. Schiller, sub-franchise holder in Athens, Ga., and Elberton, Ga.

The most important incident of the morning session was the appointment of an advisory board for this territory—a body authorized by the delegates to the national get-together in Chicago whose duty will be to function regularly on any differences arising between the sub-franchise holders and the exchanges, reporting their investigations to the home office with specific recommendations for action. To the important post of chairman of this board Sig Samuels was elected; the other members are R. D. Craver, Joe Burton, Louis Kalbfield, and B. H. Mooney. C. R. Beacham will serve on the committee in the capacity of secretary, giving the benefit of information at his command, but will not have voting power.

The first meeting of the newly formed advisory board was held in the afternoon following the adjournment of the general meeting, and henceforth the board will meet once a month in Atlanta at which time any complaints or grievances of sub-franchise holders in Georgia, Florida, and Alabama will be heard, investigated and reported with recommendations.

The only social event of the occasion was the luncheon given in the main dining room of the Ansley at half past one.

M. P. T. O. A. Attacks Associated First National

T. O. C. C. Adopt Condemnatory Resolution Following Walker's Address in Behalf of M.P.T.O.A.

OFFICIALS of Associated First National Pictures were expected to appear last Tuesday at the regular weekly luncheon of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce in New York. The meeting was fully attended by the members of the T. O. C. C. and the entire trade press were represented. No official, however, from Associated First National appeared.

Prominent members present from the M. P. T. O. A., in addition to President Sydney S. Cohen and Senator James J. Walker, were W. A. True, Charles R. O'Reilly, John S. Evans, S. I. Berman, C. E. Whitehurst, A. J. Moeller.

The meeting was opened by William Brandt, president. Mr. Brandt stated that Mr. Charles C. Griffin, president of the Northern California Exhibitors' League and vice-president of the M. P. T. O. A. had suggested to him that the occasion be made an open forum for the settlement of all differences between Associated First National and the M. P. T. O. A. and that his suggestion had come to Mr. Griffin from J. D. Williams, general manager of Associated First National. Mr. Brandt then read a letter, dated November 8th, from J. D. Williams stating that the results of the Chicago get-together convention of Associated First National franchise holders had made the forum unnecessary and against the expressed wishes of the delegates present in Chicago. Mr. Williams raised the question in his letter as to whether or not the executive commitee of Associated First National had the power to accept such a meeting on behalf of the sub-franchise holders. On November 20th, Mr. Brandt stated, he was invited to meet with Messrs. Williams, Schwalbe and Mark of First National. At this meeting Mr. Brandt urged that the open forum be held as originally suggested by Mr. Williams, but he was then told that the officials could not be present. A second letter received November 21st, from Mr. Williams enclosed a resolution, passed in Chicago, that all investigations of Associated First National should be made by sub-franchise holders only and the letter stated that the execlutive committee will be glad to deal with any complaint received from any individual sub-franchise holder.

Mr. Brandt then spoke in praise of Sydney S. Cohen's effective work as president of the M. P. T. O. A. and introduced Mr. Cohen to the meeting.

Mr. Cohen spoke briefly of the work of the M. P. T. O. A. and referred to the fact that on the previous day, November 21st, the House had approved the repeal the report of the Conference Committee of the House and Senate. Mr. Cohen stated that this repeal was the result of the strenuous work done by the National League and the State units. He said that the efforts of the league now will be made against the admissions, seat and music taxes. He then referred to the complaints received against Associated First National and stated that these complaints came from some sub-franchise holders who were members of the M. P. T. O. A. and others from members of the M. P. T. O. A. in districts where there were no sub-franchise holders.

Mr. Cohen then introduced the league counsel, Senator James J. Walker. Senator Walker made his usual eloquent and witty address. He contrasted pointedly Adolph Zukor with J. D. Williams. The former, he stated, came willingly to the meeting and met the New York exhibitors face to face, after which he volunteered to meet the national delegates at Minneapolis. The action of Associated First National, he said, he could only construe as inspired by either contempt or fear. He then referred to a letter sent on November 18th by Mr. Griffin to Mr. Cohen. In this letter of Mr. Griffin's J. D. Williams made the following suggestions: that first of all a formal complaint be sent of the 5 per cent rental tax by ratifying to First National and that First National have time to prepare an answer. Mr. Williams suggested that a limited number of specific complaints be included, each of a different nature, and that these serve as a basis for discussion, each complaint to be submitted to the official in the organization best qualified to answer it; that furthermore, a regular program of procedure be arranged. Mr. Williams, he stated, had no desire to evade any issue brought up on such a definite program but he wanted each organization to be put squarely on record. Mr. Williams stated that he would like to have the trade press present. Future complaints, Mr. Williams suggested, he would gladly take up directly with Mr. Cohen personally. In his letter Mr. Griffin recommended that Mr. Williams' suggestion be followed out and that a meeting be held which would serve as a precedent for investigations to be made in the future of other concerns.

The general complaint against Associated First National, said Senator Walker, was that of high rental prices. He then referred to the Chicago get-together convention and what he styled the "seven" confessions. The convention, he said, was divided into seven districts and the complaints received from each one held strictly within the meeting of the delegates of that particular district so that no complaints from any one district reached the delegates of any other. Senator Walker stated that he understood that all these complaints were to be settled by an advisory board, but that in his opinion these advisory boards had not heard from the complaints submitted in Chicago. He insinuated that the complaints had been buried.

Senator Walker then attacked the franchise contract. In his honest opinion, he stated, every sub-franchise holder signed away everything except his wife and his right to salvation; that these franchises were sold by instilling a fear of monopoly in the exhibitor's mind; that considerable juggling was done to get top prices. The exhibitor, he said, bought the franchise as protection and got a menace instead. He had only gone over the franchise agreement, he said, within the last week. In his opinion it was inequitable; that there was a lack of mutuality throughout because by the agreement the exhibitor must act whereas, the company may or may not act. Senator Walker then took up the contract clauses numbers 3 and 4 and made specific criticisms.

Certain preferred pictures had been used, he stated, to sell sub-franchise contracts and these pictures were later with-

Lieber Replies

IT would seem from the phone calls coming into our offices from the trade press regarding the meeting held yesterday by the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, in which Senator Walker made an oratorical attack upon this company, that a statement by us has become necessary.

This company has held, and still holds, that its relation with its franchise holders is a matter of individual action between them and ourselves. We have a full realization of the seriousness of this obligation and we shall continue to handle any complaints properly presented to us, with the full measure of consideration that they deserve. This position, originally expounded by the Executive officers, was unanimously upheld by the delegate meeting of our franchise holders in Chicago. As far as we are concerned, we consider this phase of the matter a closed incident, as far as a public discussion goes.

We do wish to make the statement here and now that sooner or later, everyone connected with this industry—whether exhibitor organizations, trade papers, distributor and producing organizations, or other component parts—will realize that the business as a whole is not to be helped by destructive measures and destructive tactics that some men find as their only stock in trade.

"The Light in the Clearing" Has Premier

An earnest burst of applause followed the initial showing of the latest Hodkinson "Selective" motion picture, T. Hayes Hunter's production of "The Light in the Clearing." It must have been gratifying to the Hodkinson officials present, for it definitely intimated the success they hoped for since the audience was an ensemble of not only people identified with the motion picture industry, but numbers who are not.

There was no special presentation other than a prelusory reading, which was a welcome relief from the superfluous forerunners one is often obliged to sit through, while eagerly awaiting the screening, the object of attendance.

Judging from the enthusiasm with which the picture was acclaimed a success, it is scheduled for the prosperous future anticipated when Irving Bacheler's popular novel was secured for a photoplay. That the photography is an example of the perfection of such an art, was the unanimous opinion.

Aeolian Hall was packed to the doors with enthusiastic admirers of the author, the worth while photoplay and of T. Hayes Hunter, who has accentuated his success made prominent by his justly lauded "Earthbound."

New Producing Company Is Announced in Baltimore

Announcement has been made in Baltimore by Charles E. Whitehurst, owner of a chain of large motion-picture theatres in that city, including the new Century, that he is about to enter the film production business with other associates.

Frank Keeney, owner of vaudeville and motion picture houses in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and Milton Hershfeld of New York, were two of the prospective associates in the producing end named by Mr. Whitehurst.

Eleven First Nat'l "Get-Togethers" This Month

THE series of local "get togethers" which were planned to follow the national "get together" of Associated First National franchise holders in Chicago last month, is rapidly materializing. Eleven meetings have been already held or will be held before the end of November.

The schedule of local "get togethers" up to date is as follows: Eastern Pennsylvania, November 2; New Jersey, November 10; Atlanta, November 14; Minneapolis, November 15 and 16; Cincinnati, November 17 and 18; Oklahoma City, November 21; Pittsburgh, November 22; Portland, November 22; Charlotte, November 29; Detroit, November 30; New York, November 29 and 30; Louisville, December 5 and 6.

The First National "get together" meeting for Kentucky and Tennessee will be held in Louisville, December 5 and 6. From 150 to 200 franchise holders of the two states will be in Louisville on those dates, it is expected.

Report to U. S. Committee on Americanism Work

A REPORT showing the activities of the motion picture industry in fostering Americanism was presented in Washington on Friday, November 18, to Senator William S. Kenyon and Congressman Simon D. Fess, Chairman of the Joint Committee of Education of the United States Senate and House of Representatives.

The presentation was made by Colonel Arthur Woods, chairman of the Americanism Committee of the Motion Picture Industry. This committee came into existence at the request of the late Secretary of the Interior, Franklin K. Lane, and the Joint Committee on Education of the Senate and House of Representatives in January, 1920. Members of the committee in addition to Colonel Woods are William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; J. Hampton Moore, mayor of Philadelphia; Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Lewis J. Selznick, president of the Selznick Corporation, and Harry M. Crandall, president of the H. M. Crandall Enterprises, Washington, D. C.

The report recites briefly the accomplishments of the industry in spreading Americanism propaganda, both by making and distributing Americanism pictures and in co-operating with patriotic societies in the preparing of special motion picture programs for schools, churches, colleges, welfare societies and in many instances, outdoor parks and playgrounds.

Loew Theatre in Brooklyn Opened by Mayor Hylan

On Monday night, November 21, Loew's Gates Avenue theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., opened its doors to the public, Mayor John Hylan of New York was the guest of honor and also the principal speaker.

The new Marcus Loew house has a seating capacity of 3,000. It will run Loew vaudeville and pictures, changing the bill twice a week. William Sheehey is house manager.

Borough President Riegelman and Nicholas Schenk, general manager of the Loew Circuit, were the other speakers of the evening. The house was elaborately decorated, and every seat was occupied.

A detailed description of the new house will appear in the New Theatre section of the NEWS in a few weeks.

Early Xmas Mailing to Be Urged by News Reels

The motion-picture screen will play an important part in seeking to avoid the last-hour-rush of Christmas parcels through the mails. All the news-reel companies are cooperating with the Post Office Department in its appeal to the public to do their Christmas shopping early and to mail packages as far as possible in advance of December 25th.

Censors Condemn Print of Subject Already Passed

The moving-picture men of Montreal, Quebec, are having a great laugh at the expense of the Quebec Board of Moving Picture Censors over a knot which the Quebec censors have tangled for themselves over the "Birth of a Nation." The Griffith special is still going strong in Canada so the Monarch Film Company, an Allen organization, decided to make use of an entirely fresh print of the picture for theaters in Quebec. The film was sent to the office of the Quebec censors at Montreal with the surprising result that it was condemned. The astonishing situation then obtained that there were both approved and condemned prints of the same feature in the one city simultaneously. At the exchange there was the older print of "Birth of a Nation" with the official approval of the Quebec Board of Moving Picture Censors attached while the fresh print, which was identical in every respect, it is declared, drew forth the official banning by the Quebec board. The reason given for the condemnation by the Quebec board was simply, "Immoral, and race prejudice."

In commenting on this decision of the Quebec Board, the Montreal Daily Star declared editorially: "Could anything more stupid, farther removed from the truth, more puerile and inane be imagined? Instead of intelligent criticism, we have fatuous pretense. Instead of sane judgment, we have the crass, insensate action of the bigot and ignoramus. The public are simply being fooled by a tyrannical body of nincompoops, whose fitness for their job is on a parallel with that of an elephant to paint a miniature. Let us have a change. Nothing could be worse. Bedlam in all its glory never achieved anything so triumphantly crazy as this condemnation."

Cosmopolitan Dines Paramount Managers

Cosmopolitan Productions gave a dinner at the Hotel Astor the night of Tuesday, November 15, to the Paramount District and branch managers in attendance at their annual convention. Among those present were: S. F. Kent, E. E. Shauer, Jerome Beatty, Herbert Elder, Melville Shauer, Gerald Akers, Harry C. Ballance, Claud Saunders, Frank V. Chamberlain, Henry Salsbury, Oscar Morgan, J. D. Clark, C. C. Wallace, W. E. Smith, Harry Danto, Harry Swift, H. A. Ross, M. W. Kempner, Allan S. Moritz, F. F. Creswell, H. W. Given, Philip Reisman, R. C. LiBeau, Louis Marcus, George W. Weeks, Herman Wobber, George J. Schaefer, and L. L. Dent of Famous Players, and H. P. Carver, James F. Sayles, Hal Hodes, Creighton Tevlin and L. A. Pollock of Cosmopolitan Productions.

After dinner the guests were taken to the Casino theatre to see "Tangerine."

Former Warren Organization to Be Known as "Wid Gunning, Inc."

R.E.Welsh Explains Reason for Change; Announces Gunning's Policies

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week by Wid Gunning that the name of the organization which he originally launched as the "F. B. Warren Corporation" is being changed to that of "Wid Gunning, Incorporated." The official statement does not come as any great surprise. For several weeks exhibitors and film men everywhere have come to refer to the corporation as the "Wid Gunning organization," and to discuss its activities largely in connection with the personality of Mr. Gunning and his years of film service as sales executive, editor and publisher, producer, and inspiration of distributing progress toward the end of more direct relations between the creator and the exhibitor of pictures.

In issuing the announcement of a change in title Mr. Gunning made it clear that the sole purpose of placing his name over the organization which he established several months ago was to clarify the atmosphere and to register definitely the intent and purpose of his distributing corporation.

Robert E. Welsh, who became associated with the corporation after several years as managing editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, discussed the change of title and the company's policies following the announcement by Mr. Gunning that he had decided to place his name on the organization which represents his ideals in motion picture distribution. Mr. Welsh declared:

"Having originally financed the F. B. Warren Corporation, Mr. Gunning did not at that time announce his connection with the corporation because he had virtually retired from active work in the industry. And why not? The man whom thousands of exhibitors throughout the country knew familiarly as 'Wid' had found the happiest years of his life in association with George Loane Tucker on the production of 'The Miracle Man' and in subsequent collaboration with Lois Weber.

"He had established his family in California, enjoyed a beautiful home, and possessed the means wherewith to indulge a strong hobby for golf and still devote his major energies to the production ideals which had ben his goal since his earliest days in the motion picture industry.

"Everything which his heart desired was centered in California and the production of better pictures. The only fly in the ointment was the absence of an efficient, honest, independent market.

"It was only natural under these circumstances that he should proceed as he did. Having provided the financial sinews necessary for a distributing organization, he chose others to direct its destinies and allowed them the freest rein to carry out the policies which he had laid down.

"No guiding spirit of any film organization ever retired further into the background or ever allowed those representing him a wider or more untrammelled field of activity or greater opportunity for reward.

"Wid Gunning would be in California today had it not been for the fact that some two months ago he had forced on him the knowledge that events demanded his presence in New York. He came East in a hurry and looked carefully into the situation. He found it necessary to make the changes of personnel which have taken place in his organization and finally decided to go to work again and place his name over the corporation.

"Building upon the solid foundation of a field managerial force second to none in the industry, Mr. Gunning has brought around him a Home Office staff that is keyed to high speed and big accomplishment. One of the first steps was to place every branch manager on an out-and-out partnership basis by which he shares in every dollar he earns for the corporation. This policy of co-operation has been developed until today every man in the organization feels that he is part and parcel of it, both financially and otherwise.

"Instead of having all his eggs in one basket, Mr. Gunning now has thirty high-powered executives and many times as many subordinates who are rooting, working and fighting for Wid Gunning and Wid Gunning's distribution ideals. That this spirit isn't confined to any 'eight-hour shift' has proven one of the surprises of the year to New York film men who have discovered that they can call in the Wid Gunning offices from eight in the morning until mdinight and find any number of members of the home office staff still at their desks. Only faith in a leader could inspire that pace, and only a leader who exceeded that pace himself could create such faith."

While many people only know Wid Gunning as the most successful reviewer the industry has ever known, Wid, as a matter of fact, was one of the most successful advertising and sales managers in the industry long before most of the present day executives knew there was a film business.

Way back in the days when the three-reeler was more or less of a sensation, the American Eclair organization was turning out a series of Northwest Mounted Police subjects with J. W. Johnston and Barbara Tennant as stars, and Wid, who had previously been a theatre owner for several years in a small Ohio town, came into New York as advertising and sales manager for the American Eclair organization. assisted in the selling of the foreign Eclair product which was being handled in this country on a state right basis.

In those days, Wid established himself with the exhibitors through the country by means of a house organ called the "Eclair Bulletin" and every old timer remembers the direct contact established by Wid's editorials written under the name of "Me, the Publicity Man."

That was long before the days of Paramount, Metro, Selznick, Goldwyn, First National and other present day organizations. Wid, for Eclair, whose product was sold through Universal exchanges, more than doubled the sales of the organization by creating an exhibitor demand which forced Universal to buy more than double their former order of Eclair prints.

At this time Wid laid down before the Eclair organization, which was in a similar position to the independent producer of today in that they need an independent market, a plan for the formation of a distributing machine which would bring a direct contact between the producer and the exhibitor. The Warner Brothers, Abe and Harry, were conducting a series of state right exchanges known as "Warner's Features." Wid approached them with the plan of providing a certain amount of independent product through Eclair and other independent producers and charted a method of procedure which, oddly enough, is exactly similar to that which he has finally done himself after having tried to get other people to do it through a period of many years.

The Eclair organization was unable to finance the negotiations begun by Mr. Gunning and a few weeks later L. J. Selznick, who was then a purchasing agent for Universal, heard of the plan, borrowed a few hundred dollars from P. A. Powers, organized a million dollar stock company and launched what was known as Warner's Features, Inc. This was Selznick's first start in the film business and, after pulling together, by the distribution of stock, the Eclair Company, P. A. Powers, who had some foreign and American products, and the Warner offices, the company known as "Warner's Features, Inc.," was launched.

Wid was then engaged as General Manager, and permitted to do all the work while Powers, Selznick held from the sub-franchise holders. He attacked exhibition values referring to the Anita Stewart, Katherine MacDonald and Buster Keaton pictures and also to the low purchase price of and high exhibition value placed upon "Passion" and "Gypsy Blood." He stated that the M. P. T. O. A. had a trunk-full of evidence and that no other company, including Famous Players, had had so many complaints lodged against it as against Associated First National. He felt, he said, that he owed an apology to Famous Players. He realized now that while he was touring the country several months ago exclaiming against Famous Players as a trust that he was unconsciously acting as an advance agent for Associated First National. Senator Walker recited a number of specific complaints.

At the conclusion of Senator Walker's address a resolution was presented by D. Edelhertz, condemning Associated First National, both for its treatment of sub-franchise members and for its failure to function as a cooperative exhibitors' organization. Louis Blumenthal presented an amendment to the effect that complaints from sub-franchise holders should be presented directly to Associated First National. This amendment was voted down and Edelhertz' amendment adopted. Its text is as follows:

WHEREAS, the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce has extended an invitation, both to the Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, and to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to appear at this public forum, for the purpose that each side might present its case in connection with the grievances that have been received from the sub-franchise holders of the First National Pictures, Inc., against said Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and

WHEREAS, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have appeared in accordance with said invitation, and have presented its case, through its counsel, Senator James J. Walker,

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that the evidence which has been presented here is of such a serious nature and character that it affects the entire film industry of this country, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce go on record, unequivocably and unalterably to condemn in their every phase the practices and methods employed by the said Associated First National Films, Inc., in connection with their dealings with sub-franchise holders, as well as with all the other exhibitors; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that this organization go on record as favoring a thorough investigation of the said methods employed by the said Associated First National Pictures, Inc., to the end that this organization shall employ all the powers at its command toward cleaning out said menaces from our industry.

A New Arrival

A baby boy, weight nine and a half pounds, joined the household of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Welsh early on the morning of November 21. Both mother and child are doing well.

Mr. Welsh, formerly managing editor of Motion Picture News, is now an executive of the Wid Gunning Corporation.

For Big and Small!

Enclosed please find money order for which please renew my subscription and put me on the list to receive the BOOKING GUIDE. This should prove to be the greatest thing for the small town exhibitor ever, as well as the big house. Best wishes and success.

Who Will Sell the World on Peace via Screen?

IN an open letter to American directors, Watterson R. Rothacker says that motion pictures can be a large factor in promulgating the Arms Limitation program proposed at the Disarmament Congress by Secretary Hughes.

"From an American statesman has come a proposal which may mean the starting point toward world peace," writes Mr. Rothacker. "From an American motion picture director cannot there come a wonder picture that will make world peace a fact?

"Diplomats alone cannot bring about limitation of armaments, because there will always be certain interests capable of thwarting diplomats. Only the peoples of the earth can limit the size and the uses of armed forces.

"World peace will become a reality only when the world's people demand it. The peoples of the earth, acting collectively, can have any earthly thing they demand.

"The universal language of pictures is the only language through which the different peoples can be addressed collectively. Is there not in America a motion picture director who has the genius to use this universal language to sell the world on the idea of world peace—to sell the idea to the extent that the world's peoples will demand universal peace.

"No mere propaganda picture can do it. The picture will have to be far greater than any thus far produced. What an inspiration this opportunity should be to American picture directors."

Kann Heads Foreign Sales Dept. for Goldwyn

George E. Kann, who has occupied a prominent place in motion picture affairs since 1913 and is a leading authority on the foreign market, has been engaged as foreign sales manager of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, to assume office January 1, 1922.

Franchise Holders Meet

Wilard Patterson presided as toast master and gracefully carried the honors of the occasion. Responding to his call, Mayor Key welcomed the gathering to Atlanta. Following the mayor's brief address, James B. Nevin, editor of the Atlanta Georgian, made a short speech. Mr. Nevin attended as the personal representative of Governor Hardwick, who was unable to be present because of illness.

The sub-franchise holders who attended the Atlanta get-together included:

L. S. Drum, Atlanta Exchange; M. M. Flemister, Colonial theatre, Milledegville, Ga.; W. C. Patterson, Atlanta, Ga.: H. G. Cope, Opera House, Cartersville, Ga.; W. A. Sanges, Atlanta Exchange; B. H. Mooney, Mudd & Colley Amusement Co., Birmingham, Ala.; C. R. Beacham, Branch Manager, Atlanta Exchange; Teddy Schull, Atlanta Exchange; J. B. Wilbanks, Salesman, Atlanta Exchange; Joe Burton, Star theatre, Toccoa, Ga.; J. C. H. Wink, Manning & Wink, Marietta, Ga. and Dalton, Ga.; R. D. Craver, Broadway theatre, Charlotte, N. C.; A. H. Paxson, Valdosta Amusement Co, Valdosta; C. F. Jones, Atlanta Exchange; W. F. Gann, Atlanta Exchange; J. E. Turner, Atlanta Exchange; Harry Nonnemacher, Si-Non theatre, Demopolis, Ala.; Emory Rylander, Americus, Ga.; A. H. McCarth, Barnesville, Ga.; John Evins, Odeon theatre, Savannah, Ga.; Max Bryant, Palmetto theatre, Rock Hill, S. C.; W. R. Liebmann, Atlanta Exchange; Louis Kalbfield, Grand theatre, Palatka, Fla., and Barney Beacham, Orlando, Fla.

and the Warner Brothers spent the next few months trying to decide who was to control the corporation.

Those who remember that far back recall the fact that Warner's features, which should have been one of the outstanding successes of the film industry, died an early death because there was too much question as to who was to be boss.

When it is recalled that Mr. Gunning was an advertising and sales manager, practically handling the entire business both of the Eclair Company and Warner's Features, in those early days and then afterwards spent five years as an editor analyzing the sales methods of every other corporation which means that he has watched each and every one develop and has seen many of them go down, it is easy to understand why he can attract to his present organization the best brains in the industry.

The men who are building this new organization under the Wid Gunning banner know that their chief has been through the mill and has proved himself, both as a producer and as a sales and advertising manager.

Exploiting is the most important element in the sales service of the Gunning organization. This is so because, after all, the film business is entirely centered around the selling of an idea. Over 80 per cent of the organization now being built by Mr. Gunning numbers exploitation men or salesmen who have had exploitation experience. Full attention is to be given to active and complete cooperation with exhibitors and each production distributed is to be given a distinctive and definite treatment properly geared to that individual type of production.

As part of the announcement on the change of name there appeared this definite, concrete statement of policy: "The Wid Gunning organization will sell and exploit any productions worthy of its efforts forming a direct, efficient service contact between the producer and the exhibitor."

City Officials, Producers, Stars, to Attend Ball

Well, everything seems to be set for the second annual ball of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York. The function wil be held in the Gold Room of the Hotel Astor, New York, on Saturday night, December 3rd. All the city officials and many film celebrities, including prominent producers and stars at present in the East, have been invited, and most of them have already expressed their determination to be present. A cable received at the United Artists office states that Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford expect to arrive in New York in time to attend.

Louis Fisher's orchestra and Ted Lewis' dance orchestra have been signed for the occasion.

"Tol'able David"

A MUSICLESS, projection room screening of "Tol'able David," Richard Barthelmess' picture produced by Inspiration Pictures for First National release, convinces of two things—first, that Dick Barthelmess can be among the most likable screen personalities with or without Griffith supervision, and second, that one of the most enjoyable, powerful, yet simply-made features of the year has reached the screen.

"Tol'able David" is adapted from a short story by Joseph Hergesheimer. To say that the picture is as fine as this fiction master's work, is saying a whole lot, yet we can say it, shout it, and roar it, with all sincerity. It is a production with the right kind of foundation—a human, powerful, convincing story, laid in a picturesque locale, developed in fitting atmosphere, rich in characterizations that ring true. To this foundation is added the star (you know his worth), a capable cast, good direction, and fine rugged exteriors. There are no cabaret scenes, sinking ships, or race track scenes. It is all story.

A detailed review of the feature will appear in next week's issue of the Motion Picture News.—Matthew A. Taylor.

Pathe Bond Issue Rapidly Bought Up by Investing Public

Last $750,000 Sold in Less Than Two Weeks; Brunet Issues Statement

THE bond issue recently made by Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been completely absorbed by the American investing public, according to advices from the home office of the Pathe organization. Paul Brunet, president of Pathe, in a statement issued during the week, declared that the entire issue had been purchased and that the last $750,000 had been disposed of in less than two weeks. The bond issue was made through Merrill, Lynch & Co.

In making this announcement Mr. Brunet reflected Pathe's confidence in the present, as well as in the future. With quick assets of more than 385 per cent. of its total liabilities, Pathe Exchange, Inc., never was in a more favorable financial position, declares Mr. Brunet. It is absolutely unfettered by contracts made during the war boom period for high priced productions and with high priced stars, he explains. Now, with conditions generally slowly improving, Pathe conservatism, it is pointed out, has placed the company in a very enviable position, ready to meet the demand for any product desired by the public as indicated by the exhibitor.

While conditions show a turn for the better, which naturally will bring bigger returns to the box offices of America's exhibitors, Mr. Brunet cites that lowered admission prices are absolutely essential before a complete recovery will be experienced by the exhibitors of the country.

Many millions of dollars in theatre operating costs aside from film rentals; which have already been greatly reduced, according to government tax reports, must be eliminated, Mr. Brunet says, before the public can benefit by smaller admission prices.

The Pathe head scorns the belief that the American public is losing interest in the silent drama. In fact, he says, the cinema has more potential followers today than ever before, but hundreds of thousands of these people can only be brought back to the theatre by admission prices that will be in accord with their diminished pocketbooks.

Mr. Brunet in his statement said:

"Pathe is very proud of its present financial condition. Its quck assets are now more than 385 per cent. of its total liabilities.

"Even before the beginning of the period of business depression, we employed extreme conservatism in that we refrained from making long-term producer contracts for elaborate and expensive features, until today we stand in the position of having no embarrassing contracts of that kind. Thus our contingent liabilities are practically negligible.

Paul Brunet, President of Pathe

"Being thus unfettered, we surely are in the best financial position imaginable for adjusting our future output in strict keeping with the demands of the exhibitor.

"Not only this, but contracts for big stars and producers during these times certainly should be written at figures that are very much different than the figures these same stars and producers would have been contracted for during the war boom period.

"Our financial affairs are in the best condition they ever have been, and we are most emphatically in position to make and carry out contracts for any product that our customers indicate their patrons demand.

"While we do not look for any tremendous betterment in general conditions, it is our opinion that the depression, so far as the exhibitor is concerned, has just about hit bottom and we are sure to witness a gradual improvement. That improvement will be more noticeable in localities where the exhibitor himself has taken drastic steps in so adjusting his operating costs as to enable him to establish an admission price within the buying power of his public.

"When I refer to exhibitors' operating costs, I do not refer alone to film rentals, because the government tax figures have already reflected a very considerable reduction in film rentals. Furthermore, even though film rentals, as a cost of operation, were removed entirely, it could not replace the loss of business many exhibitors have sustained during the last three or four months.

"There are today, however, theatre operating costs aggregating a couple of hundred million dollars annually that exhibitors did not find necessary a few years ago. It is the cost of such items which keeps up admission prices and which the average motion picture fan does not feel he can afford to pay for today, even though he is a more ardent picture enthusiast than ever before.

"The picture business always has been a gigantic success because it was so well within the means of the poor people, and even the poor people could afford admission prices of twenty-five and fifty cents during the boom period of 1918, 1919 and early 1920. But they cannot afford those prices today and if we include in our patronage those multitudes we must keep our admission prices within their buying power, with the result that instead of staying away entirely, as many of them do now, they will come to the motion picture theatre as often as ever before."

Warns Blue Law Menace Is an Imminent One

DECLARING that the danger of Blue-Laws being enacted was an imminent one in view of the fact that legislation of this kind is now actually on the calendars in such states as Alabama, Tennessee and Missouri, awaiting action by the legislation bodies of these states in January, F. C. Dally, secretary of the Anti-Blue Laws League, Inc., appeared before the members of the A. M. P. A. at the association's weekly luncheon at the Cafe Boulevard, New York, on Thursday of last week, and made an urgent plea for more effective organized resistance to the Blue-Law movement.

He warned that the Blue-Law menace could not be overestimated and declared that the most effective way to beat proposed legislation of this character was to prove to legislators that the opposition to these measures represented votes—and votes in their own constituencies. To represent the industry as antagonistic to such bills is too often futile, declared the speaker. The reformers are careful to show that they have behind them a certain number of votes, and that's what the opposition must do. "You've got to be able to show the legislators that you represent not a mere impalpable industry, as far as votes are concerned, but votes and more votes. You've got to organize just as the Blue-Law folk are organized—only better."

LATE PRODUCER NEWS OF THE WEEK

Goldwyn Prints Available

Last of Second Group of Fifth Year Releases Ready for Showing

GOLDWYN announces that prints of the last of its second group of releases in its fifth year product are now in the twenty-two exchanges and that exhibitors may see the entire series at any branch exchange.

Heading the second group of releases is "Poverty of Riches," written by Leroy Scott and directed by Reginald Barker. The cast includes Leatrice Joy, Richard Dix, Louise Lovely, John Bowers, Irene Rich and others.

Katherine Newlin Burt's big new adventure photoplay is "The Man from Lost River." Frank Lloyd directed it, and the leading roles are acted by House Peters, Fritzi Brunette and Allan Forrest.

Will Rogers is seen in a humorous role as the old inventor, Noah Vale, in Edward E. Kidder's old comedy, "A Poor Relation." In the supporting cast are Sylvia Breamer, Sydney Ainsworth, Molly Malone, Wallace MacDonald and others. Clarence Badger directed.

Rita Weiman's drama of life behind the scenes on the New York stage is picturized in "The Grim Comedian." Frank Lloyd directed. In the cast are Phoebe Hunt, Jack Holt, John Harron, Joseph J. Dowling, Gloria Hope and others.

Rupert Hughes is represented in this group of releases by a Tom Moore stellar vehicle, "From the Ground Up." Helene Chadwick plays opposite the star, while Hardee Kirkland, DeWitt C. Jennings and Darrell Foss have important roles. E. Mason Hopper directed it.

Leroy Scott has a second picture, a melodrama of underworld life, in the group. It is "The Night Rose," directed by Wallace Worsley and containing such prominent players as Lon Chaney, John Bowers, Cullen Landis, Leatrice Joy, Richard Tucker and Mary Warren.

Vivian Martin's latest Messmore Kendall production, "Pardon My French," from the story of "Polly in the Pantry," by Edward Childs Carpenter, is included. Sidney Olcott directed it.

Max Linder's new comedy, "Be My Wife," is another laugh riot in Goldwyn's second group of new pictures. In his support are Alta Allen, Caroline Rankin, Viora Daniels, Rose Dione, Lincoln Stedman and Charlie MacHugh.

Title of New Mermaid Changed to "Distress"

The title of the latest Educational Mermaid Comedy, originally called "The Panic's On," has been changed to "Distress." A preview of the picture was given at La Petite theatre, Ocean Park, a few nights ago, and according to reports from the coast to E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, it was very favorably received. The picture, which presents Lloyd "Ham" Hamilton in the role of a bill dodger, is the fourth of the new series of Mermaids starring Hamilton.

Ed. Le Saint Becomes a Realart Director

LATEST to be added to the directorial staff of Realart's West Coast studio is Edward Le Saint, veteran photoplay craftsman who has built an excellent record for himself through various associations with Imp, Universal, Famous Players-Lasky, Fox and Kinemacolor.

"Mr. Le Saint splendidly rounds out our list of directors," said Supervising Director Elmer Harris in announcing the appointment.

"He is thoroughly experienced and enjoys a wide reputation for the excellence of his dramatic conceptions. Combined with Thomas Heffron, Maurice Campbell, Frank Urson, Paul Powell, and William D. Taylor, Mr. Le Saint promises to aid in carrying the directorial achievements of Realart to even higher levels than they have yet achieved."

"Tol'able David," Joseph Hergesheimer's story adapted to the screen with Richard Barthelmess in the stellar role. To be released by First National

Lloyd's Biggest and Best

"A Sailor-Made Man," a Comedy Sensation, for Christmas Release

HAILED as one of the greatest productions ever made by any comedian, Associated Exhibitors have announced December 25 as the release date of Harold Lloyd's latest production, "A Sailor-Made Man."

In a statement issued by Associated Exhibitors it is declared that, not discounting the quality of Lloyd's previous productions or the tremendously successful offerings of all comedians, Harold Lloyd's "A Sailor-Made Man" ranks with the greatest box-office comedies the screen has ever seen. This statement is made without reservation, and reflects the opinion of an organization with years of experience in selling comedies and in watching with keen perception the varying trends of public taste. "A Sailor-Made Man" is in four reels, which, in itself, is an indication of its bigness. It was produced by Hal Roach, from a story which is the combined efforts of three of the most successful writers of comedy scripts, Hal Roach, Sam Taylor and Jean Havez. It was directed by Fred Newmeyer.

The release date has been set for December 25 with the idea of providing the exhibitors with an attraction for the holiday trade, which will produce capacity business. Associated Exhibitors state that extended runs in the biggest first run theatres of the country will be a rule rather than an exception. "A Sailor-Made Man" will be sold as a feature and the exhibitors must make it the big attraction on their programs.

In brief, the story shows Harold Lloyd as a very much bored young millionaire in love with a girl. Her father, likewise a man of many millions demands that the youth go to work and prove his worth, so Harold up and joins the United States Navy, as a plain every-day "gob." His experience with the recruiting officers and in being subjected to the usual treatment of a recruit provides a succession of side splitting situations and continuous laughter. When next he meets the girl, he is a full-fledged sailor man on shore leave in a fictitious island of the colorful and alluring South Seas.

The titles were done by H. W. Walker and are distinctly clever and humorous. According to the main title, the cast is Harold Lloyd as the Boy, Mildred Davis as the Girl, Noah Young as the Rowdy Element and Dick Sutherland as the Maharajah.

Stage Favorite Will Support Miss DuPont

Universal has engaged Edwin Stevans, notable for his impersonations of the Devil as well as for his past success on Broadway, to play an important part in "The Golden Gallows" starring Miss du Pont under the direction of Paul Scardon.

A moment in "The Power Within," offered by Pathe. The players are Pauline Garon and Robert Kenyon

"Sin of Martha Queed" Booked by Loew

Allan Dwan's "The Sin of Martha' Queed," released as an Associated Exhibitors attraction, has been booked by a very representative list of theatres, announced the distributors of New Orleans, Rialto, Louisville, Ky., and the Central of Jersey City, are typical of the houses which are showing "The Sin of Martha Queed" throughout the country.

The feature was released by Associated Exhibitors on November 6th as an Allan Dwan production. The cast includes Mary Thurman, Niles Welch, Eugenie Besserer, Jos. Dowling and Frank Campeau.

Frances Marion Directs Husband in Picture

There have been made instances in motion pictures in husbands directing their own wives in productions but it remained for Cosmopolitan Productions, in "Just Around the Corner," to offer an example of a wife directing a husband. Frances Marion, scenario writer and director, wielded the megaphone on this production. In the cast, playing the part of The Real Man is her husband, Fred C. Thomson. "Just Around the Corner" is soon to be released by Paramount.

RothackerDevelopment Aids Film's Success

Stating that the success of his picture, "Partners of the Sunset," is partly due to the developing and printing of the negative, Bert Lubin, has expressed his appreciation to the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company. "There is so much hurried and mediocre work done in this industry that the organization which turns out the quality product is to be commended for their forsight and integrity in reflecting their ideals in the finished film.

Leigh Wyant Story for Realart Production

It has just been announced by Realart that a story has been purchased for early production which was written by Leigh Wyant. The author-actress, though having been connected with the screen for a short time, has attained considerable prominence. As "Beauty" in "Experience," she became widely known, later appearing in a leading role in "Fair and Warmer."

Fred Windemier Added to Mermaid Staff

Fred Windemier, who is well known for his work in directing many popular comedy stars, including Hank Mann, Mack Swain and others, is the newest addition to the big production staff making Mermaid Comedies for Educational. While Bob Kerr is directing scenes in the latest all-star Mermaid in which Lige Conley appears, Windemier is working at a different location on scenes in which Conley does not appear.

Hoot Gibson, Francis Ford and J. M. McDowell appearing in the Universal Western comedy drama, "Action"

Special Holiday Pictures

National Screen Service Prepares Photoplaylets for Holiday Bills

THE National Screen Service, Inc., announces two specially prepared photoplaylets for use in motion-picture theatres during the approaching holiday season. The idea underlying the preparation of these two subjects is to give the exhibitor an opportunity of extending in an impressive and artistic manner his Christmas and New Year's greetings to his patrons. This has been done before, explains National Screen Service, but usually in a mechanical and inartistic fashion. The crude methods of expressing holiday greetings often resorted to by the motion-picture theatre contrasted unfavorably with the rest of the film program, says National Screen Service, but with this new service the exhibitor will be enabled to greet his audiences in a truly holiday spirit and at the same time enhance the artistic and entertaining values of his program.

The Christmas photoplaylet has been produced under the direction of Edmund Lawrence. It is said to contain all the joyous spirit of Christmas and to be equally entertaining for young and old. W. G. Otten appears in the role of Santa Claus, while Muriel Hahn and Rita Rogan appear in important child parts. This holiday trailer, it is stated, has remarkably beautiful photography as well as a strong appeal for the public. It is declared to represent the Christmas spirit in a manner befitting it.

The New Year's photoplaylet, which is independent of the Christmas subject, was also prepared under the direction of Mr. Lawrence. It presents in symbolical fashion the going out of the cold year and the advent of the New Year with its promise of Peace and Plenty. It is said to have a distinct relation to the International Conference now in session in Washington. Gustave Beuerman portrays the part of Father Time. The role of Peace is played by Lucille Lennox. The general idea and the marvellously fine photographic effects are said to be decidedly novel and impressive.

Rare Locales Brought Here

Paramount Films Done Abroad Have Highly Interesting Backgrounds

WHEN Adolph Zukor first announced the organization of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., for the production of Paramount pictures in Europe, he laid emphasis upon the fact that it was intended to make full use of the rarely beautiful scenery and places of historic interest in various sections of Great Britain and the Continent.

The full fruition of this policy is now being realized. In his production of "Three Live Ghosts," recently completed, George Fitzmaurice was enabled to show London as it really is. In scenes representing the Limehouse District, it was simply necessary to take his company straight to Limehouses and film it as it actually exists.

Now Fitzmaurice is producing Booth Tarkington's "The Man from Home," and it is announced that all the exterior scenes will be made at their original locations. This entails a visit to Rome, Naples, Sorrento and Capri. The picture will accordingly show some rare Italian scenery as background for a production made according to American standards of a true American production genius.

Children's Institute Lauds "Fauntleroy"

Mary Pickford's "Little Lord Fauntleroy," a United Artists release, has won the stamp of approval of the Illinois Institute for Juvenile Research. Following a showing of the picture at the Randolph theatre, Chicago, to a group of children from the public welfare department of the Institute, the head of the Social Service Branch wrote the theatre management:

"From an ethical and aesthetic standpoint it was a great relief to us to know the children were getting the clean, wholesome amusement and entertainment which the picture affords."

Pathe News Delights Marshal Foch

Marshal Foch's compliments have been transmitted to Emanuel Cohen, editor of Pathe News. The occasion which inspired this courtesy was the banquet at Cleveland to the Marshal, during the progress of which the Pathe News motion picture report of the scenes of Cleveland's public reception the same day was screened,. At the conclusion of the showing, Marshal Foch stated that he wished to send my compliments to the editor of Pathe News on account of the thoughtfulness and energy manifested in the showing of these pictures at the banquet.

Doris May to Continue in Light Comedy

The reception exhibitors are according Doris May in her first R-C starring production "The Foolish Age," reflects evidence of a demand for light entertainment, according to Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for R-C Pictures.

Having been so well received in farce comedy Miss May will probably continue to be featured in light vehicles with laughs the main objective. Such a production, according to advices from R-C's West Coast studios, will be her next picture, "Eden and Return," based on the popular stage success of several years ago.

"Musketeers" Breaks Records for Kunsky

That Douglas Fairbanks' "The Three Musketeers" has broken all box office records for motion pictures in any house he has ever operated is the declaration of John H Kunsky in a letter to Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists Corporation.

"I think you are justly entitled to know," wrote Mr. Kunsky to United Artists, "that 'The Three Musketeers' at the Adams Theatre, during the first week of its run, has broken all box office records for motion pictures in any house I have ever operated. I have been exhibiting extraordinary productions for several years in the City of Detroit and elsewhere but never in the history of our organization has a picture drawn the gross on its first week's run that I have received from this production."

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Ladies Must Live—
No good. Much too slow. Hard to follow the continuity. Nobody liked it. Poor business. (Middle West.)

Very far below the standard set by "The Miracle Man." An effort is made to present four or five parallel plots, with poor success. Betty Compson has no chance to act. Only an average picture, but good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Good picture but the business was rotten. (Middle West.)

Fairly good picture with fair business. (West.)

Enchantment
A beautifully staged production, also entertaining, but failed to attract more than average business. (East.)

Very nice picture and business good. (East.)

Under the Lash—
Only a fair picture. This was shown with Victor Herbert as an added feature and on this account the house did splendid business. (East.)

Don't Tell Everything—
Picture fell down. (Middle West.)

Cappy Ricks—
Fair. On the whole, patrons were disappointed. Didn't consider this a good vehicle for Meighan. Business fair. (East.)

Three Word Brand—
Just another Western. Business just fair. (East.)

The Sheik—
Regard this as one of the best audience pictures of the year. Big business compels us to hold it over for a second week's run. (Middle West.)

Experience—
High class feature which appealed strongly to intelligent audiences. Did good business. (Middle West.)

Miss Lula Bett—
Good entertainment in this feature. More business than usual. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Wonderful Thing—
Capacity business on this, and everybody seemed delighted. Considered by fans star's best picture in months. (East.)

Packed them in at every presentation. Picture well liked and star growing in popularity. (East.)

Picture very well received. Business very good on what otherwise would have been a dull week. (Middle West.)

Norma Talmadge is popular here and the picture played to a good attendance for a week's run. (Middle West.)

Bits of Life—
Held up exceptionally good for first half of week and was continued all week. Praised by patrons and press. (East.)

Fairly good entertainment and business was about the same. (West)

Playthings of Destiny—
Had good business and pleased audiences with this picture. (West.)

Molly O—
One of Mabel Normand's best, which made a hit with our audiences. Played to exceptionally good business. (Middle West.)

Salvation Nell—
Of a melodramatic type, this picture was pretty fair but badly placed and as a result, business was not so good. (East.)

Two Minutes to Go—
Fairly good feature. Business fair. (West.)

Her Social Value—
Better than the average Katherine MacDonald feature, and a fair box-office attraction. (Middle West.)

Woman's Place—
Mild and harmless. Not much of a drawing card. Business correspondingly weak. (Middle West.)

One Arabian Night—
Good stuff—filled the houses. (East.)

FOX

Over the Hill—
The picture played to such large crowds the first week that it was held over for a second week and it is still drawing great. (Middle West.)

Played to 78,943 people in four weeks at 50c. price. Now on fifth week. (Middle West.)

Wonderful audience picture. Always a long box office line and this is the second week. (Middle West.)

Thunderclap—
Went across nicely despite adverse criticisms about being too stagey and not enough art. (East.)

To a Finish—
Good picture, fair business. (Middle West.)

Hicksville to Broadway—
A picture that gives general satisfaction. (Middle West.)

Lady From Longacre—
Picture and business both only fair. (East.)

REALART

The Little Clown—
Good business. Was especially recommended for children. (Middle West.)

Her Winning Way—
Received well, with pleasing receipts. (East.)

A Kiss in Time—
The title, more than any other factor, attracted a good attendance for the week. (Middle West.)

Everything for Sale—
Found this to be a good feature, with much entertainment, and good box office value. (West.)

SELZNICK

Handcuffs or Kisses—
All right for a thriller. Something doing all the time. But not a big enough picture to get the crowds these days of picture shopping. (Middle West.)

A Man's Home—
An excellent picture which played to good business. (Middle West.)

Remorseless Love—
Elaine Hammerstein seems to be winning friends in this city and business was surprisingly good for the half week run. (East.)

The Sin That Was His—
Good picture but business very poor. (Middle West.)

Worlds Apart—
Poor picture, took it off the bill early. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

The Grim Comedian—
Very interesting tale. Fair business. (Middle West.)

Fine production with good business. (West.)

The Invisible Power—
An average week's box office returns on this production. (Middle West.)

Pardon My French—
Average business. Star pleased —amusing little play but didn't draw like I expected. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

Nobody's Fool—

Mediocre picture with fair business. (West.)

Short Skirts—
Very good little picture. Business fine. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Three Musketeers—
Second week pulled fairly strong. Picture is really acclaimed Fairbanks' best. (Middle West.)

Undoubtedly one of the greatest films yet produced. Fairbanks does by far the best work of his career. This picture will attract every class. Hundreds of patrons were lined up outside by 7 o'clock each evening. Held for second week. (Middle West.)

Dream Street—
The picture received great support from the press and played to good crowds the first week. (Middle West.)

METRO

The Conquering Power—
Ran a week. Regarded as fair, both in receipts and kind of picture. (East.)

Garments of Truth—
Good comedy, took very well, good business. (Middle West.)

PATHE

Never Weaken—
Went over big at every performance on extended run. (West.)

VITAGRAPH

The Son of Wallingford—
Fair picture but weak on continuity. Not a big hit with the public although the comments were "mildly" interesting. (Middle West.)

WARNER BROS.

Why Girls Leave Home—
A freak picture but it went over very well. Business very good. (East.)

R-C PICTURES

Shams of Society—
Fair picture and business. (West.)

HODKINSON

The Mysterious Rider—
Snappy action picture. Went over big. Appealed to those who like thrills. (Middle West.)

Lobby decorations for "Dawn of the East," playing recently at the Princess theatre, Denver.

Elaborate Armistice Day Program Presented by Tillson

What might be called "The Unconquerable spirit of showmanship" was demonstrated by Roy Tillson, manager of the Strand theatre, Lansing, Mich., in planning his Armistice Day program.

Mr. Tillson, although confined to his bed by threatened pneumonia, planned his campaign in every detail. The theatre was decorated with American flags.

As one came into the lobby the first thing to catch their eye was a setting in the center of which was a large oil painting of Morris Harvey Dixon, the first boy in Lansing killed in action, and whom the Lansing Post of the American Legion was named in honor of. A large American flag made the background. The picture of Dixon was draped with flags and underneath a wreath and a card reading "Lest we forget" and either side were stacked guns.

The prologue consisted of a stage setting representing the modern spirit of '16. A large black velvet curtain comprised the background, in front of which was an oil painting 6x10, reproducing the modern spirit of '76, with America, France and England portraying the characters of the original picture. A baby spot brought this into relief. On each side was a small easel containing cards, one reading "Lest we forget" and the other "November 11, 1918." Up-stage a bit were two stacks of guns. As the curtain rose a soldier and sailor who were in the foreground came to attention and saluted the picture. Taps were sounded from the rear of the balcony by a bugler, and as the last note died out the soldier and sailor on the stage sang the "Star Spangled Banner."

Brooklyn Mark Strand Celebrates Armistice Day

AN impressive and sincere tribute to the "Unknown Soldier" was paid during the Armistice Week commemorative exercises at the Brooklyn Mark Strand, where at every performance the stage and house lights were dimmed down to darkness at a propitious moment during the show, the music halted and quiet prevailed for five minutes.

The testimonial to the departed American soldiers came without announcement and was in good taste. This was the arrangement. During the showing of the Topical Review shots of the "Unknown Soldier" ceremonies at Arlington and Washington were thrown on the screen. When the shot was reached showing the soldiers blowing "taps" over the catafalque, the lights slowly died out all over the house and when the audience had wonderingly subsided into silence the trumpeter in the orchestra gave the "taps" call.

Lieber's "One Arabian Night" Prologue Highly Effective

For the showing of "One Arabian Night" at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, Managing Director Ralph Lieber took full advantage of the exceptional prologue opportunities presented.

A beautiful stage setting was made showing a picturesque Oriental villa, with protruding balcony. The background showed just the sky, with the moon throwing rays of light across the setting, with the clouds moving dreamily across.

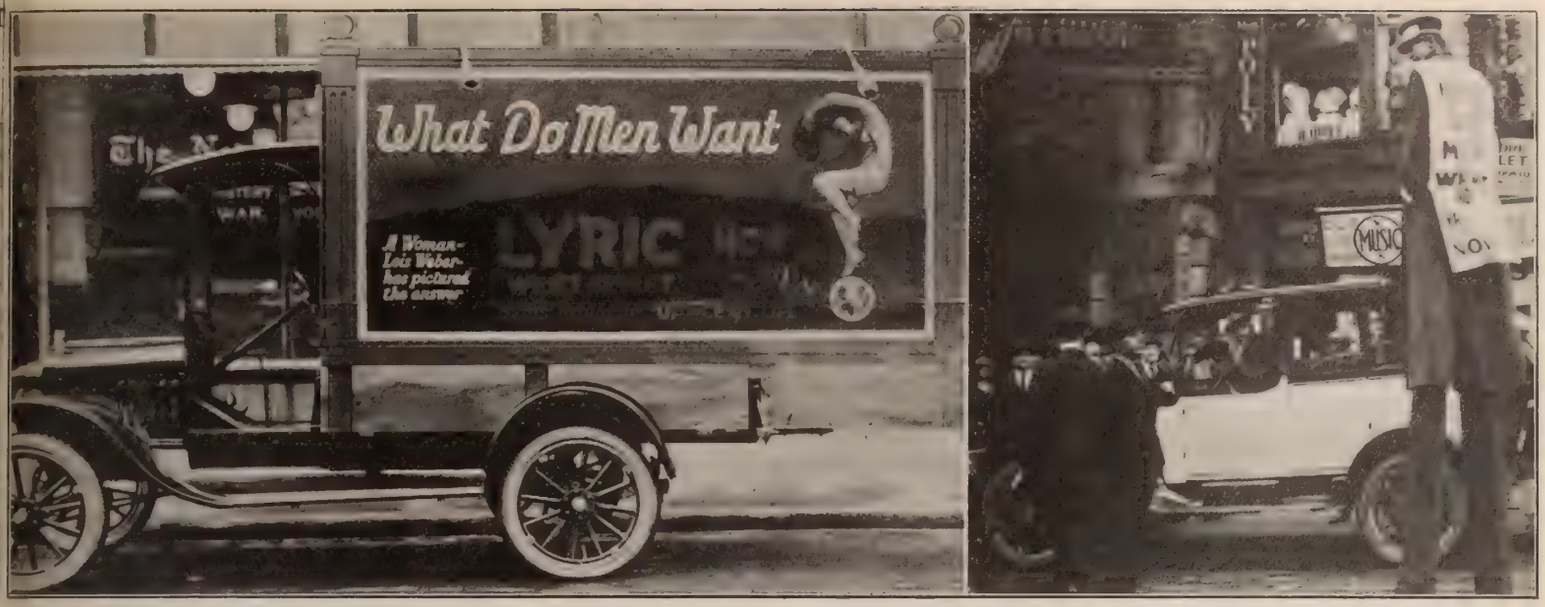
A hunchback appears below the balcony singing the "Bedouin Love Song" followed by a beautiful girl, in Oriental costume, who sings "Less Than The Dust," finishing as the clouds move slowly across forming an eclipse of the moon, while the lights fade out and into the beginning of "One Arabian Night."

An effective exploitation campaign was also planned and executed.

Newspaper tie-ups were affected and the Star carried a full-page co-operative display. All the papers gave the picture generous reading notices.

In addition to this a half-dozen circular posters, which were made to fit into the extra wheel on the rear of automobiles were used for advertising "One Arabian Night." As these machines are on the street virtually all day long, they undoubtedly proved of considerable value.

Several attractive window displays were also secured.



Essays on "Woman's Place" Excite Boonville's Interest

Manager A. W. Forrest of the Forrest theatre, Boonville, Ind., offered a series of cash prizes and tickets for the best essay submitted on the theme "Woman's Place" as exploitation for the picture of the same name.

The result was an avalanche of essays and a wide interest in the playing dates for the picture. Of course plenty of free advertising was forthcoming on the stunt and the names of the prize winners were published in the local papers.

Lobby display arranged by Murray Brothers, owners of the Quality theatre, Independence, Kansas, for the showing of "The Man of the Forest."

Explaining by cut some of the exploitation stunts put over in New York for the showing of "What Do Men Want?" playing an indefinite engagement at the Lyric theatre.

New York Stops to Look

"What Do Men Want?" Exploitation Intrigues Attention of Metropolis

An exploitation campaign which caught the attention of even blase Times Square was used to herald the coming of "What Do Men Want?" to the Lyric theatre.

New York awoke one morning to find high in the sky above Times Square a huge banner reading: "Lyric. 'What Do Men Want?' Now." Below the banner, on a trapeze, was the figure of a "man" who, after twirling for a few minutes on his perch, plunged down to earth, only to ride back up the cable to his trapeze a moment later. The banner and trapeze were suspended from kites and were visible from almost every corner of Manhattan Island. The man, needless to say, was a dummy.

Following this there appeared on the street a man fifteen feet high, whose stilts were covered with a flappy black costume. He roamed the streets about the amusement section for a week preceding and during the opening and, when the crowds became too dense, escaped by seating himself on the top of a convenient taxicab and whirling away. On his front and back appeared banners advertising the opening of the picture.

Good use was made of a twenty-four sheet made for this picture. A reproduction only slightly smaller than the twenty-four sheet was made and mounted on boards on each side of a Ford chassis. These sheets were lighted from below and above by electric lights operated from a storage battery on the car. This display also was used for a week before and during the opening.

Window tie-ups were made with more than a hundred merchants on prominent corners, largely in the Times Square district. To these merchants were furnished window stickers reading: "What do men want? Walk in—we have it."

Inside were counter cards, bearing the same question.

A full one sheet showing was made on subway and elevated boards, and at subway stations men were stationed with rolls of imitation tickets bearing an advertisement of the picture which were given away to every purchaser of a real subway ticket.

A newspaper advertising campaign of big proportions was carried on.

Niagara Falls Newspaper Aids Manager Carroll

IN connection with the showing of "Why Girls Leave Home," Manager Howard Carroll, of the International theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., arranged an essay contest with the Niagara Falls Gazette in which he offered rewards of $15, $10 and five $1 bills to those sending in the best essays on "Why Girls Leave Home." There were an unusually large number of entrants in the contest. In addition to the essay contest, Mr. Carroll arranged for interviews with city officials, teachers, ministers, etc., on the subject which were printed in the Gazette. He used half-page ads in the newspapers and flooded the city with advertising matter on the picture, which went over like a house afire.

Johnstown Uses Street Car Stunt

A stunt which has often proved effective was once more successfully used by L. W. Barclay, managing director of the Parkview theatre, Johnstown, Pa., as an exploitation medium for "Over the Hill."

Barclay engaged the services of a motorman and the use of a city street car. The privilege of driving the car over all tracks in the city was accorded him with the rental. With banners and with cutouts of "Over the Hill" characters adorning the front, rear, and sides of the trolley-car, and with an eight-piece "jazz" orchestra playing popular melodies within the car, general attention was compelled throughout the many busy streets of Johnstown.

The car began its tour at noon, when the host of industrial workers in Johnstown were enjoying an hour of rest. Heralds were distributed in the wake of the car as it was driven slowly followed by large crowds.

Barclay decorated his lobby with cutouts and placed window tie-ups in several stores. A special children's matinee at reduced prices was one of the features of the campaign.

Electrical Contrivances Sell "Invisible Power"

For "The Invisible Power" Manager Jack Kaliska, of the Rialto theatre, Atlanta, had a lot of electrical appliances in the lobby.

There was an electric washing machine, an electric sewing machine, an electric iron and a number of other articles of similar nature—all connected up and running. The connections from the machines to the electric sockets were cleverly hidden, to carry out the sign over the "decorations" which read "The Invisible Power—You can't tell where it comes from but it's there."

Credit was given to the firms from whom the machines were borrowed so that there was no expense to renting them—in fact, the lobby was one of the least expensive that Manager Kaliska has used.

Views of two of the Regent theatre, Lansing, Mich., lobby displays designed by Manager Roy Tillson for "The Last of the Mohicans" and "Lying Lips," respectively.

Double Truck for "Experience" at Shreveport

A two-page co-operative display was one of the ideas which H. L. Swain, manager of Saenger's Shreveport theatres, put into action as exploitation on "Experience."

This misplaced word idea, with prizes to those who found the errors, was a part of the scheme, and the local merchant's advertising all tied up with the title of the picture.

Rouda's Prologue Dupli cates Scene in Picture

The interior of an old French cafe, wi a big open fireplace and a chimney built boulders, before which a quartette in mu keteer costume sing the old-time rollicki French songs, constitute the prologue f "The Three Musketeers" as arranged H. M. Rouda, manager of the Auditoriu theatre at Dayton, Ohio.

Over the fireplace is a shelf running fu length of the room on which are the o French plates, and on the wall are cross swords. In the corner is an oaken tab on which are drinking mugs, and arou which are grouped the heavy chairs that period.

This illustration shows the cast of characters and the stage setting for the "The Three Musketeers" prologue presented by Managing Director H. M. Rouda, of the Auditorium, Dayton, O.

"Snowblind" Gets Another "Snow" Lobby

Frank Boscketti, manager of the Broadway theatre, Lawrence, Mass., gave "Snowblind," a very effective lobby display, thereby building up business into an exceptionally successful booking.

Almost ridden in fir and pine branches were the window and door of a small cabin, analagous to that depicted in the photoplay. Cotton was used liberally to represent drifted snow. Above the cabin was placed a stuffed owl with wings outspread.

Near the door was a stuffed coyote, while back under the fir branches stood a large toy bear.

Framed "Snowblind" posters and signs were placed here and there. The general effect was quite snowy and "northwoodsy" and aroused much comment from patrons of the theatre and served as an attraction for passersby.

Lester Hires Famous Orchestra for "Musketeers" Run

For his engagement of "The Three Musketeers," Manager L. T. Lester of the Rivoli theatre, Columbia, S. C., engaged a noted orchestra from Palm Beach and made his musical score for the week's engagement second only to the feature picture as an attraction.

People influential in both the business and social life of the city, were induced to see the picture early in the week and the word of mouth advertising thus incurred was a valuable asset to the run.

A ballyhoo in which three men dressed as "musketeers" were paraded about the streets was another stunt that went over with good results.

"Cappy Ricks" Sails Into Evansville

The city ordinances of Evansville, Ind., prohibit theatrical displays on down town streets, but the deference to the United States Marines is a different matter. The Criterion Theatre tied up with the Marines for a ballyhoo for "Cappy Ricks," consisting of a float mounted on a motor-cycle, designed to resemble a sail boat. The larboard and starboard sides carried banners for the theatre, while the Government came in at the stern.

A Marine uniform was hired and a man stood in the center of the boat as it made its terrestial way through the main streets. On his cap the word "Retriever" was written, hooking up with Thomas Meighan's boat in the picture. Oscar Kantner, Paramount exploiteer, arranged the display. The picture enjoyed a stimulated business at the Criterion.

This "boat" sailed about Evansville, Ind., streets recently advertising "Cappy Ricks"

Avondale Merchants Compete in Window Display Art

When the Avondale theatre in North Tonawanda, N. Y., owned by Fred M. Zimmerman and managed by L. G. Barger, put on "The Old Nest," the entire town entered in a spirited window trimming contest launched by Mr. Barger. All the merchants in the town extended themselves in decorating their windows with appropriate scenes and Mr. Barger furnished the photos and cards which told of the coming of the picture to the Avondale.

Mr. Barger offered a first prize of $10 for the best decorated window and other money rewards for the second and third best. Tickets of admission were given to those receiving honorable mention. A committee of prominent townsmen was appointed to make the award. One of the largest stores in the city received the ten dollars for a lavish flash. Life-size wax figures were used in this window to represent characters in the picture story. Of course, there was a liberal sprinkling of Avondale advertising.

The stunt aroused a lot of interest and brought capacity business. A large number of billboards were also used during the showing and many heralds distributed from house to house.

Mr. Zimmerman, who is also president and general manager of Nu-Art Pictures, Inc., of Buffalo, recently remodeled the Avondale into one of the most attractive and coziest little houses in Western New York. The house was formerly called the Oliver.

Showing stage setting and cast appearing on a prologue for "The Wonderful Thing" playing recently at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre.

Norma Talmadge in "The Wonderful Thing" got the right kind of a start at the Brooklyn Mark Strand, where Managing Director Edward L. Hyman took the trouble to make atmosphere for the picture by reproducing on the stage the elaborate garden party scene from the film.

A vine-covered wall and balustrade served as a background. A trellised rose garden, over which crept red and white roses in profusion, provided a picturesque locale for the merrymakers. Wistaria and orange blossoms crept from the trillis work above the rose-covered portals. Lighted Japanese lanterns were suspended from this garden pavilion. The scene was lit with steel blue lights, shaded to give the effect of a cloudless night effect. Amber lights played on the performers and blue top lighting flooded the scene.

The prologue opened with Sonia Serova and Harold A. Creevy presenting in dance form the "Melody of Love" from "Gypsy Love." They danced "Beautiful Lady" from "The Pink Lady" as an encore with the others participating in the waltz. Ruth Watson, mezzo soprano, singing 'The Wonderful Thing," made a striking tie-up finale.

Patterson Effects Advantageous Tie-up

Manager Willard Patterson of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, banked heavy on his lobby and on a tie-up with a local department store when he played "The Mysterious Rider" for a week's engagement.

The lobby was transformed, for the occasion, into a rude log cabin, which was composed of real logs, with the bark left on. Hanging on the wall outside the doorway of this cabin—which, was of course, the entrance of the theatre—was a tin wash-basin, and some crudely cured skins such as are occasionally found around trappers' cabins.

The lobby of the Criterion has a very large arched dome. Across this, to mask its height so that it would not dwarf the cabin below, was a lattice-work of white, through which was twined Spanish moss, leaves of autumn colors and wild flowers. The lights were somewhat dimmed also.

Through the department store tie-up a special sale on Zane Grey's books was held, which, coming just at Christmas shopping time, as it did, proved most popular. Also, tickets to the theatre were given away to customers of the store—each ticket good for one free admission when accompanied by a ticket bought at the regular admission price. These tickets were good only on Monday and Thursday afternoons.

A drug store near the theatre took advantage of the appearance of the picture to "slip in" a special sale on Zane Grey's books also, and gave a window for decoration, which also helped.

Amateur Chaplins Compete at Lafayette, Ind.

"THE IDLE CLASS" opened a three days' engagement at the Arc theatre, Lafayette, Ind. A. Leavitt, manager, reacted by staging a regular, old-time Hallowe'en fest in his playhouse, following the last of the night performances and he added novelty to the event by offering prizes to the most realistic Charles Chaplin masquerader present.

The interior of the theatre was illumiated with Jack o'Lanterns and each of the prize winners was compelled to contribute a special Charles Chaplin stunt.

Zottman Gives Prizes for Best Essays Submitted

Manager Zottman of the Girard Avenue theatre, Philadelphia, employed tried and true exploitation methods to interest his patrons in the opening episode of "Winners of the West."

Mr. Zottman issued 1,000 passes to the school children of the schools in the vicinity of his theatre. He also offered a diamond ring to the youngster writing the best 300-word essay on the Days of '49, that period in American history around which the serial was written.

Once more this good old hokum exploitation stunt is used to exploit a picture. Fox's Liberty theatre, St. Louis, found the idea effective in putting over "The Toreador."

Gets Results with a Small Exploitation Budget

The kind of exploitation which can be put over for an insignificant sum of money but which brings big results at the box office is well exemplified by the campaign put over by a Wid Gunning, Inc., exploiteer for the showing of "Quo Vadis" at the Scenic theatre, Waterbury, Conn.

For $22.50 the following stunts were put over:

For the entire week of the showing a man in Roman costume paraded the streets of Waterbury bearing signs reading: "I am a Roman, so are the hundreds of characters in 'Quo Vadis' at the Scenic theatre."

A window display was placed in the city's largest music store in which a display of violins was hooked up with Nero's fiddling while Rome burned.

The window of the leading book store was obtained for a tie-up. The central point of the display was a huge card reading: "See 'Quo Vadis' at the Scenic—we sell the book." Stills from the picture added to the attractiveness of the display and there was an open copy of the first edition of the book, published twenty-five years ago.

A Ford tractor was obtained and was sent about the principal streets for several days carrying the sign: "This is a Fordson, not a chariot. See real chariots in 'Quo Vadis' at the Scenic."

This cut illustrates how the Majestic theatre, Williamsport, Pa., exploited "The Fox."

Atlanta Football Match Filmed

THE city of Atlanta stands solidly behind Georgia Tech, and her pride in the school is unbounded—a fact on which Manager Jack Kaliska, of the Rialto, Atlanta, counted when he put over a now famous scoop.

Great interest is always evident in the annual Georgia Tech-Penn game, which is played each year in the North. The game was played on Saturday, pictures were taken of it, and Manager Kaliska was advised, by wire, Saturday night, that he would be safe in advertising the pictures for Monday. So he splashed a huge ad Sunday—and cleaned up, all week, for the other theatres did not secure the same pictures until late in the week

ChoirBoysUsedin"Mother o' Mine" Presentation

Songs of home and mother rendered by twenty-five choir boys between the ages of 10 and 12, secured through the co-operation of a local church, aided J. H. Cooper, manager of the Wichita theatre, Wichita, Kan., not a little in putting over "Mother o' Mine."

Landau Originates Fine "Over the Hill" Prologue

Originality of design and tenseness of artistry characterized the stage settings and music accompaniment of the prologue used by Managing Director Leo A. Landau of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, in connection with the recent run of "Over the Hill." A cut of the stage setting is shown on this page.

As the curtains parted, revealing the scene, the organ began playing softly "The Rosary," and the words "Honor Thy Father and Thy Mother" lighted up, slowly increasing their brightness until the approximate middle of the song was played. Then with the closing half of the music the lights were softly dimmed; and as the last strains of the organ died away, the picture was flashed on the screen.

In exploitation of the production Manager Landau placed a window display in one of the city's leading cafes. The display depicted a country scene with its home appeal, showing hills, valleys, fences, cows, chickens and children.

Arrangements also were made with the cafe to name several of its ice-cream dishes after characters in "Over the Hill."

Postals Advertise Stoneham Invasion of "Quo Vadis"

Institutional advertising and a boost for a number of stars and pictures, among the latter being "The Girl From God's Country" and "Quo Vadis," was secured recently by the management of the Stoneham theatre, Stoneham, Mass., by the use of postals on which was set up in typewriter type a message signed by a fictitious person under the title of "Your Annie." This postal was mailed to a selected number of Stoneham residents.

Excellent "Old Nest" Exploitation Put Over by Kistler

Accompanying photos show excellent exploitation on "The Old Nest" by Manager Kistler, of Strand theatre, Gaffney, S. C. The miniature house is a real one, a children's playhouse, borrowed from a local family. About thirty cedar trees decorated the lobby. The "doll" house was easily mounted on a big truck and was driven all over town during mornings of show dates and for some days in advance. Mr. Kistler sent this float to several surrounding towns and got a good bunch of extra business in this way.

Whitfield Makes the Advance Sale Idea Work Wonders

Hal Whitfield, manager of the Liber theatre, Beaumont, Texas, recently tri out the advance sale idea, one of the b methods in small towns of convinci prospective patrons that a picture is go —if not worked too often—ever ori nated.

The picture was "The Old Nest," a by sending a bevy of pretty local gi out to cover the residential sections, M Whitfield was soon able to sell 25 p cent. of his seats for each night of t full week's run.

Simultaneously advance sale box o fices were opened in the stores of t city. Everybody wanted to know w the advanced sale for a picture and M Whitfield's answers convinced them th "The Old Nest" was a picture th should see.

Johnson's "Gypsy Blood Prologue Pleases

Manager Herb Johnson of the Lu theatre, Lafayette, Ind., arranged a quai and colorful prologue for his recent pre entation of "Gypsy Blood."

Just before the beginning of the featu picture, the curtain rose revealing a gro of six gypsies in bizarre attire seated the red glow of a camp fire over whi sizzled a huge pot. This environme served to introduce the two soloists, o a soprano who, dressed in the proverbi gypsy costume, sang the popular son "Just Like a Gypsy," she being follow by a tenor who rendered "Tell Me Litt Gypsy," a pronounced song hit of la year's Follies. The innovation was ve delightful and picturesque and served put the spectators in a receptive mood.

Atmospheric Lobby Display Devised by Manager Shields

The atmosphere of the feature was very nicely put over by the lobby display which Manager Shields of the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Ga., devised for his recent showing of "Dawn of the East."

A tall red brick fence or wall was built all the way across the lobby. There was a narrow gate at the right and the side-wall and a window of a tiny red brick cottage could be seen. Dainty white curtains fluttered at this window, and an electric lamp was placed on the table.

Strung across the front of this brick wall were Chinese lanterns, forming the only illumination of the lobby. Chinese plants were placed here and there about the lobby, and wistaria clambered over the wall. Hung over the door, at the entrance, was a basket of artificial lotus-lilies, and across from this door was the narrow exit door, where hung another basket of the lilies.

Outside, on either side, was a stock one sheet advertising the picture. Over the theatre was a twenty-four sheet giving the name of the picture and the star —and that was all the advertising matter needed. The entire lobby was very pretty and attracted considerable attention.

Evers' Lobby on "Carnival" Brought Business

The accompanying cut illustrates how Paul Evers, manager of the Majestic theatre, Memphis, Tenn., decorated his lobby for the showing of "Carnival." Balloons, confetti, etc., were utilized to create a gala atmosphere and the kewpies shown intrigued the interest of all who passed by. The lobby display was inexpensive and paid for itself many times in increased business.

Martin Gives "Mother O' Mine" Fine Exploitation

G. W. MARTIN, manager of the Irwin theatre, Bloomington, Ill., built up interest for his engagement of "Mother O' Mine" by a strong advance exploitation campaign.

The campaign began with newspaper reading matter and displays in which the Kipling's poem to Motherhood was featured. A motor truck lavishly decorated with banners went on a daily tour of the territory surrounding the theatre.

Display ads were run in the papers of adjacent small towns and the theatre lobby decorated with stills, plenty of paper and attention attracting signs. The result of the campaign was a four days' run to packed houses, according to Mr. Martin's report concerning his efforts.

Brooker Ties-up with Canadian Election

During the hottest part of the Canadian federal election campaign Manager Brooker, of the Loew theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, published an advertisement headed "This is NOT Mr. Meighen," this caption referring to a cartoon of a speaker whose facial expression resembled Rt. Hon. Mr. Meighan, Prime Minister of Canada. This catch heading was merely a trick to draw attention to the fact that a news stand had been opened in conjunction with the check room of the theatre. The latest magazines and papers, as well as confectionery, are sold at the stand at regular prices for the convenience of patrons.

Indianapolis Stores Aid Ohio's "Sheik" Showing

There have been many co-operative newspaper ads in which the theatre's name was included in a mercantile display, but the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, pulled a new one in its flash for "The Shiek," including the names of two department stores in their copy.

The W. K. Stewart Company and L. S. Ayres Company, two of Indianapolis's largest stores, were pushing copies of E. M. Hull's novel and the theatre ad copy carried notice to the effect that the demand was exhausting the supply of books and those wanting to read it had better order right away. The stores paid partially for the ad.

In addition, Stewart's and Ayres' got out 10,000 heralds between them announcing the run of the picture. They were enclosed in all delivery packages.

Oscar Kantner, Paramount exploiteer, arranged the tie-up.

Another Big "Why Girls Leave Home" Campaign Put Over at Minneapolis

Weeks before "Why Girls Leave Home" was to be shown at the Blue Mouse theatre, Minneapolis, Rowe and Silberman, managers of the house, arranged for the running of the now familiar contest based on the question of why girls leave home, in the Minneapolis News.

The idea was not put over in a half hearted way. The News devoted pages of special text matter to the contest, equipped its delivery wagons with appropriate advertising and pulled other stunts of untold publicity value to the feature.

The advertising manager of the News was quick to see where his department could "hook up" for some extra revenue, so a "double-truck" co-operative spread was arranged. Special prizes of tickets were offered to readers of the News who wrote letters stating which was the best ad in the lay-out.

The exchange reciprocated with the newspaper by posting 1500 one sheets advising all to get in the News contest.

Next in line were the merchants who came across nobly with window displays ranging from electrical supplies to gents' furnishings.

The big football game between Minneapolis and Indiana was the next object of attack. A special score card and herald were distributed at the gates of the field, thus bringing the title of the picture before 25,000 people. The theatre constructed a special perambulator truck, with large banners on all sides, which paraded the streets of Minneapolis night and day before and during the engagement. The lobby of the Blue Mouse theatre and the front of the house were utilized in the most effective way. The Blue Mouse has a mammoth marquee and this was covered on all sides with special banners and electric signs bringing out the fact that 65,000 girls were lost last year. Special oil paintings, photographs and a three-sheet enlargement of an editorial from the New York Times attracted the attention of all passers-by.

A special half-sheet card was tacked throughout the city and down town streets the night before the opening. Everything in sight was "sniped," and arrangements were made with all news dealers owning corner news stands to cover the backs of their stands with these cards.

The Blue Mouse theatre also used a large series of attractive newspaper ads, gave out large heralds, and, in fact, put over a 100 per cent. campaign.

"Sea" Lobby Display Used by Strand of Atlanta

One of the most effective lobbies in his long career of effective lobbies was the one which Manager George Schmidt, of the Strand theatre, Atlanta, erected for a return engagement of "At the End of the World."

The lobby of the Strand is circular, and the walls had been hidden by a painted "sea-scape"—the skyline, where the sea and horizon meet. In the center of the lobby was an immense cardboard lighthouse, very realistic, of painted stones, marked by time and many waters.

At the top, on the little balcony outside the lightroom, was a cut-out of the hero and heroine, very small, and locked in a loving embrace. Just in front of them a part of the balcony railing had been torn away, and half way down the lighthouse was the villain—falling. This cut-out was held up with almost invisible wires—the head down, towards the rocks, the feet up towards the lighthouse, hands flung wide in terror—a very effective bit of mounting, which added tremendously to the effectiveness of the scene.

In the light-tower, an automobile spotlight, which flashed on and off, gave an excellent imitation of the revolving light of a real lighthouse.

The entire scene duplicated, as nearly as possible, the closing scene of the picture; and at night, when the lobby was dimly lighted, it was a stunning piece of work.

City Election Provides Material for Novelty Ad.

City Clerk Ira J. Carmichael of Batavia, N. Y., opened the Batavia News last Saturday and found an open letter addressed to him occupying a quarter of a page. It was signed by S. G. Sladdin, who Carmichael did not know was a Paramount exploiteer from Buffalo.

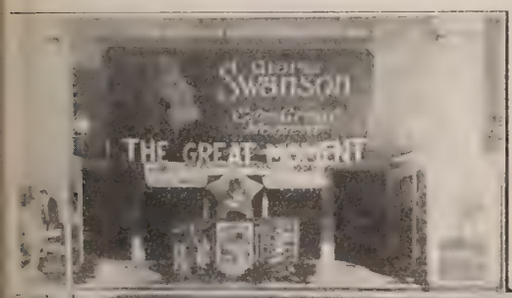
The letter told Carmichael that "The Great Moment" of his life was approaching—meaning the Tuesday election—so Manager March Burns of the Family theatre took great pleasure in offering him admission for him and his family to see Gloria Swanson in "The Great Moment."

Sladdin handled his display cleverly by allowing abundant white space. The letter was the talk of the town. Carmichael was pleased with the publicity so near election, and the Family theatre won an influential friend.

Burns and Sladdin succeeded in getting the biggest bank of the town to display a tie-up window card on the picture.

Here is a cut showing the "Old Nest" window display which R. W. Lawrence, publicity director of the Majestic theatre, Findlay, Ohio, secured in a local store during the recent run of the above mentioned feature

More Bird Nests for "Old Nest"

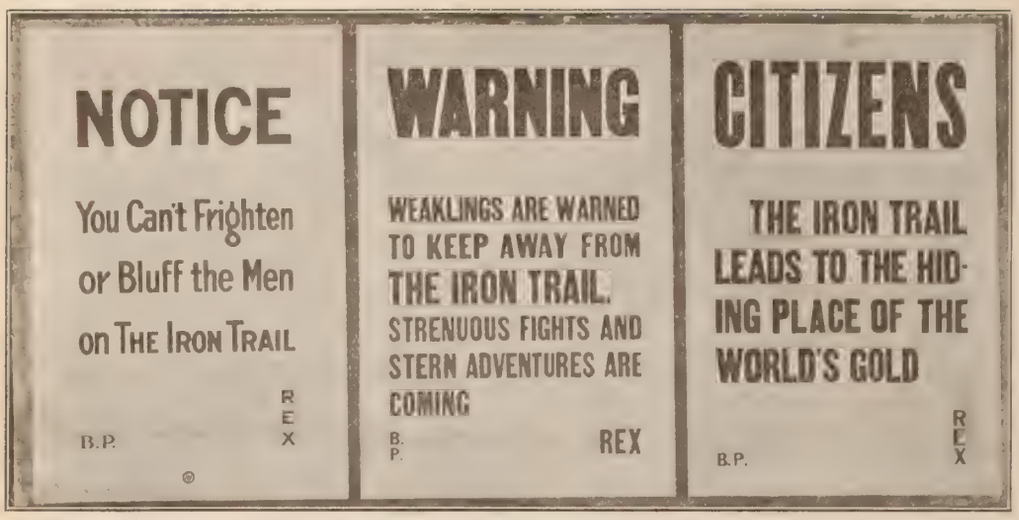


MANAGER, GRIFFIN of the Strand theatre, Carrollton, Ga., advertised for birds' nets in connection with his showing of the "Old Nest," at the rate of one pass for two nests and received 45—all kinds, shapes and sizes. These were scattered all over trees placed in the lobby, and the four theatre canaries were brought outside for a touch of life. Summer and fall records were broken, with a hundred requests for a return date.

Takes Page from Barnum's Advertising History

Robert Kane, manager of the Hi-Art theatre, Lockport, N. Y., put himself in the place of P. T. Barnum in framing a display ad on "Go and Get It."

Mr. Kane's effervescent effluence as it appears in the press of the famous Lock City follows:



If P. T. Barnum were advertising "Go and Get It," the most marvelous, fascinating, exhilarating exhibition of photoplay achievement the gasping, startled public has ever witnessed; a colossal collection of cinema conjugations; hair-raising, death-defying aeroplane stunts! flying leaps from one swift moving plane to another; hurdling to the top of speeding express trains; thrilling feats of prowess over land and sea. Marshall Neilan's mastodonic mobilization of motion picture marvels, "Go and Get It." See Dinty, the funniest kid the world has ever produced; Helen, the beautiful woman of mystery; "Shut the Door" Gordon, the heavy heartless villain; Kirk Connelly, the human spider, world renowned stunt artist, and—Ferre, the great enigma, the most terrifying monster Dame Nature ever mothered. What is it? man, beast or devil? Shiver with the multitude at the terrific combat between this gigantic brute and the dauntless young World War veteran. Not since the days of Roman Gladiators has such an exhibition been staged.

Schmidt Tries Teaser Stuff for Northwest Mounted Picture

Manager Schmidt, of Strand theatre, Atlanta, Ga., had excellent results this week from a ballyhoo and teaser campaign on "Hearts of the North." He had made for him a regulation uniform of the Canadian Northwest Police—red coat with gold braid, pants of cobalt blue, Sam Browne belt—and employed a strapping six-footer for the part, mounted on a fine steed, for daily parade. The horse wore a banner, "I am looking for my twin brother who was lost in the 'Heart of the North'." Teaser ads were run in the classified columns—"$5,000.00 reward for information or capture of 'Bad Maupaume' who deserted in the 'Heart of the North.' Local authorities lend assistance. Call Log 14503." A multitude of calls resulted. Then on the last days of the picture, the ballyhoo was changed and the policeman led the horse on which was placed his captive brother—dressed in ragged clothes, old sweater, arctics and a fur cap, bound and manacled—and the banner read: "Roy Stewart gets $5,000 for the capture of 'Bad Maupaume.' See him at Strand theatre." A lively lobby full of colorful cut-outs and paper helped and the results of the campaign were astonishing for the dull period.

Painted Lobby Front for "The Oath"

Manager Arch Bamberger, of the Empress, Owensboro, Kentucky, boosted business on "The Oath" by an attractive lobby display provided by a local scenic artist. On Saturday night before the showing Wednesday and Thursday the display was put up, giving benefit of a Sunday showing.

Over the entrance was a girl and a man, painted, and linked with a real chain, which jangled in the breeze and attracted much attention. Back from the storm front was set the special painted poster, the idea being taken from First National press sheets. Many compliments were received on the display.

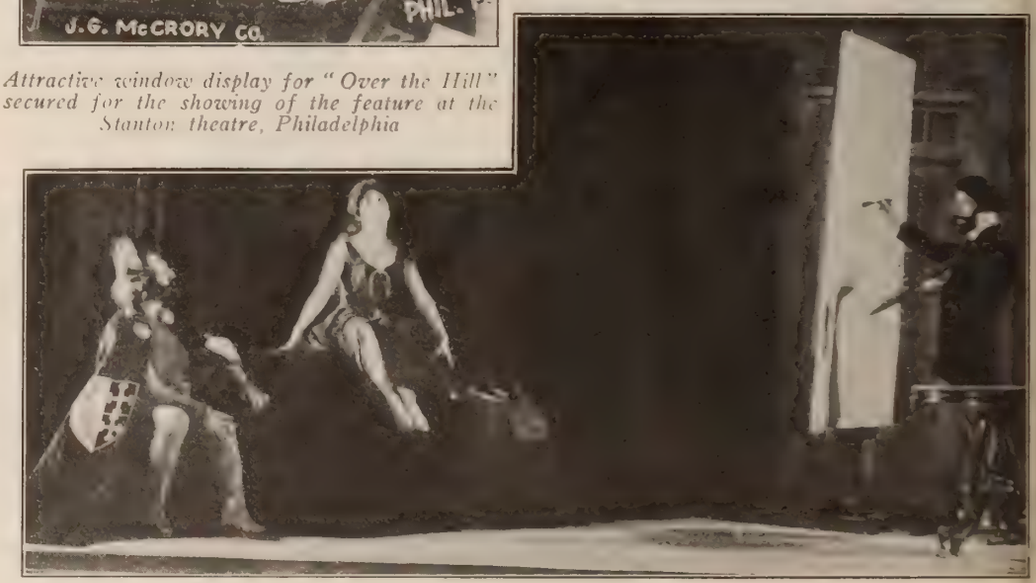
Lynchburg Unemployed Miners Secured as Sandwich Men

Ten unemployed miners were picked up on the streets of Lynchburg, Va., and hired to distribute cards reading:

"We are unemployed but the Isis theatre gave us a job to advertise George Loane Tucker's Latest Photoplay Classic, "Ladies Must Live," with Betty Compson. Isis theatre three days, starting Monday."



These men handed out the cards at the intersections of the main streets. It's a good stunt but it looks like Leslie Whelan, Paramount exploiteer, who handled the stunt, overlooked a bet. "Ladies Must Live and So Must We" is the obvious wording for such a card and would have tied up the stunt better. Whelan's exploitation also included distribution of heralds with each purchase of tickets to two big foot ball games and heralds were also wrapped in all packages sent out by the important stores. Randolph-Macon College, the town's social center, was thoroughly canvassed with heralds and posters.

Oregon Exhibitor Gets Minsterial Okey for "Four Horsemen"

K. L. Burk, manager of the Orpheum theatre, Baker, Ore., made good use of a letter from a local Methodist minister praising "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" prior to his recent showing of the picture.

Copies of the letter were distributed about the city and were especially effective in bringing people who do not often attend the theatre, out for the showing.

A four page herald of local origin was also used to good advantage. The herald contained full information concerning the Baker engagement and devoted one page to the poem by Hon. Melvin G. Winstock.

Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, reproduced a scene from "The Beggar Maid" as a prologue number for his showing of this picture

Bottling Company Helps Boost "The Whistle"

Manager Kennedy, of the Galax theatre, Birmingham, Ala., tied up effectively with the Whistle Bottling Company on "The Whistle." He placed two big banners on each of the company's five trucks and also had 10,000 labels reading "See Bill Hart in 'The Whistle' at Galax theatre now," stuck on that many bottles of drinks distributed in the city and mill suburbs. They also gave him 2,500 wooden whistles which were given out during the week advance, at the theatre only. In addition Mr. Kennedy placed two wildcat sirens on the marquee, alternating electrically, which made heaps of noise—and "got by" the city authorities for a day and a half.

Department Stores Distribute Buchanan's Heralds

In order to get the largest two department stores in Superior, Wis., to pack heralds on "Over the Hill" with each purchase made during the week prior to the opening night of the picture, H. Buchanan, manager of the People's theatre, printed on the reverse side of the herald matter concerning various bargains and oher goods to be found at these stores.

The plan was entirely original so far as Superior was concerned and the great business of the two establishments combined to help spread the advance publicity on the picture throughout the city and adjacent communities.

Manager Buchanan also held a private invitation view, and obtained favorable comment from leading citizens. This was used in newspaper advertising copy to great advantage. The Superior Telegram ran an editorial praising the management for its discrimination in selection of photoplays.

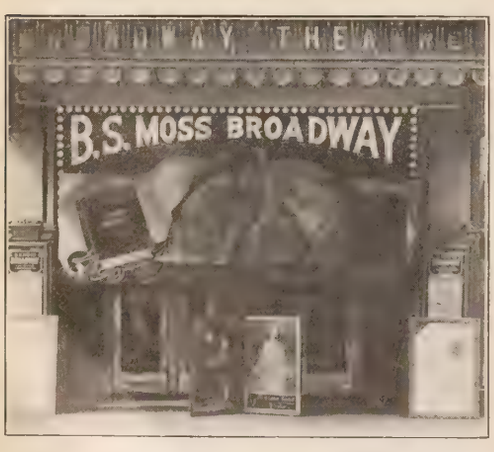
Suggestions by an exhibitor on establishing close relationship with the public

By HARRY L. NEWMAN

A New Service

Motion Picture News offers a new service, designed for use by the busy exhibitor, in a series of "Chats With You" stories intended as copy for the theatre program.

These articles are a form of institutional advertising used by many managers with marked success. The idea is to "sell" your house and its policy each week with some little chatty article. The human element is well worth considering in operating a motion picture theatre. The closer you can get to your patrons the better for all concerned. Talk with them whenever you can. No better method of doing this has ever been devised than that of devoting a certain space on the program to "from thee to thou" stories like those following.



The "Chats With You" series was written by Harry L. Newman, an exhibitor of wide experience who is now representing the News in a special capacity. They are selected from programs which Mr. Newman distributed to his patrons during his regime as managing director of the Victoria theatre, Ossining, N. Y.

Smiles

There is a smile lying around loose in our lobby. Upon entering our theatre you get a smile along with your ticket. Both are handed out by our always attentive cashier, ———.

You pass on and hand your ticket to ———, at the door, who recognizes you with a smile. "How's the picture?" you ask her. "They seem to like it," she answers, and then you go happily to a cozy and comfortable seat.

"You've seen the picture, heard the music, had a good time, you leave the theatre in a happy frame of mind and humming some good old tune, that smile is still at the door and box-office to greet you and say "Good-night," and by way of comment we have often overheard this conversation, "Not much of a picture," you say to them jokingly, "but you really have enjoyed it."

"No?" question our ladies in sincere concern, "I am surprised to hear you say that. They say so many people have said they liked it ever so much, even better than so-and-so, the star's previous picture."

"Well, it must be a good picture then," you confess smilingly, and with that you are on your way homeward bound, quite satisfied that the evening has been well spent.

Our Mistakes

Occasionally in the past we have erred in our judgment of what constituted a good picture, and we find it a hopeful sign, as well as a compliment to the usual standard we maintain, that our patrons failed to respond when these mistaken selections were offered them. We hope to have profited by our mistakes, and though frequently it happens that the condition of the film market makes it impossible to procure features which are up to what we consider our standard, we shall continue our efforts to make each succeeding week's program as nearly as possible one hundred per cent. worthy entertainment.

We are more than anxious to be guided by your criticisms, and it will be our constant endeavor in the future, as in the past, to prepare programs that will be of such constructive value as to place the motion pictures in —— on a plane where it will deserve the highest approval of all those who see them.

This theatre will always be kept cheerful and homelike.

To Publish Suggestions

Are you ever too warm or too cold or do you feel comfortable in the ———? Are our pictures always as bright and clear as they might be? Won't you write us and tell us things which you do not like or things which might be improved? We are always looking for improvements. Can't you suggest some? Tell us the things you like; but, above all, let us know the things you don't like. If you are curious concerning any of the actors or actresses who appear with us, we will, if possible, answer your queries. And if it is possible for us to do anything you suggest you may rest assured it will be done, because you need our excellent photoplays properly presented. So don't be afraid to speak cross to us—we like it.

Pictures to Your Liking

It is with a great deal of satisfaction that I have been told a number of times that the brief outlines and descriptions of the plays coming to this theatre have in all cases lived up to their introduction and in no instance has a picture been overrated or misrepresented.

This has been my aim—to create confidence among our patrons, and to have them know that their pleasure and entertainment is the prime factor in the management of this theatre. I shall ever strive to offer pictures that are to your liking.

There is no doubt in my mind that the showings of the pictures described in this circular are worthy of the attendance of one and all.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

The board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois, at their last meeting, named December 15th as the date for the state convention, which will be held at the Jefferson Hotel, Peoria. This action was taken immediately following the receipt of advices from President Sidney Cohen that he and Senator James Walker, general counsel of the national organization, could be present on that date. Messers. Cohen and Walker, according to present plans, will be in Chicago on December 14th and will be entertained at a luncheon given by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Chicago, leaving that night for Peoria to attend the state convention. On December 16th, Messrs Cohen and Walker are scheduled for a get-together meeting of exhibitors in Milwaukee.

The pictures of the impressive rights at the funeral of the "Unknown Soldier," held in Washington on Friday, were seen on the screen of the Chicago, Tivoli, Riviera and Pastime theatres at three o'clock on Saturday afternoon. This was due to the quick work of the Kinogram men all around and the delivery of the films by special aerial mail.

Manager I. Maynard Schwartz, of Educational, declares that there is no foundation whatsoever to the rumor that the St. Louis exchange of Educational would handle the southern Illinois territory. He states the Chicago office will continue serving the entire state of Illinois as heretofore.

Julius Lamm, managing director of Brunhild & Young, announces that this company has purchased the Rogers theatre and the New Era theatre from Max Gumbiner. This gives Brunhild & Young a total of five houses now being operated by that concern. In order to meet the growing demands of their business, Brunhild & Young have opened a new office at 810 S. Wabash Avenue.

Robert R. Levy, owner of the Revelry theatre, 47th and Calumet Avenue, has been appointed United States Marshal for the northern district of Illinois. Mr. Levy is one of the most widely and favorably known exhibitors in this territory and has taken an active part in the work of exhibitors' organizations, having been treasurer of the Allied Amusements Association, and president of the old Motion Picture Theatre Exhibitors' League.

Following the conviction in the United States Court, of Mathias Hanna, on charges of using the mails to defraud in connection with his recent attempt to blackmail Dee Robinson, popular Peoria, Illinois, exhibitor, United States District Attorney Montgomery has commenced proceedings to have Hanna deported to Bohemia, his native country. Hanna wrote several letters to Mr. Robinson and his wife, threatening to blow up his home and his principal theatres if he failed to place a large sum of money in a tin can and leave it at a designated spot on a lonely drive. He also threatened Mr. Robinson with death if he notified the police. Mr. Robinson and his Director of Publicity Benjamin H. Serkowich, worked out a plan whereby the blackmailer was captured and his trial and conviction followed. Sentence has been deferred pending the deportation proceedings.

Kathlyn Williams is returning to Chicago for another week of personal appearances at McVicker's theatre, starting November 28th. Immediately following this engagement she will return to California where it is reported, she will start working upon a new picture at once.

O. F. Spahr, general manager of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, was in Minneapolis this week visiting headquarters of Motiograph there, Rialto Theatre Supply Company. Mr. Spahr reports exhibitors are showing keen interest in the new Motiograph De Luxe in the Minneapolis territory as they are throughout the country and that a number of installations of the new projector are being made in leading Minnesota theatres.

Charles Ray has left for New York after the first visit he has made to Chicago since he was a boy. While in the city he was the guest of Balaban & Katz, and was kept busy seeing the sights, and being interviewed by members of the press. In fact few motion picture stars have been given more newspaper space and favorable mention by interviewers than was Mr. Ray. Among the places he visited was the Chicago Theate, Chicago-Wisconsin football game and the Blackstone Theatre to view "Lightnin'." A luncheon at the Blackstone to the daily and trade press representatives in honor of Mr. Ray was a feature of his first day's visit. It was given by Messrs. Balaban & Katz. Arthur S. Kane came on from New York to meet the star, and in the party, beside Mr. Ray, were Mrs. Ray, Richard Willis, Albert A. Kidder and George Rizard, chief camera man.

Bernie Russell, of Russell's Productions, was in New York this week in the interests of "Shadows of Conscience," his company's seven-reel special feature which is being put on the state right market. Few independent features have received the favorable and widespread comment which this picture, starring Russell Simpson, has.

Samuel Ludwig, of Ludwig Film Exchange, Milwaukee and Minneapolis, was in Chicago this week, arranging for releases on state right basis of the feature picture, which he has recently acquired, and about which he will make an announcement in the near future.

William Wendell, formerly connected with Paramount, now is selling short subjects on the Chicago west side for Universal, having recently been appointed salesman in Manager Roy Alexander's short subject department.

"What Do Men Want," Wid Gunning's sensational feature picture, will open at the Bijou Dream, Sunday, and according to Manager Sidney Goldman, it has been necessary to get additional prints to fill the Chicago playing dates of this picture. Among the circuits which will show the picture, are Ascher Brothers, Lubliner & Trinz, Marks & Goodman, Schoenstadt, Hammond and 63rd street. Harry Rice has been engaged to handle the publicity and exploitation for this feature in the Chicago territory, and already is on the job.

The grievance committee of the Chicago Film Board of Trade and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois, held its first joint meeting this week and discussed plans for the future operations of the joint body. At the next meeting committees will be named and the regular business of hearing and adjusting complaints by exchange men and exhibitors taken up.

The high school teachers of Chicago are the latest class of persons to feel aggrieved at the manner in which members of their profession are portrayed on the screen and at the next meeting of their council, a resolution will be offered calling upon the secretary to write letters of protest to all film producing companies against the manner in which educators are depicted in the movies. In announcing his purpose to introduce the resolution, President H. M. Madison, of the council, said: "Why must the film 'professor' or teacher, if male, be a consummate ass or idiot; if female, a caricature in 'specs,' ringlets of sixty years ago?"

"Poverty of Riches" Is Hailed by N. Y. Press

"A subject that is interesting to practically every theatregoer," says the critic of the New York American in his review of Goldwyn's Leroy Scott photoplay, "Poverty of Riches," showing this week, for the first time in New York, at the Capitol theatre. "Tells an old story with charm, clever impersonation and intelligent direction. You will like it, so will everybody you know."

The Herald said: "Not done in the familiar red flare way of the movies. Mr. Dix, Leatrice Joy, John Bowers, Louise Lovely and Irene Rich do some effective cerebral acting in the principal roles."

World: "The photoplay works out a sincere and fairly convincing drama. Its photography, as in all Goldwyn photoplays, is excellent, and its cast is competent throughout."

Grand & Warner will build a new exchange building at 265 Franklin street, Buffalo. The structure will be three stories in height, cost $45,000, and be ready for occupancy soon after the first of the year.

Joseph Kozanowski, owner of the Rivoli theatre, Buffalo, died last week, following several weeks' illness.

The new Hodkinson exchange in Buffalo is now at 145 Franklin street with the following personnel in charge: Howard J. Boyle, branch sales manager; J. L. Daly, office manager; Marion Gueth, booker; Alice Carroll, stenographer; John Gentille, shipper, and Alberta Fabisch, film inspector.

KANSAS CITY

Kansas City exhibitors not only offered every accommodation possible to Legionnaires during the recent national convention of the American Legion Convention, but the Film building, Seventeenth and Main streets, was equipped with 600 cots and used for sleeping quarters by former service men who were unable to find hotel accommodations. In brief, 600 men returned to their various communities with a good word for the film industry.

M. Parkhurst, former bookkeeper at Pathe's Kansas City branch, has accepted a position as office manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation's Kansas City branch. Thomas E. Dodd succeeded Mr. Parkhurst in the Pathe office.

Calvin Rice is the latest addition to the sales force of the Crescent Film Company's Kansas City office. He will cover southwestern Kansas.

Ben Westerhoff is now covering northern Missouri for Universal, having been transferred from the southwestern Kansas territory, which is now being covered by J. C. Maxwell, formerly with the Kansas City Machine & Supply Company.

Separate offices have been established by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, the Kansas City Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, which formerly occupied one suite of rooms in the Film building, Seventeenth and Main streets. The Missouri organization has established its headquarters on the eighth floor of the Gloyd building, Tenth and Walnut streets. The Kansas City exhibitors have leased space on the sixth floor of the Film building, while the Kansas organization has obtained offices in Kansas City, Kansas.

CANADA

Vincent McCabe of Toronto, formerly Canadian general manager for the Fox Film Corporation, has become established as the general manager for Canada of the Associated First National. McCabe has appointed W. S. Jones of Winnipeg, formerly general supervisor of Fox in Western Canada, as the Winnipeg manager of First National.

Bernard Allen, father of Jule and J. J. Allen and president of the Allen enterprises at Toronto, has arrived in Wninipeg, Manitoba, for his first visit since his tour around the world. He was scheduled to remain in Winnipeg for several weeks during which time important developments will be undertaken.

J. M. McClure has been appointed manager of the Allen theatre at Winnipeg.

Stephenson Productions, Toronto, handling a number of Curwood specials and independent attractions for Canada, has been incoorporated under an Ontario Provincial charter.

J. Welch of Winnipeg, Manitoba, identified with several film exchanges during a number of years, has gone to Calgary, Alberta, where he has opened a branch office of the United Artists' Corporation. He will serve as western representative of the organization, the headquarters of which are in Toronto under the direction of J. Cranston.

CLEVELAND

A. W. Goff, for many years prominently connected with the distribution of motion pictures, died in Cleveland early Wednesday morning, November 9, at the Statler Hotel. Heart failure was assigned as the cause. The body was taken to Pittsburgh for interment. Mr. Goff is survived by his widow, two children, his mother and sister.

M. J. Weisfeldt, manager of the Cleveland Fox exchange, has turned his responsibilities over to Robert Cotton, as he is going to London to assist in the distribution of Fox films in the British Isles.

Mr. Cotton was formerly Vitagraph manager in Minneapolis.

J. R. Johnson, for five years associated with Vitagraph as manager of the Cleveland exchange, is now in command of the Robertson-Cole forces in this territory. Mr. Johnson is one of the veterans of the film business.

The local W. W. Hodkinson exchange is all settled in its own quarters, 316 Film Building, and announces the personnel of its organization as consisting of Herbert Ochs, sales manager; M. J. Schiesel, office manager; J. H. Cosley, booker, and Helen Bell, secretary.

Carl Hohage has been appointed to fill the newly created position of booking manager, for the local office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

George J. Schade of Sandusky, and one of the most prominent motion picture exhibitors in the state, was elected commissioner last Tuesday by a majority vote of 2,266. The announcement of his victory was carried to him in his office of the Schade theatre. He was swamped with congratulations and was only permitted to go home after he had made a speech in which he promised to be as good a commissioner as he is a motion picture exhibitor—and that's going some!

Al Goldman, formerly salesman for the local Fox organization and more recently connected with the home office, is back in Cleveland and will cover the Toledo territory for the local Fox exchange.

MICHIGAN

William Fox announces that arrangements have been completed in this territory for an "Over the Hill" week to be held in December with 20 theatres already lined up to play this production for one week.

John H. Kunsky opened "Disraeli" for a run at the Adams theatre Sunday, November 6th, and expects to hold the picture at least two weeks. It will be followed by Mary Pickford in "Little Lord Fauntleroy." The Fox-Washington theatre played four weeks of "Way Down East" and changed last Saturday to "The Queen of Sheba," which, it is expected, will run six weeks.

PORTLAND, OREGON

Paul E. Noble, for two years manager of Portland's largest cinema, the Liberty theatre, has been transferred temporarily by Jensen and Von Herberg to Butte, Mont. The transfer came following the purchase by the J. and V. H. firm of the American theatre, largest competitor to the Rialto theatre in the Jensen chain. Noble was sent over to take the management of the Rialto, to close the American and supervise extensive enlargements and improvements which are now taking place. He will remain in Montana until the formal reopening of the American.

The Portland board of motion picture censors have condemned the showing of Emmett Dalton's "Beyond the Law." Dalton declares the picture was made to show young men the foolishness of trying to live beyond the law. Dalton is remaining in Portland endeavoring to get out an injunction against the censor board and to test the law in regard to the board's authority.

OKLAHOMA CITY

Three representatives of the Federated Churches at Paris, Texas, appeared before the city council and asked for the appointment of a board of censors for Paris. It was agreed that a board consisting of two men and a woman would be appointed, to serve without salary.

The city censor board at Houston, Texas, has requested the manager of the Princess theatre at that place, to make a change in the costumes being worn by the girl ushers from trousers to dresses.

The board at present has no authority as to dress worn by ushers, but the mayor and city council has, and their aid in the premises may be invoked.

Charges have been filed in the corporation court, Oklahoma City, against five Houston, Texas, motion picture theatre managers, alleging violations of the Sunday-closing laws. The charges are signed by Rev. H. K. Moorehead, pastor of the North Side Methodist church. The men named are William Horwitz, Iris theatre; C. A. McFarland, Queen theatre; Sam Abrams, Crown theatre; Gabriel Laskin, Cozy theatre, and E. A. Greenblatt, of the Isis.

The church people claim that they will endeavor to stop all theatre-showings in Houston on Sunday in the future.

Fire in the Lyric theatre at Jefferson, Texas, last week, resulted in the loss of six reels of films and two machines damaged. James Smiley, the operator, was slightly injured. A fire proof booth saved the destruction of the building.

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

"The Three Buckeroos" a State Right Series

THE DIRECT FILM CORPORATION announces this week that "The Three Buckeroos" is under preparation by Fred J. Balshofer. "The Three Buckeroos" is a series of two-reel Western subjects, each complete in itself, although continuing the adventures of the same set of characters.

Twelve pictures are in the series, and they will be released at the rate of one every two weeks. The stories concern the adventures of three itinerant cow-punchers known as "The Three Buckeroos." The pictures will be offered on the State Right market by Direct Film Corporation.

TruArt Productions to Make Six Features

With Ora Carew in the stellar role, the Becker Tullar Tru Art Productions have been filming the first of a series of six dramatic features for the independent market. The largest unit of the Hollywood studios is now being used by this concern and present conditions indicate for continual production until at least three of the productions have been completed before efforts to market them will be made.

The working title of the first feature is "The Power," and was written by Sherwood McDonald. Miss Carew's support consists of Walt Whitman, Theodore von Eltz, Milton Ross, Charles Spere, Verna Brooks, S. D. Davidson and little Gloria Joy. Fred Becker, formerly associated with Fred Niblo, is directing.

Sport Pictorial Titled "Arms and Legs"

Arrow announces that the title of the next Sport-Pictorial will be "Arms and Legs."

Jack Eaton, the producer and Grantland Rice, the editor, feel that they have produced a most attractive and unusual picture in this latest Sport-Pictorial. The subject, as the title indicates, treats of the important part played by arms and legs in various sports, such as baseball, boxing, swimming, tennis, auto racing, and in fact all kinds of sports and seeks to prove which are the more important members, arms or legs.

Hirsh Prepares Campaign

"Oh Mabel Behave" to Be Launched With Many Exhibiting Novelties

AN exhaustive publicity campaign has been arranged for the first release of the newly incorporated Photocraft Productions, of which Nathan Hirsh is president, entitled "Oh, Mabel Behave." Every conceivable novelty ranging from campaign buttons, mirrors, "Put and Take" games and stickers to a specially composed Fox Trot and song bearing the same title as the picture, have been prepared. The Fox Trot is said be of very catchy, irresistible rhythm and three verses of appropriately humorous lyrics. The song is being published and syndicated by Jack Mills, Inc., the well known publishers of popular musical successes, and arrangements have been made with all music stores throughout the country for sales campaigns a week or two before play dates of the picture, thereby arousing public interest in and demand for both the picture and the song.

The Otis Lithograph Company is preparing a widely assorted variety of eye-arresting and business compelling lithographs consisting of 4 styles of 1 sheets, 3 styles of 3 sheets, 3 styles of 6 sheets and 24 sheets. An innovation in design of beautifully hand colored artistic 11 x 14 and 22 x 28 photographs, and exquisite oil paintings are being made by the Kraus Manufacturing Company. An elaborate 16 page, two colored press book of distinctive design, replete with the most up-to-date exploitation suggestions will be mailed to exchanges upon request.

An Independent Impetus

"His Nibs" to Prove Co-operation Between Producer and Distributor

L. L. HILLER, president of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., which is selling the first Charles (Chic) Sale—Exceptional Picture, upon the State Rights market, has issued a statement this week which concerns the producer, distributor and the exhibitor. He said:

"Lack of unity and the harmonious working of each of its individual elements have been the only factors which up to the present time have kept the State Rights or Independent endeavor in motion pictures from taking the fore in the industry. Such statements as have been issued to the effect that the independent field is lacking in productions, that the state rights exchanges are not making money, that when they do get pictures they are not of sufficiently high calibre to serve as competition to nationally released productions, and many other remarks of like nature, are merely specific factors which are embraced in the first general reason to which I attribue their possibility of existing.

"To anyone who has given serious thought to the opportunities afforded by the state rights market there can be no other answer than the concise facts stated above.

"Obviously, the solution is to unify all the factors. But how? Theorizing on the subject might lead one into various channels—an experience that will probably guide us more easily. I refer particularly to the new ideals inaugurated in the independent field by Exceptional Pictures Corporation. Not satisfied with merely deciding that the state rights man should have 'His Nibs' Exceptional got behind the picture to assure him of a success after he bought it—they will use full-page advertising in the Saturday Evening Post to tell the public about it, they have assembled the greatest line of accessories ever offered with a picture.

"What will be the result? 'His Nibs' will probably be one of the greatest succeesses the State Rights man has ever handled.

"But the results of this kind of co-operation will not cease there—it will have a double-edged effect. The success will not only mean that Exceptional will probably have more 'Chic' Sale pictures for the independents, but other producers will get busy to furnish the kind of productions they want.

"And then the results will go further toward the upbuilding of the independent market. Every buyer who obtains this and other similar pictures will not only be getting the pictures they want, but will be assuring every other independent producer that he can expect the backing of the independent exchange man when he has to offer a production that warrants support.

"The market needs good pictures, the legitimate producer wants to make them, Exceptional has led the right way—let others follow for the good of all."

Lesser Sells $1,500,000 of Independent Film

IRVING M. LESSER left for Los Angeles this week. The general manager of Western Pictures Exploitation Company 20th Centuried himself out of the Grand Central Terminal with film contracts calling for over $1,500,000 worth of his independent film products now being produced on the West Coast.

All of the products contracted for by Lesser and Rosenberg will be produced in Los Angeles during the next six months. Nine production units are busily engaged in creating their respective productions. The Western Pictures Exploitation Company can well be regarded as one of the largest distributing and releasing organizations in the independent territory.

Mr. Lesser stated he would add several more units to his already large list and that within ninety days fifteen units will be filming pictures for his distribution service.

Wm. Alexander Sails for Europe

William Alexander, president of the Alexander Film Corporation, is sailing on Wednesday of this week for London to go over several matters with Sir Oswald Stoll relative to the distribution in the United States and Canada of all his well known book subjects they are now making at the new Cricklewood studios.

Dorothea B. Herzog Becomes Editor

Dorothea B. Herzog, formerly a publicity representative and more recently a reviewer for one of the trade papers, has been promoted to the editorship of Movie Weekly. Miss Herzog joined this publication last February as an associate editor and her promotion comes after months of live wire editorial and interviewing work.

Among Miss Herzog's best known articles, in addition to her Movie Weekly contribution, are a series of four motion picture articles run in Munsey's Magazine dealing with different phases of the industry.

J. S. Jossey on Tour

J. S. Jossey, Arrow's special representative, who has been spending a few weeks at the home office, left Saturday on a special trip through the territory.

"Tarzan" Sales Drive Is Near Successful Close

It is stated by Louis Weiss, of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, that December will mark the close of the sales campaign in behalf of the serial, "Adventures of Tarzan," starring Elmo Lincoln and Louise Lorraine.

This sales campaign, which started last July, was preceded and supplemented by a trade paper advertising drive which covered the entire field. A feature of the exploitation campaign lies in the fact that consistent advertising support has been given every state right exchange purchasing "Adventures of Tarzan" and a direct-to-the-exhibitor campaign has also been maintained in the interests of the serial buyers by the Tarzan organization.

Monty Banks Comedies Meet with Approval

The three latest Monty Banks' comedies, "Fresh Air," "Squirrel Food" and "Cleaned and Dry," are said to be meeting with unusual favor with exhibitors because of their wholesome and entertaining screen qualities.

"Fresh Air" presents Mr. Banks in an up-to-the-minute fun fest, and is said to contain a surprising number of original gags to keep it going at top speed to the final fade-out. "Squirrel Food" has met with favorable trade press reviews. "Cleaned and Dry," the latest Banks' Federated-Warner release, will furnish considerable entertainment for golfers, artists, and other allied arts.

Guterson Writes Score for "Hail the Woman"

The music score of Thomas H. Ince's "Hail the Woman" soon to be released by First National was arranged by Mischa Guterson, one of America's foremost symphony orchestra leaders. Mr. Guterson's services were secured by Thomas H. Ince through special arrangement with Sid Grauman.

Hurry Work on "Mysterious Pearl"

TO take advantage of the immediate demand by exhibitors for serials with which to stimulate business, and get the new Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber production, "The Mysterious Pearl," into the hands of Independent exchanges at the earliest possible moment, E. S. Manheimer has rushed the preparation of the elaborate advertising matter which will herald the sensational subject to theatre patrons so that everything is now ready for its immediate release.

All of the fifteen episodes have been completed and are cut, titled and ready for the screen. The one sheets, three sheets, six sheets and lobby photographs on the first three episodes are finished including a special twenty-four sheet, while the accessories for the whole set of thrilling chapters are so far advanced in work that their completion is only a matter of a few days.

Novel Trade Show Staged

Grace Davison, Arrow Star, Hostess to Philadelphia Exhibitors

AN unusual and decidedly different trade showing was given in Philadelphia by the De Luxe Film Company on Wednesday, November 16th, at which some very distinguished guests appeared.

One of Philadelphia's exclusive clubs was selected and invitations were sent direct from Miss Grace Davison, the star of "Love, Hate and a Woman," an Arrow picture, to exhibitors, newspaper men and trade journals in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. After the showing of the picture, Miss Davison addressed the exhibitors.

Miss Davison was accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Reene. Representatives of practically every newspaper and trade journal were present, some coming from New York especially for this occasion, among which were James Beecroft, of the Exhibitors' Herald; Messrs. Fritz Tiddin and Frank Armato, of the Motion Picture World; Roger Ferri, of the Exhibitors' Trade Review; Fred J. Beecroft, of the Motion Picture News, and F. V. Sully, of the Exhibitor. Practically every newspaper in Philadelphia was also represented. Mr. Ray Johnson, Vice-President and General Manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, and G. Charles Davis, 2nd, attended. The Stanley Company was represented by their General Manager, Frank Buhler, Jay Mastbaum, Abe Einstein, Jack Delmar and Henry Nugent.

Some of the most prominent Pennsylvania exhibitors who were present were: Dr. Schadd, of the Carr and Schadd Enterprises of Reading, and John Cook, his general manager; Green and Altmon, of Philadelphia; Sam and Nathan Stiefel, Jack Rosenthal, Herbert Hustler, Marcus Benn, Allen Benn, Ben Shindler, of Camden; Elliott Goldman, Ben Fertel, Al Fischer and Milton Rogasner

"The Jungle Goddess" Is Sold Abroad

The Export and Import Film Company, Inc., owners of the world rights to "The Jungle Goddess," the new Selig fifteen episode animal-jungle serial now in production on the West Coast, announces the sale of the biggest block of foreign territory thereon, the United Kingdom.

The name of the buyer has not been divulged. It is stated that the sale was made on the strength of Selig's past performances in animal serial production, aand his personal promises to make "The Jungle Goddess" his serial masterpiece.

According to an official of the Export and Import Film Company, most of the remaining foreign territory is being negotiated for and contracts thereon are expected to be closed shortly.

No statement has yet been made regarding American distribution arrangements on "The Jungle Goddess."

Rapf Prepares Premiere of "School Days"

Harry Rapf left last week for Chicago to attend the premier showing at the Sherman Hotel on November 27th of Gus Edwards' classic, "School Days," starring Wesley Barry, to be distributed by Warner Brothers.

Following the premier at the Sherman, Mr. Rapf will immediately return to New York to launch the initial Eastern presentation at the Astor Hotel on December 1st.

Joe Brandt to Release Chas. Ray Two Reelers

Interesting word for the Independent market comes this week with the announcement of the offering for distribution on the States Right market, of a series of two-reel features starring Charles Ray. These features have been secured by Joe Brandt, who will, he announces, personally superintend their release. They were made before Mr. Ray's present affiliation with First National.

In addition to Charles Ray the cast includes Louise Glaum, Clara Williams, J. Barney Sherry, Frank Borzage, Enid Markey, Jack Nelson, Joe Dowling and Ray Laidlaw.

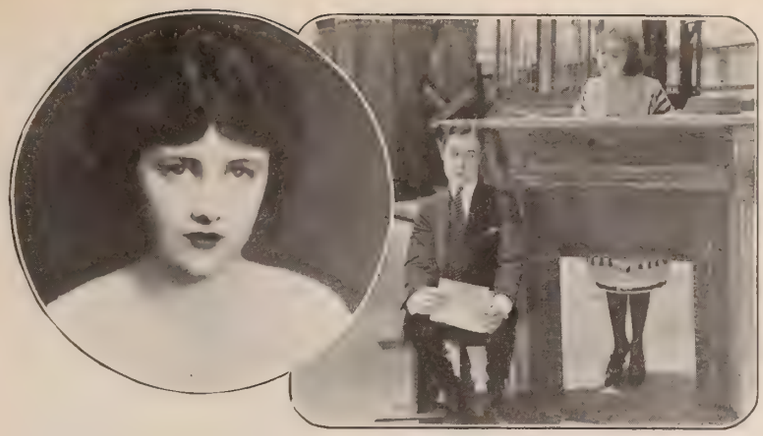
Kineto Subjects Earn Critic's Praise

A Nashville, Tenn. critic writing in the Nashville Tennessean about the program at the Knickerbocker theatre in that city writes with great enthusiasm about those Urban Popular Classics which are released as Kineto Reviews.

One of his latest editorials says: "For the last few weeks the Knickerbocker has been putting on a series of Kineto Reviews, educational films they may be called, produced in so charming a variety of subjects and with such perfect handling that they have added a distinct pleasure, as well as value, to the screen programs of this theatre."

Kopstein Makes Flier to Cleveland

Jaques Kopstein, sales manager for the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., and other motion picture corporations, returned Saturday from a flying trip to Cleveland. Jaques left New York on Tuesday evening for the Forrest City, where he transacted a multitude of business in a couple of days. Upon his return the "sales king" of the Independents stopped off in Rochester for a night.



Two Territories Sold on Warner Features

Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, recently closed two deals on two productions, "Ashamed of Parents" and "Parted Curtains," featuring Henry B. Walthall and Mary Alden, according to an announcement this week.

"Parted Curtains" and "Ashamed of Parents" were purchased for the entire New England territory by the Federated Film Exchange of Boston, and the latter production for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware by the Metro Film Exchange, of Philadelphia.

Foreign Sales Reported on Chester Comedies

The William A. Vogel company announces that on the Chester Comedy series, the following territories have been sold to various buyers; Spain and Portugal, South Africa, the West Indies, China, Federated Malay States, Dutch East Indies, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador, Holland and Mexico.

In the oval, Faire Binney, featured in "The Girl from Porcupine," the second of the James Oliver Curwood dramas offered by Arrow Film. To the right are Eddie Barry and Vera Reynolds, appearing in Arrow-Broadway comedies

Unique Serial Promised

Col. Selig's Greatest Effort to Be Put Into "The Jungle Goddess"

IN a letter received at the Export and Import Film Company offices from Col. Wm. N. Selig, who is producing the new fifteen episode animal-jungle serial, "The Jungle Goddess," for the aforementioned company, the Colonel promises new things in this "wild-animal" drama.

"In 'The Jungle Goddess,'" states Selig, "you are are going to have an animal film the like of which has never been screened. To start with I have a story very much out of the ordinary. Elinor Field and Truman Van Dyke are showing by their work that they are two top-rank stars. They make a splendid co-starring combination. Miss Field's beauty and charm and Van Dyke's manliness together with the acting ability of the pair will alone lift this serial out of the usual run of chapter pictures.

"From the jungle-serial angle the Selig animals are going to offer a surprise. 'The Jungle Goddess,'" claims Selig, "will be the first serial in which the animals will be forced to 'act' their parts. The Selig Zoo with its 473 animals contains scores of them which have been trained for many famous acts.

"In 'The Jungle Goddess' we will not show jungle beasts running back and forth in front of the camera as in the case of the ordinary serial. Selig animals have been trained for acts, and they will be forced to 'act' in this serial. We have called in our best acts from the road in order to utilize the animals.

"'The Jungle Goddess' may be depended upon to make serial history. It will be the greatest animal picture I've ever made," concludes the Colonel.

"Pasteboard Crown" Ready

Travers Vale Production Elicits Commendation; from Clara Morris Story

The screen version of "A Pasteboard Crown," founded upon the novel by the internationally famed actress, Clara Morris, produced under the auspices of Messrs. Nathan & Semerad and directed by Travers Vale, is complete. The production, in the process of manufacture, excited considerable comment in the motion picture trade, but will undoubtedly be the source of much conversation within the next few weeks, pending distributing arrangements.

Messrs. Nathan & Semerad, after witnessing the completed product, were lavish in their praise, stating that the results were even beyond their expectations and ambitions.

"We became interested in motion pictures some time ago," stated Mr. Nathan, "at which time Mr. Semerad and myself were discussing the merits and demerits of motion pictures we had seen. Our views became of vital interest to us and we decided in order to substantiate our combined opinions that the public were really thirsting for clean, wholesome, yet vitally interesting screen drama of a calibre in line with the same sort of literature, that we would enter the producing field.

"Subsequently we learned that Travers Vale owned the rights to 'A Pasteboard Crown.' We were delighted, it being the very kind of book that we believed would adapt for the screen admirably."

Elaborate Revue for "School Days"

Harry Rapf, motion picture producer, has prepared a thirty-minute revue, composed of talented youngsters from Gus Edwards' company, to precede the preview presentations of "School Days," starring Wesley Barry, in Chicago, on November 27, and at the Astor Hotel, New York, on December 1. This is said to be the first time that a revue has been used in conjunction with the initial showing of a motion picture.

Independent Prosperity Seen by S. J. Rollo

On his recent trip through the Central West, Mr. S. J. Rollo, general manager of the Clark-Cornelius Corporation, reports that the trend of conditions in the motion picture business points toward a great improvement in both the exchange and exhibition phases from the independent standpoint.

"I found a great improvement," said Mr. Rollo, "in conditions on the tour, as compared to what I found in my July and September trips. The exchanges I visited, I believe, reflect the condition of their various sections and I should say from the indications about these offices and from my conversations with the various managers things are steadily climbing into better shape."

"In Pittsburgh I found a pronounced optimistic note throughout the film colony. This condition also prevailed in Detroit and Cincinnati."

On this trip Mr. Rollo disposed of the territory on a number of his pictures. In Chicago he sold the two-reel Leo Maloney series of Western pictures to Si Brevier for Illinois and "Under Two Flags" to Commonwealth Pictures Company for the same territory.

Wide Distribution for "The Lure of Jade"

"THE Lure of Jade," Pauline Frederick's new starring vehicle, which is regarded by R-C Pictures as one of its most important releases for the month of November, is being awaited by many of the representative houses of the country, including the entire Loew circuit. It is the claim of the R-C Sales forces that "The Lure of Jade" will be one of the most widely distributed subjects of the year.

Bible Productions Embrace Thirty Subjects

FURTHER details relative to the film version of the Old Testament which Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation is now making ready for presentation, both in the theatrical and non-theatrical field were divulged this week by Louis Weiss. The entire production was made under the direction of Antonio Gariazzo, responsible for some of the more ambitious of the Ambrosio film spectacles. The conceiver and producer of the project is Armando Vay and among the many hundreds of principals are some of the leading stage and screen players of Italy, France and England.

The following episode from the Old Testament form part of the film: Creation, Garden of Eden, Cain and Abel, Noah's Ark, End of Flood, Tower of Babel, the Patriarchs, Sodom and Gomorrah, Essau and Jacob, Joseph and His Brethern, Selling of Joseph, the Book of Ruth, the Shulamite Woman (which is but part of an elaborate film version of the Songs' of Solomon), the Exodus, etc.

Plan New York Run for "Burn 'Em Up Barnes"

If the plans of Charles C. Burr, president of the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., go through (and there is no reason they should not) his feature picture, "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," starring Johnny Hines, will soon have a run in New York City. This photoplay has had phenomenal success in parts of the Middle West, Canada and the South, and there is every reason to feel that such a feature should repeat such a success in New York. Johnny Hines is known to every movie fan in New York.

His comedy in the Torchy stories have endeared him to every one—especially the young folks who have read the Sewell Ford stories. When Mr. Burr took it upon himself to feature these stories in the films, he met with considerable criticism, several people stating they would never prove popular. Well, the answer has been that Johnny Hines has filmed nearly a quarter of a hundred and they are even more popular. From Central and South America Mr. Burr has received letters regarding the popularity of the Torchy comedies.

There is every reason why "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" should make his entry into New York. People like to see new productions presented in a new manner. Every producer has his own ideas as to what he considers the best way to present his product, and so has Charles Burr. Just at present he is planning much and saying little. He knows one thing that is sure to come true, and that is "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" is going to have a peek in on the "big town."

Sherlock Holmes Series

To Publish Story of Each Episode to Aid Pictures' Exploitation

THE Alexander Film Corporation announces that it has closed contracts with the John H. Eggers Company, Inc., for the distribution of five million copies of Sherlock Holmes stories. Alexander Film is offering this series on the state right market. The stories to be published are: "The Beryl Coronet," "The Man with the Twisted Lip," "The Resident Patient," "The Dying Detective," "The Devil's Foot," "A Case of Identity," "A Scandal in Bohemia," "The Noble Bachelor," "The Yellow Face," "The Redheaded League," "The Copper Beeches," "The Empty House," "The Tiger of San Pedro," "The Priory School," and "The Solitary Cyclist."

These stories will be made up at a cost whereby the exhibitor will be able to give thousands of copies away to his patrons one week prior to the showing of the episode, announces Alexander. In addition to the books, the Eggers Company are now making up a deduction card to fit each episode. The subject matter on these cards have been written by Sir A. Conan Doyle for the exploitation of his Sherlock Holmes series, states Alexander.

Floyd St. John, owner of the Cooperative Film Exchanges of San Francisco and Los Angeles, has contracted with Alexander to release the stories for California, Arizona and Nevada.

The Alexander Film Corporation will release these subjects through their own exchange for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

Seven Weeks on Broadway

"Nature's Babies," Kineto Review, Still Running at Criterion

"NATURE'S BABIES," the Kineto Review which is now in its seventh week at the Criterion theatre in New York, is one of the most apt examples of the Charles Urban idea—that to get the finest results in true educational pictures there is essential a variety that can only come from many sources.

Mr. Urban believes that motion pictures require a wide range of contribution and that the success of the picture depends mainly on its editorial treatment.

In the case of "Nature's Babies," the material comes from probably a dozen different photographers in many parts of the world. Their material is all assembled in the Kineto editing-rooms and out of all of it comes the reel in its final form.

"It is very much like the work of the serious reporter," Mr. Urban says; "the reporter who goes not to one source of information, but to as many sources as he possibly can and then after he has gathered all the information there is to be had, sifts it, retaining only the best and the most interesting.

"Nature's Babies" is a picture which depicts the parental instincts of birds and animals. The principal contributors to the material in it are Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the New York Zoological Society, F. Percy Smith, a London scientist who has been making pictures for Charles Urban for more than fifteen years; and Arthur H. Fisher, a well-known naturalist-photographer. Other photographers, in England and America and on the Continent in Europe are also represented therein.

Jackie Coogan Pictures Will Involve $15,000,000 in Receipts

DURING the various discussions pertaining to the distribution of the five Jackie Coogan productions, some interesting figures have been brought to light. Careful figures show that on the five pictures there will be over $15,000 000 in receipts and that the rentals will run close to the $5,000,000 mark—all in a period not exceeding twelve months.

"My Boy," being finished and about ready for distribution, Jackie is hard at work on his next story under the direction of Jerome Storm. The new story is a plumbing yarn laid in the tenement district of New York City. Jackie will still wear his old tatters that he introduced us to in "The Kid" and that he has on in "My Boy."

Sol Lesser, vice-president of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., is still in New York working on the national distribution angle for the entire Coogan series. When closed, this deal will represent one of the biggest in the history of the motion picture business and will involve as much if not more money than any other transaction of its kind. Mr. Lesser expected to be at his desk in Los Angeles by Thanksgiving but urgent business affairs have kept him fast to Manhattan. He plans to return home early next week with contracts on the Coogan matter signed, sealed, and delivered.

Meanwhile the Strand theatre management is making extensive arrangements for the initial showing in New York City Christmas day.

Inter-Globe Export Corporation announces the sale of the first year's Associated Exhibitors' output for the United Kingdom.

Second Davis-Brandt Feature Offered

THE second of the George H. Davis-Joe Brandt Independent feature productions under their own producing organization, Quality Film Productions, Inc., is on the way. Actual production work on the new feature was completed this week, it is announced, and the picture, which bears the title, "Life's Greatest Question," is on the way East where it will be ready for distribution within the month, after final editing under the personal supervision of Mr. Brandt.

Like "The Heart of the North," the new feature "Life's Greatest Question," is also a Harry Revier production, having been made under the direction of the French-Canadian who understands so well how to inject into a picture the action and swift movement, the lure of the open places. Roy Stewart and Louise Lovely are featured in the new production. One of the main points of interest regarding the picture is the introduction to the American screen public of Dorothy Valegra, famous continental and screen star.

Arrow Product Is Sold in South

Announcement was made by the Arrow Film Corporation of a sale consummated by the Big Feature Rights Company of Louisville, Ky., for the following Arrow product:

"Luxury" and "The Way Women Love," starring Rubye de Remer; "Headin' North," starring Pete Morrison; "The Stranger in Canyon Valley," starring Edith Sterling; "Watching Eyes," Arrow's novelty feature, starring Kiki, the wonder dog. "The Star Reporter," starring Billy Rhodes, and "The Man who Trifled," featuring an all-star cast.

These productions were purchased for Kentucky and Tennessee, while the same firm purchased three Dustin Farnam re-issues for the state of Tennessee, and Arrow's new super-serial, "Man of the North," starring Ann Little, for the state of Kentucky.

This contract was negotiated by Arrow's special representative, Clinton M. White, who started out on the road last week.

Sarg to Caricature the Golfing Public

The seventh issue of Tony Sarg's Almanac will be a caricature of the golfer, announces Mr. Sarg. The subject will be known as "The Original Golfer" and will show the caveman golfer meandering about the prehistoric links. The famous match between Niblickus Stonehenge and Mashus Flintpebble will be illustrated. With five million golfers in the United States, it is believed that such a subject cannot fail to please.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Gunning Organization Add to Office Space

THE rapidly expanding activities of Wid Gunning, Inc., necessitated the taking over this week of 2,000 additional square feet of floor space on the sixteenth floor of the Loew Building at 1540 Broadway. The new offices will be used by the exploitation department, which has had piled onto it a vast amount of work by the speeding up of the Wid Gunning's specials. It is planned to take over the entire floor the first of the year.

Selznick Foresees Big Year in Australia

All evidences point to 1922 being a banner Selznick year in Australia and the entire Antipodes, according to a statement from the offices of the company. While the progress made in that territory during the past three years has been more than gratifying to Selznick, the prediction, based on contracts already signed, is that the volume of business to be transacted during the present season will far exceed that of any other in the history of the company.

John C. Jones, general manager of Selznick's Australian branches, reports that the middle of the season will find Selznick pictures playing in seventy-five per cent of the theatres in the territory. No less than four first-run houses have been secured in Sydney, a record so far for the film business in that country, it is claimed.

Cincinnati Welcomes "Three Musketeers"

The United Artists release, "The Three Musketeers," with Douglas Fairbanks as star and producer, drew capacity crowds to all performancse at the Capitol theatre, Cincinnati, and also won the emphatic praise of the reviewers.

"If 'The Three Musketeers' were not already internationally famous, Douglas Fairbanks' screen adaptation of the French classic would make it so," wrote the critic for the Cincinnati Enquirer. "'The Three Musketeers' with Douglas Fairbanks is not only a great picture—it is stupendous," declares the critic for the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune. "In 'The Three Musketeers' Douglas Fairbanks undeniably has given us his masterpiece. It is the greatest picture he ever produced," says the critic for the Cincinnati Post.

Metro Aids Picture Go Big

Special Exploitation Forces Help Exhibitor Clean Up With Specials

SHARING credit with the appeal of the pictures themselves is the fact that Metro is sending out with all its biggest productions special exploitation forces. This has been the case with the Rex Ingram productions, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "The Conquering Power," and with Nazimova's modernized version of "Camille."

Metro has not only delegated special orchestras, and, in many instances, players to enact atmospheric prologues to these photo plays, and so presented the attractions to their best advantage on the screen; but has been rendering no less support to the exhibitor in the box-office by the assignment to territories throughout the country of expert exploitation and publicity men.

So successful has the practice been of working shoulder to shoulder with the showman that it is understood Metro will continue the policy in all forthcoming productions whose importance warrants it. "Turn to the Right," the Rex Ingram production of John Golden's stage success, a play by Winchell Smith and Jack Hazzard; and the young director's present work, "The Prisoner of Zenda," based on Anthony Hope's novel, fall into the class of photoplays meriting extraordinary exploitation.

There are in practically every district in the country Metro experts whose sole duty it is to aid the exhibitor and the exchange manager put over big productions with maximum box-office success. For example, in Chicago, B. B. Perkins is working with S. R. Shirley, district manager; Louis R. Brager is joining forces with W. C. Bachmeyer, district manager in Cincinnati; and Edward Rosenbaum, with Atlanta for his headquarters, has been aiding materially the work of C. H. Kessnich, Metro's district manager there. These are but a few.

Fox Releases for December

"Queen of Sheba," After Broadway Run, Now Ready for Exhibitors

LEADING the list of Fox Film Corporation releases for December is "Queen of Sheba" which ran for months on Broadway, New York City, as a pre-release attraction. It is the most recent of Fox super-special productions and was made under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards from the story by Virginia Tracy. It is a spectacle drama of splendid pageantry and massive settings, and embodies the love story of the Queen of Sheba—portrayed by Betty Blythe—and King Solomon, played by Fritz Lieber, the noted Shakespearean actor.

The other releases include productions starring Tom Mix, William Russell, Charles Jones and Eileen Percy, special comedies with Clyde Cook, and Al St. John, four Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons and two Sunshine Comedies.

The Tom Mix release for the month is "Trailin'" based on a story by the celebrated Max Brand. The picture was directed by Lynn F. Reynolds. William Russell will be seen in another story of love and adventure entitled "The Roof Tree," written by Charles Neville Buck. The scenario was prepared by Jules G. Furthman and the direction was by Jack Dillon. Sylvia Breamer plays the feminine lead.

"Whatever She Wants" is the December release starring Eileen Percy.

Ass'd. Exhibitors Releases

Playgoers Picture, DeHaven Production and Lloyd Comedy in Dec.

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS releases for December include a Playgoers feature, an Associated comedy drama and a Harold Lloyd production, in the following order:

December 4—A five-reel Playgoers Picture feature, "The Ruse of the Rattler," starring J. P. McGowan.

December 11—The Associated Exhibitors offering in the six-reel Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven comedy drama, "Marry the Poor Girl."

December 25—Christmas Day, Harold Lloyd's four-reel Associated Lloyd comedy, "A Sailor-Made Man," will be released.

New Exploitation Dept. for "U" Exchange

MARC LACHMANN has been placed in charge of the special exploitation and publicity department created by the Universal Big "U" Exchange for exhibitors playing all Universal productions.

This department, it is announced, will assist the exhibitor in exploiting and promotion public interest in the Universal - Jewel Features, Special Attractions, Century and Star Comedies, serials, weeklies and other products of the Universal organization.

Special campaigns have been devised on the various attractions, it is declared, and Lachmann will render exploitation suggestions and put over actual exploitation for the exhibitor. He will prepare ad copy and publicity matter and execute stunt campaigns, etc., in advance and during the run of the picture, it is stated.

"Black Beauty" Still Does Fine Business

It is now just a year since Vitagraph's screen version of "Black Beauty" was released. During that time it has been shown in nearly every district in the United States and Canada, and the end is not yet.

Only recently Film Stories devoted fifteen pages to a fictionized version of the motion picture. Duplicate orders were also placed at a recent date for every unit of advertising copy, including the two 24-sheet stands and elaborate press-books.

"Gilded Cage" Secured for Gloria Swanson

"The Gilded Cage," a story by Ann Nichols, which this season was seen on Broadway as "Love Dreams," a comedy with music, has been bought by Paramount as a starring vehicle for Gloria Swanson. It is expected that the picture

New Story Selected for Marie Prevost

"The Dangerous Little Demon," an original story by Mildred Considine, well known scenarist and story writer, has been purchased by Universal for Marie Prevost, the former bathing comedy beauty who now is starring in Universal Special Attractions.

Big-Four Branch for Australia

THE first of the executives to represent the United Artists Corporation in Australia and New Zealand have left New York for their far distant posts and will open offices in Sydney, N. S. W., Melbourne, Vic., Wellington, N. Z., Brisbane, Queensland, and Perth. In the party were Geoffrey Nye, who will be the managing head of the Australasian offices, Mack Whiting and Mrs. Whiting and John O'Donoghue.

On their arrival in Australia, there will be a corporation duly organized, which will be called United Artists (Australasia) Ltd., and which will be owned by Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith.

Geoffrey Nye, who heads the party, is an Australian by birth. He has been associated closely with the picture industry almost since its inception in that country, and has held responsible executive positions in both exhibition and exchange departments. Mack Whiting has been for the last four years associated with the D. W. Griffith Corporat'on as special exhibition manager. Mr. Whiting goes to the Australian work fresh from the triumphs met in handling "Way Down East" and with still vivid recollections of similar success with "Broken Blossoms" and other Griffith features. John O'Donoghue is also an Australian. He recently resigned as general manager of the Australasian branch of the Paramount corporation. His up-to-date knowledge of and connections with exhibitors, what they want and what they don't want, should prove of material aid in placing the new organization at the very top.

Mr. Abrams, president of the United Artists Corporation, is very enthusiastic over the certain success of the new project in the Antipodes. Mr. Nye, when asked for a statement outlining the general policies of the new company, said he thought Mr. Abrams had a real message for the Australian exhibitors. Mr. Abrams' statement was to the effect that "the organization in all countries will deal directly with tthe exhibitors by the single picture only. The booking of each production will constitute a separate and distinct transaction, so that at no time will there be any obligation that will prevent an exhibitor from running his own affairs in his own way, free from the dictates of those whose sole business it should be to serve him.

"Open booking has been talked about for years and so-called open booking plans have been tried and tried again. Genuine open booking has not been attempted before on a broad scale because producers and distributors lacked confidence in their product.

"I have sounded out every type of exhibitor on every phase of film rental. To everyone with whom I have discoursed the matter, it is so obvious that the program system and the star series system are for the 'weak pictures' on release lists, that I marvel that producers and distributors persist in these practises when the entire industry knows why they exist.

"It is unsound business to force weaker attractions on to an exhibitor's program as a premium on the rental of a good attraction. Exhibitors should not be obliged to play inferior shows as part of the price of getting superior films, nor should big stars be penalized by making them carry the load of lesser attractions.

"We intend to market our productions in Australia and New Zealand individually. Picture for picture. Each production on its own merits. We will not contract for more than one picture at a time, and no exhibitor will be obliged to run one set of pictures in order to procure the releases of another artist."

Prizma Competes with News Weeklies

PRIZMA claims to have set a new record in the motion picture industry by successfully competing with news weeklies in covering an event of national importance. The pictures showing the burial of America's Unknown Soldier at Washington, D. C., made in Prizma color, and shown at the Capitol theatre, New York, is the film which establishes this record, states Prizma. It is stated that the Capitol theatre used more than 500 feet of Prizma film and only 75 feet of black and white negative. This was selected by Manager Rothafel from the great amount of negative submitted to him by the news weeklies.

Producers Security Reports Bright Outlook

The activities of the Producers Security Corporation puts the so-called present business depression to flight. This organization is releasing several big pictures among which is "The Right Way," Thomas Mott Osborne's story. The Producers Security Corporation also announces that Lee Francis Lybarger's "Soul of Man" is in great demand and many first-run bookings are scheduled.

The new Apfel series, personally directed by Oscar Apfel, is reported as being one of the best sellers of the year. The first of the series, "Trail of the Law," is being allotted to territories, and the second, "The Man Who Paid," featuring Wilfred Lytell, is in preparation.

Plan World-Wide Film Survey

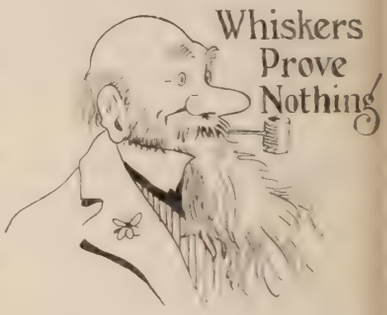
BLAZING a trail in the field of research, Thomas H. Ince has inaugurated a world survey of motion-pictures, according to an announcement this week from the Ince studios at Culver City, Calif. It will be the most exhaustive inquiry ever undertaken into the public reaction to picture entertainment for it will extend to every civilized country on earth, declares a statement from the Ince headquarters. Its results will be tabulated by a corps of experts who have already been installed at the studios to analyze and digest the mass of information which the survey will develop.

Mr. Ince has undertaken this stroke of research to determine future policy in the production of big pictures for release by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., although the general results of his survey will be made public for the benefit of the whole motion picture industry, it is declared.

Mr. Ince proposes to find out exactly what the public wants by its rather indefinite demand for "bigger and better pictures." Although few men in the industry have kept their fingers as closely to the public pulse as he during his successful career as a producer, he proposes to establish as scientifically as possible the public taste, world-wide, in picture entertainment.

The Ince staff and the experts who have been called in to conduct the survey have prepared a questionnaire which will be submitted to editors throughout the world, and from the replies to the thirty questions which the questionnaire includes, the information will be tabulated.

The questionnaire covers a wide range. It seeks to determine the effect of pictures upon community life, upon mental development, upon politics; the attitude of the community, the school and the church toward pictures; the development of visual education. It seeks to determine what the public thinks of present picture standards, seeks to compare the existing standards of pictures and the present popularity of picture entertainment with the standards and the popularity of the legitimate drama, and carries a tabulation wherein it is sought to determine the personal views of the editors and their judgment of public opinion on various types of screen entertainment.



"What is the criticism of the motion picture most often made?"

"What will be the future development of motion pictures?" "Is the general complaint of the screen treatment of well known stories justified?" "What is meant by the perfect screen drama?" "Has the motion picture stimulated a keener interest in American institutions?" "In science?" "In the great outdoors?" are some of the questions asked.

"We have gone to the editors of the world for the answers to our questions because we believe that the editor knows more about the people today, and what they think than any other person," said Mr. Ince, in announcing his survey. "Of all the classes and professions the editor is in a position to judge most accurately just what it is that the public wants.

"It is apparent that the spirit of the rennaissance is upon this world of people and things. I think it behooves those who have the guidance of human endeavor in their hands to look about them and to note the new demands if the art industry is to remain the big factor in the world's education and entertainment it has been during the last few years.

"I am asking thousands of editors representing millions of readers to help me find the definite demands of the people."

Exhibs Make Fine Use of Gunning Ad Copy

The value of the advertising copy in the press sheets which Wid Gunning, Inc., is issuing on their new pictures is shown in the wide use being made of it by exhibitors and the fact that they are using extra space when they get the Wid Gunning mats, declares a statement from the Gunning corporation.

Among Mr. Gunning's first instructions to his publicity and advertising department were: "Cut out the fluff. Give the exhibitor real showman's ads., not pretty piffle dreamed out by copy writers and art directors who know nothing of theatre problems."

The result, states the Gunning headquarters, has been a chorus of unsolicited praise from exhibitors in every part of the country who write in voluntarily to say: "You've hit the right angle. Your service is real service. We can quit worrying about our advertising problems when we book one of your pictures."

Riesenfeld Books "The Bashful Suitor"

"The Bashful Suitor," second in the series of Triart two-reel productions based on the paintings of great masters, has been booked for a pre-release showing at the Rialto theatre, New York, beginning Sunday, December 4th, according to an announcement from the W. W. Hodkinson offices this week.

"The Bashful Suitor" is adapted from the theme suggested by Josef Israel's painting entitled "The Bashful Suitor," the original of which now hangs in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City. The leading roles in the story are played by Mary Brandon and Pierre Gendron. It was made under the supervision of Herbert Blaché, as dramatic director, and Lejaren á Hiller as art director.

"Over the Hill" Sets Record

Plays 26 Theatres in Detroit, Day and Date

A NEW record in motion picture exhibition has been established in Detroit this week by the simultaneous exhibition at twenty-six theatres in this city, of one attraction, "Over the Hill." These twenty-six theatres are playing this sensational William Fox success on the "day-and-date" basis for the entire week of November 20th to 26th inclusive. Twenty-five of the theatres are in the city of Detroit and its environs, and one of the theatres is a suburban house at a point within commuting distance.

What makes this simultaneous showing in twenty-six Detroit leading theatres, both in downtown and neighborhood districts, the more impressive is the fact that "Over the Hill' has just concluded a memorable run of seven weeks at the Washington theatre in Detroit, in the course of which it smashed every record of that popular playhouse, according to advices from the William Fox home-office.

"In various large centers of population there have from time to time been small day-and-date runs of dramatic subjects in which a few theatres were concerned. Seldom has this number approached even half of the total of twenty-six. On the other hand short features, such as comedies, with special pulling power, have been booked in a large number of theatres for day-and-date exhibition, but never have even the short-reel subjects totaled a number of twenty-six day-and-date week engagements. Amazing, then, as a tribute to its popularity must be regarded this achievement of 'Over the Hill' in playing twenty-six well known theatres in one city for a simultaneous run of one week in each theatre.

"Detroit is a city of approximately one million population. As is generally known, this center of industrial activity had been reported as in a very depressed state due to the closing down of many manufacturing plants engaged in the automobile and kindred industries. This alleged depressed condition in Detroit, however, was not sufficient to deter a majority of its leading theatres from booking 'Over the Hill' for immediate showing when an opportunity arose for them to contract for that enormously popular attraction.

"The theatres participating in this week's engagement of 'Over the Hill' are the following: The New Home with a capacity of one thousand seats; the Gratiot, 1,400 seats; the Lakewood, 800 seats; the Ritz, 620 seats; the Arcade, 500 seats; the Stratford, 1,000 seats; the Grand Victory, 600 seats; the Farnum, 700 seats; the La Veeda, 600 seats; the Acme, Merrick, Ferndale, Dix, Crescent, Delray, Duplex, Medbury, Myrtle and Fleur de Lys, seating from 400 to 500 each; the Dawn with 1,000 seats, the Park, Central and Crystal 800 each; the Drury Lane with 500 seats; the Majestic with 390 seats and Strand with 1,600 seats.

"This amounts to a grand total of 16,500 seats in popular motion picture theatres available to audiences who are flocking to see 'Over the Hill' shown continuously during picture-theatre hours at the twenty-six houses named.

"Fox Film Corporation supplied through its Detroit branch twenty-six brand new prints of this most popular of subjects for use in Detroit on this occasion. This, however, was only the beginning of a campaign of cooperation maintained by Branch Manager W. D. Ward of the Fox company and the managers of the various theatres showing the picture. Previously the Detroit Exchange had supplied to all of the theatres the fullest complement of lithographs and other advertising accessories in order that each house should have the greatest opportunity in working up its patronage for the big event.

"A special exploitation agent inaugurated a publicity campaign two weeks in advance of the day-and-date showing. Although Detroit theatre patrons were well informed regarding 'Over the Hill' on account of the previous seven weeks' engagement of this attraction at the Washington theatre, no opportunity was lost to let the people of the city know that this popular photoplay would again be with them and would be available to all sections of the city through twenty-six of its playhouses.

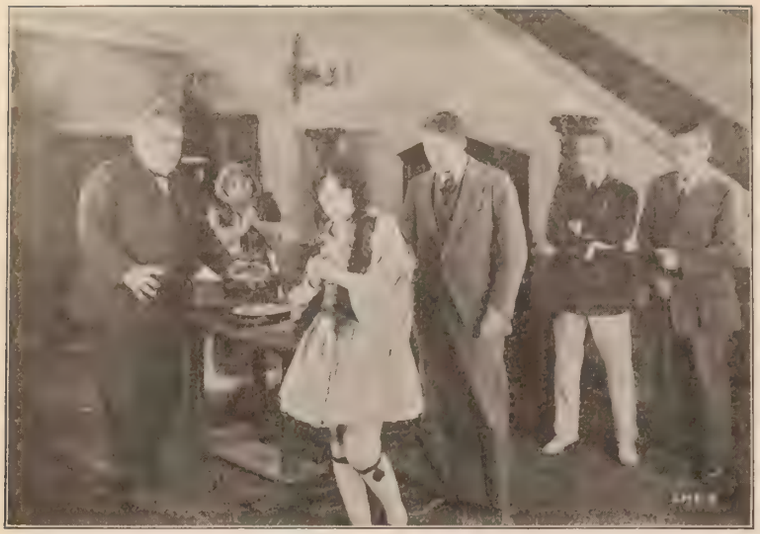
"The Fox company and theatres combined in special advertising, which ran for a week prior to the opening in all papers, and which broke in the Sunday papers on the first day of the engagement for a half page space. The smaller advertisements had occupied seventy lines by four columns. Teaser ads were also run in all the papers and special stories in the form of readers and features were used by the newspapers in anticipation of 'Detroit's greatest screen event.'

"The results of this day-and-date engagement will be followed with great interest by theatre managers throughout the country, and for that reason there will appear in the pages of this magazine next week an article recording the success of the engagement and describing its various phases in detail. At the present writing complete receipts are known for only the first day of the run, and these figures reach a total amount far in excess of the expectations of either Fox Film Corporation or the managers of the various houses concerned."

"Battle of Jutland" Premiere

"THE BATTLE OF JUTLAND," to which the New York World refers as "an invaluable animated chapter of the great war which every person interested in the great sea conflict should see," had its American premiere at the Rialto theatre in New York, Sunday, Nov. 20. Special musical accompaniment was arranged by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, for this feature.

A single print of the picture, which had been in preparation in England since the armistice, was brought to this country recently by E. R. Russell of Ideal Films of London. After the week's run at the Rialto the picture is to be turned over to Educational Film Exchanges for distribution in America. The negative is on the way to New York, and Educational plans to release the picture as soon as possible after it arrives.



This remarkable picture, based on a long study of all records, published or unpublished, of the great naval conflict, has unusual significance at this time, being shown while the Conference on Limitation of Armaments is meeting in Washington. In addition to being an important picture from a history recording standpoint, it is looked upon as a striking lesson in just how fast millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money can be sent to the bottom of the sea.

The widespread public interest in the subject of disarmament at this time, with the meeting of the Washington conference; the presence in this country of Lord Beatty, hero of the Battle of Jutland, and the consequent recurrence of discussion about this great fight, all help to provide unusual opportunities for exploitation of this subject.

Through the courtesy of Dr. Riesenfeld, Captain Carl T. Vogelgesang, Commandant of the Third Naval District, with headquarters at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, his aid, Lieutenant J. D. Pennington, and a group of naval officers designated by them, saw the picture during its run at the Rialto. On the evening of Monday, Nov. 21, the board of governors of the Army and Navy Club, naval officers and representatives of the press went to the Rialto from the Army and Navy Club in a body to see the picture as the guests of Educational.

The New York World declared the picture "a reproduction effective in that it sets before us the actual maneuvering of the various craft, of the Battle of Jutland, wherein Admiral Beatty out-thought and outfought the Germans in the World War's great sea engagement. Small models of ships have been used in its making. The minutest detail of the attacks is shown—submarine launching, battleships sinking, gun fire from the giant warships and all. Here is an invaluable animated chapter of the great war which every person interested in the great sea conflict should see."

"It is extremely interesting and worth while," declares the New York Morning Telegraph.

R. S. Cole Month a Success

Biggest Bookings in R-C History, Announces Distribution Manager

RETURNS from branch offices throughout the country during the first two weeks of November, which has been dedicated by R-C pictures to its president as R. S. Cole Month, indicate that the campaign covering that period will be by all odds the most successful in point of bookings in the history of the organization, according to Chas. R. Rogers, general manager of distribution.

"We are intensely gratified," assented Mr. Rogers, "by the deep personal interest many of the exhibitors are showing in R. S. Cole Month. They are seizing the opportunity to show not only their high regard for many of our releases but also their respect for Mr. Cole personally and the high business principles for which he stands.

With Pauline Frederick, Sessue Hayakawa, and Doris May, not to mention productions made by William Christy Cabanne and L. J. Gasnier, playing in many of the big key points and in the more remote sections as well, R. S. Cole Month also signalizes the release of three important R-C subjects. They are "The Lure of Jade," starring Pauline Frederick, released November 13; "Possession," the French production produced in Europe by Louis Mercanton, to be released November 2, and "Silent Years," a Gasnier production, with an all-star cast, to be sent forth on November 27.

Miss Frederick has seldom had a vehicle of such high dramatic power as "The Lure of Jade," according to the criticisms of R-C executives who recently inspected the production at the home office. The story was adapted from the novel "House of Glass," by Marion Orth and reveals intimate glimpses of navy life in the naval bases of the Pacific Coast.

"Possession" comes to this country with a fine record achieved in all the big cities of Europe. "Silent Years," is based upon the novel "Mam'selle Jo," by Harriet Comstock and was produced by Gasnier. It is a drama of the St. Lawrence River valley and depicts a gripping story of life among a group of rugged folk who are quick to love and hate.

Pathe Releases for Dec. 4

First "Sunshine Sammy" Starring Picture Heads Short Subjects

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces that "The Pickaninny," a two-reel comedy starring the diminutive colored comedian, "Sunshine Sammy," produced by Hal Roach, will head the list of short subject features scheduled for release December 4.

"Hare and Hounds," the eleventh episode of the new Pathe serial, "Hurricane Hutch," starring Charles Hutchinson, gives the "stunt star" numerous opportunities to display his daring and originality in the thrill line. "Somewhere in Turkey" is the current reissued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. The spectacled comedian is not only supported by Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard, but is also surrounded by a choice collection of beautiful harem girls in lavish settings in the Sultan's palace. "The Hustler" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. The comedy is a decided burlesque on the methods of bootleggers in outwitting the wily revenue officers. "Snub" is assisted in the offering by Marie Mosquini, Noah Young, and the staff of Hal Roach comedians.

"The Fly and the Ants" is the new animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables," produced by Fables Pictures, Inc., and created by Cartoonist Paul Terry. Pathe Review No. 132 presents a number of interesting subjects. It includes "Steaming up Mt. Washington" "In the Emperor's Tea Gardens" showing some interesting scenes at Kobata Ugi.

Trade Audience Views "Bride of the Gods"

More than eight hundred motion-picture actors and actresses, exhibitors, producers and writers comprised the audience which saw the pre-view of "A Bride of the Gods," a First National attraction produced by J. L. Frothingham, at the New Wilshire theatre in Los Angeles on Monday night of last week. It was the best attended showing of its kind ever held in the film capital, and the demand for tickets far exceeded the supply.

"A Bride of the Gods" will be released in the late winter or early spring through the First National exchanges. It is a story of the mystic Orient, with Marguerite De La Motte playing the titular role.

Eugene O'Brien Guest at Authors' League

Eugene O'Brien, Selznick star, was a guest of honor at the second semi-annual dinner held by the Authors' League Fellowship at the Hotel Astor, Sunday evening, November 20.

The entertainment was in the form of graduation exercises of the "Authors' High School," with Channing Pollock officiating as "school teacher." Eugene O'Brien was one of the "boys." Mr. O'Brien, Irene Castle, Pearl White and Anita Loos had a turn of their own, appearing as a class in dramatic expression.

All United Artists Releases for New House

Not only did the management of the new Aldine theatre, Philadelphia, choose the Douglas Fairbanks' special feature, "The Three Musketeers," with which to open their handsomely appointed home, but announcement is now made that all pictures of the United Artists Corporation will be presented at the Aldine, as well as those of other stars in the firm industry who have become identified with United Artists.

First Nat'l Honors New Star

Adopts Dick Barthelmess Into First National Family

RICHARD BARTHELMESS, star of "Tol'able David," was adopted with all due ceremony as a "son of Associated First National Pictures" at a formal dinner given at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on Tuesday, November 15th, 1921. The occasion was hailed as a symbolization of the cordial, co-operative spirit existing between First National and its producing organizations.

President Lieber, on behalf of the franchise holders, made an informal address of adoption, and received the star of "Tol'able David" into the First National family, holding aloft the declaration of adoption with its seal to which he and Mr. Barthelmess had affixed their signatures whille the photographer of the occasion recorded the impressive act.

It was at the conclusion of an old-fashioned southern dinner that the news of "Our Dick's" adoption became known, and the one hundred or more guests of the organization, including franchise holders, British exhibitors, representatives of Inspiration Pictures and members of the trade press cheered and applauded the ceremony.

The "Adoption" dinner was much more than a local New York occasion. In addition to several original franchise holders who attended the dinner from distant parts of the United States, franchise holders and their wives, from New England, New York State, New Jersey and Pennsylvania were at the tables.

"Tol'able David," which is Richard Barthelmess' first star vehicle for Associated First National Pictures, was given its first public showing to the guests of the evening. Just before the picture commenced, blank cards with pencils attached were given to each of the franchise holders present, and they were asked to write their opinions and criticisms of the picture at its conclusion.

The consensus of opinion was enthusiastically in favor of the production, and the guests of the evening were practically unanimous in declaring that never before had a new star been known to offer so finished and so powerful a picture as his initial vehicle.

"Richard Barthelmess as 'Tol'able David' cannot be surpassed. The cast is excellent and the settings perfection. A 100 per cent picture of its kind."—Herbert A. Gillman, Dorchester theatre, Dorchester, Mass.

"A picture the most critical and hardened movie fan will have to have his handkerchief ready for. Entertainment as complete as anyone can hope to enjoy."—Irving Rose, Union Hill, N. J.

"A wonderful picture."—H. B. Varner, Lexington, N. C.

"Marvelous picture. Should go big. Acting all that could be desired."—Daniel D. Bader, Point Breeze and Lincoln theatres, Philadelphia.

"Full of heart appeal and a wonderful punch."—H. J. Schadd, Reading, Pa.

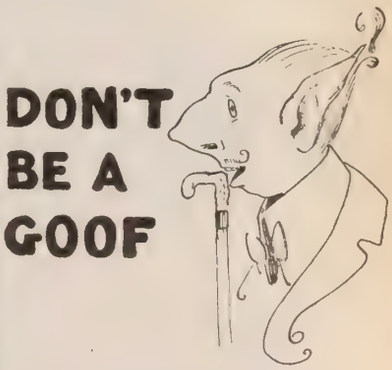
"Marvelous. Exciting. Pleasing. Entertaining. Everything that a picture should be."—Harold B. Franklin, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y.

"A picture that will touch the hearts of all, and it sure will be a box-office winner."—Charles Segall, Philadelphia.

"It gives me great pleasure to state that in my opinion the acting, scenes and photography are wonderful and the story very good."—Louis Bollinger, Summit theatre, W. Hoboken, N. J.

"The sterling acting of Dick Barthelmess is an outstanding feature of this red-blooded American drama. It is a story of a 'go-getter' and has a popular appeal that should make it a good box-office atraction."—Louis F. Blumenthal, National & Central theatres, Jersey City, N. J.

Mabel Normand Honored by Her Associates



November 10th proved a day of surprises to Mabel Normand, the star of the Mack Sennett production, "Molly 'O." November 10th is Mabel's birthday, but that of course was not the surprise. The first surprise consisted in the flood of congratulatory letters and telegrams that fairly swamped the star on the morning of the tenth. The second surprise was the unexpected reception awaiting Miss Normand, when, in response to her producer's invitation to dinner, she arrived at the Mack Sennett residence. Her studio associates were there in force to greet her, and one of the rooms was filled with beautiful presents from her co-workers. After the reception, the party motored to the Mission theatre, and there the star was given her third surprise. The theatre was handsomely decorated in her honor, and a special program was staged, including the showing of "Molly 'O."

M. R. Rosenthal Goes to Walkerville, Ont.

M. Rosenthal has left the management of the Allen's Capitol theatre, Cleveland, O., to assume the direction of the Walkerville theatre, Walkerville, Ont. Previous to his association with the Allen house in Cleveland, Mr. Rosenthal had been manager of the Allen houses in Peterborough and St. Catharine, Ont.

"Superstition" for Pioneer

European Picture to Be Released as a Special in U. S. and Canada

NEGOTIATIONS have been completed by President A. E. Lefcourt of the Pioneer Film Corporation, for the acquisition, by Pioneer, of the European superproduction titled "Superstition," which was made in France. The picture has a cast of upwards of 1,500 people and the production period covered over nine months. Mr. Lefcourt has acquired the rights to "Superstition" for the entire United States and Canada, and plans to release "Superstition" as a special through all Pioneer Exchanges in every key city in the country.

The advertising and publicity departments of Pioneer have started preliminary work on "Superstition," and plans have been completed for an elaborate campaign which will include the syndication of the story of fan magazines and newspapers throughout the country. A large appropriation has been set aside for advertising and special bill board space will be purchased in all important cities. New York City will have special outdoor displays and posters are being prepared on a more elaborate scale than anything ever attempted. Pioneer has assigned a staff of special artists to the work of preparing powerful sketches for its posters.

Lobby displays of magnitude are being assembled for "Superstition" and no expense is being spared in the execution of details in this connection. Mr. Lefcourt has given instructions to all departments of Pioneer's Home Office to "go the limit," in giving exhibitors every possible assistance. He points out in a special memorandum to the heads of all departments that the independent field has its biggest opportunity today through the release of photoplays of unusual merit, and he believes that "Superstition" will head the list of independent releases for the year.

Stories Chosen by Realart

4 New Stellar Vehicles Selected; Additions Made to Writing Staff

NEWS received from Realart's home-office during the week is concerned chiefly with the activities of the Realart scenario staff on the Coast. Announcement is made that Will Payne, well-known novelist and short-story writer, has sold a story to Realart and will work with Fred Meyton in preparing the scenario:

Elmer Harris, supervising director for Realart, announces the line-up of coming productions for the four stars under his supervision, as follows:

Constance Binney will have a story from the pen of Aubrey Stauffer of Realart's scenario department, which has been scenarized by Wells Hastings.

Bebe Daniels will do a story by Winifred Warner of which the adaptation has been made by Percy Heath.

The next Mary Miles Minter picture, scheduled for Spring release, was written by Mary Morrison and is being adapted by Harvey Thew.

These productions are as yet untitled. The directors who will have them in charge, though not assigned as yet to individual stars, include Edward Le Saint, Frank Urson and Thomas Heffron.

Greatly increased production at the Realart studio has made it necessary for Mr. Harris to add still another scenario writer to his constantly growing staff. The newcomer is Thomas J. Hopkins who entered motion pictures four years ago as a scenarist for Ince, later working for Neal Hart, Henry Walthall and Selznick

Double Premiere on B'way

"Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" at Rivoli and Rialto December 4th

GREATLY impressed by the importance of the production, Hugo Riesenfeld has decided to present "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" at two Broadway theatres simultaneously. The Cosmopolitan production will, therefore, be seen at both the Rialto and Rivoli theatres beginning Sunday, December 4.

Ever since Cosmopolitan Productions first made it known that it intended bringing to the screen the famous characters of J. Rutus Wallingford, "Blackie" Daw and the people of Battlesburg there has been displayed by the motion picture industry and the public a keen desire to see the result, Wallingford being what might be called a national character of fiction, there is in the minds of many men and women a feeling of acquaintanceship with the master promoter.

Because of the opportunities for character portrayal inherent in the screen play, as adapted by Luther Reed from some of the Wallingford stories and the stage play by George M. Cohan, the producing company felt that here was a vehicle in every way suited for the fine talents of Frank Borzage. The director proved in "Humoresque" that he knows human nature—and better still, knows how to bring out its lights and shadows, its subtleties, its foibles on the screen. Borzage's direction of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" has more than fulfilled the promise of "Humoresque."

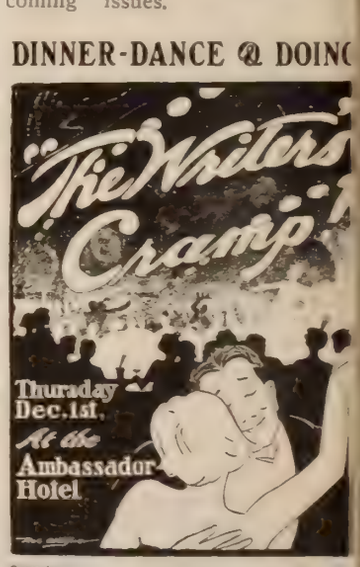
Those who have seen "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" in the projection room have praised it from many angles. It is described to be laughable and engrossingly interesting; it has a fine love story, is a brilliant exposition of frenzied finance, but above all, they have said, it is memorable because of its sterling Americanism. It is a picture based on American stories and an American play, about a Middle Western American town and concerning American people.

Tearle Completes Series

Group of Six Features Finished "Man of Stone" Current Release

WHILE Conway Tearle has been appearing in "The Mad Dog" at the Comedy theatre, New York, as a star under the Shubert management, the producing forces under direction of Myron Selznick have completed the entire issue of photoplays for the Tearle star series under the "Forty from Selznick" promised for this season. There are six productions in the entire series, one of them already released and a second feature scheduled for immediate distribution.

"After Midnight" started the Tearle series for the season, Zena Keefe then contributing her talents as leading woman in a Ralph Ince presentation that thus became a three-star offering. "The Man of Stone," now in circulation, is the second in the set of six Tearle features, which will finally includue "Love's Masquerade," "A Wide Open Town," "The Referee" and "Shadows of the Sea."



"The Man of Stone" comes to the screen with a story by John Lynch and Edmund Goulding as its basis. Lewis Allen Browne provided the scenario, and George Archainbaud directed the presentation. The story involves incidents in English army life, starting with scenes in London society and finishing in the Arabian desert where Tearle, as an English army officer, has gone to forget a love affair. There he comes under the care of an Arabian girl who nurses him through the aftermath of too much brandy and soda—and a new love is awakened.

Martha Mansfield and Betty Howe and the two women around whom the plot swirls and the other supporting players include Colin Campbell, Warren Cook, Arthur Barry and Charles Brown. The desert scenes were taken at Tangier Island, in Great South Bay, Long Island, during the past summer and a large company of "extras" engaged in battle scenes, feats of horsemanship and cavalry charges with results that fill the Arabian scenes with color and action.

"Love's Masquerade" by Edward J. Montagne, was directed by William P. S. Earle. Winifred Westover is Mr. Tearle's leading woman and the support includes Florence Billings, Robert Ellis, Daniel Hayes and Robert Chaebbl.

Ralph Ince directed both "The Referee" and "A Wide-Open Town," two more of Tearle's forthcoming issues.

Paramount Announces Nov. 27th Releases

ON November 27 Paramount will release Jack Holt's first starring picture, "The Call of the north," and the Cosmopolitan production, "Enchantment," starring Marion Davies.

Joseph Henabery directed "The Call of the North," which is an adaptation of Stewart Edward White's novel, "Conjuror's House." The screen version is by Jack Cunningham. The picture was photographed in the mountains of Northern California, where some virgin locations were found which proved to be of surpassing scenic beauty.

Playing opposite Jack Holt is Madge Bellamy, while others seen in the support are Francis McDonald, Edward Martindel, Helen Ferguson and Jack Herbert.

"Enchantment" introduces Marion Davies in what has been pronounced her best role to date. It is a captivating story, based upon "Manhandling Ethel," by Frank R. Adams, the scenario being by Luther Reed. Robert G. Vignola directed.

Miss Davies' leading man is Forrest Stanley, and Edith Shayne, Tom Lewis, Arthur Rankin, Emmet Foy, Corinne Barker, Maude Turner Gordon, Edith Lyle and Huntley Gordon are prominent in the support.

College Tie-Ups Aid "Two Minutes to Go"

The successful tie-up which the New York Strand Theatre recently effected with local colleges during its presentation of Charles Ray's "Two Minutes To Go" proved its value again in Cincinnati, Ohio, and Greenwood, Mississippi last week. Ike Libson, manager of the Walnut theatre in Cincinnati gave special showing for the football men from the University of Cincinnati, and in Greenwood, Manager G. F. McCormick of Saenger's Greenwood had as his invited guests the opposing elevens of the University of Mississippi and the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College who were staging their annual contest in Greenwood. Both tie-ups were eminently successful and the college idea for exploiting Ray's football subject bids fair to have a wide adoption, it is stated.

New Vehicle Secured for Marie Prevost

"The Dangerous Little Demon," an original story by Mildred Considine, well known scenarist and story writer, has been purchased by Universal for Marie Prevost, the former bathing comedy beauty who now is starring in Universal Special Attractions.

"Fightin' Mad" Is Released

METRO has set forward the release of "Fightin' Mad" from the original date, December 5, to Metro Week, the period from November 20 to 27.

This change in the schedule of distribution is declared to be a reflection of the eagerness of exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada to have in their houses at the earliest possible opportunity the big outdoor super-special, with its whirlwind story by H. H. Van Loan, and the array of screen talent in its cast, including William Desmond, Rosemary Theby, Virginia Browne Faire and William Lawrence.

There has been, from the earliest announcement from Metro that it had arranged to place "Fightin' Mad" upon its list of releases for December, a series of special requests from exhibitors, both in the larger cities and the towns of the country, that the picture, if possible, be sent out from the Metro exchanges at an earlier date.

The very number of these inquiries concerning "Fightin' Mad" made consideration of the idea imperative. Metro had felt, when it added "Fightin' Mad" to its schedule, that it was a picture eminently timely. The response from exhibitors supported that belief with unmistakable strength.

One exhibitor in Ohio wrote: "We've had too much in the general market recently of vague, problematical pictures. Let's have something we can sink our teeth in. Let's have a red-blooded picture, with a wallop; with a story that moves and never stops moving. I've had a glimpse of a part of 'Fightin' Mad.' It looked good to me, so good that I'd like to ask you to release it during Metro Week."

This communication is in the spirit of countless others. Exhibitors, remembering the sweep of last year's Metro Week, are determined to attempt the assault upon 1920's high records of attendance throughout that period; and they point out that no better beginning could be made than by running a picture that, like their business during the seven days, would start with a rush and never slacken its pace.

"Fightin' Mad" is an adventurous romance of the border country, being in the main the career of a restless young man with a personality in keeping with his name, Bud McGraw. It is an action story from first to last, a two-gun, two-fisted, galloping drama of the lawless country and a girl who ventured into it. The cast is remarkable, embracing as it does William Desmond, Virginia Browne Faire, Rosemary Theby, Doris Pawn, Joseph J. Dowling, William Lawrence, Emmett C. King, William J. Dyer and others equally prominent on the screen. It was produced by William Desmond Productions, under the personal supervision of Robert Brunton. The story is by H. H. Van Loan, author of "The Virgin of Stamboul." Joseph J. Franz directed and Harry A. Gersted photographed it.

Universal's December Releases

UNIVERSAL announces a strong list of Special Attractions for release in December. The forthcoming pictures include five-reelers by such stars as Gladys Walton, Herbert Rawlinson, Marie Prevost, and Hoot Gibson.

"A Parisian Scandal," an adaptation of "Princess Virtue" by Louise Winter, is to be Universal's first December release. It is a starring vehicle for Marie Prevost, and gives her, in the role of a young American girl raised in Paris, exceptional chances to portray the baby vamp type which she is making famous on the screen. It is said to be a fit successor to "Moonlight Follies" and "Nobody's Fool," her first two Universal specials.

"A Parisian Scandal" was directed by George Cox, from a continuity by Doris Schroeder. Tom Gallery plays the principal supporting role. Others in the cast are Mae Busch, Bertram Grassby, Lillian Rambeau, George Fisher, Madame Rose Dione, Lillian Lawrence and George Periolat.

"Barry Gordon," William F. Payson's popular novel, has been adapted to the screen in a strong photoplay with Herbert Rawlinson in the leading role. It is called "Cheated Hearts," and will be the second Universal December release. Marjorie Daw will be seen in the leading role opposite Rawlinson. Doris Pawn also plays an important part. Hobart Henley is directing the picture, which also is laid partly in Paris. Warner Baxter, Anna Lehr, Winter Hall, Hector Sarno, Josef Swickard, Boris Karloff, and Al and Murdock McQuarrie are in the cast.

"Cheated Hearts" is very different from Rawlinson's previous Universal Special Attraction, "The Millionaire," but is said to contain a powerful punch, as well as considerable of the same kind of humor which the star put into "The Millionaire" so successfully.

Gladys Walton's latest picture, to be the third December release on the Universal schedule, is "The Sandman," from a delightful story by J. U. Geisy. It is now being filmed under the direction of Dallas Fitz Gerald, with Hal Cooly and Harold Miller in the chief supporting roles. It probably will be released under a new name.

Universal last December Special Attraction will be "The Fire Eater," starring Hoot Gibson. It is an adaptation of Ralph Cummings' western story, "The Badge of Fighting Hearts." Reaves Eason, who directed many Harry Carey successes, is in charge of "The Fire Eater." Louise Lorraine, remembered in many Universal two-reel westerns, and as a Century Comedy star, is Hoot's leading lady.

Paramount in Tie-Up with Publishers

Special co-operation between publisher and film producer has been arranged by the Paramount publicity department for "Miss Lulu Bett," the Zona Gale novel, which William De Mille has produced as a Paramount picture.

The popular book, now in its thirteenth printing, will be issued hereafter by D. Appleton & Co. in a jacket designed by A. M. Botsford, Paramount advertising manager. Four scenes from the photoplay appear on the cover of the book, which also carries the text, "This is an Appleton Book" and "It's a Paramount Picture."

Under the direction of Jerome Beatty, director of Advertising and Publicity, press books, one sheets and publicity portfolios have been turned over to the Appleton selling forces, who are showing them to bookdealers for their Christmas trade. Appleton salesmen are urging their customers to get in touch with the local Paramount exchanges in arranging window displays and other book tie-ups.

Author Lauds Screen Version of Story

At an author's and publisher's showing of "Silent Years" from the novel "Mam'selle Jo" by Harriet Comstock, at the R-C projection room this week, splendid tributes were paid to the production and to Louis J. Gasnier, the director, for the skill with which he translated this moving tale of a woman's heart from the printed page to the screen.

Mrs. Comstock following the showing, declared:

"Rose Dione is a perfect 'Mam'selle Jo.' No better type of woman could have been selected for this rugged, sterling, finely fibred woman of my dreams. It seemed that she lived again on the screen as she lived in my thoughts while I wrote her story."

Russell Doubleday, of Doubleday, Page & Co., publishers of Mrs. Comstock's novel said:

"It is a picture that should win immediate approval of the motion picture fans," Mr. Doubleday said. "It is gripping, it is affecting, and it is powerful."

Sixth "Theodora" Unit Opens in Boston

THE sixth company showing Goldwyn's Italian film spectacle, "Theodora," opened on Monday night last at the Shubert theatre, Boston, at the $2 top scale. It received in that city the same high praise for its scenic splendors and its powerfully dramatic story that it did in every other city where the film has been shown.

The New York engagement at the Astor theatre is now in its sixth capacity week, and from present indications will continue there for a long run.

"Theodora" is also being shown at the $2 top scale at the La Salle theatre, Chicago; the Michigan theatre, Detroit; the Pitt theatre in Pittsburgh, and the Colonial theatre in Cleveland.

Title of Talmadge Subject Is Changed

Announcement was made this week by Associated First National Pictures that the Norma Talmadge picture, produced under the working title of "Regeneration Isle" has been renamed "Love's Redemption." It will be released December 19th.

The picture was directed by Albert Parker and was adapted by Anthony Paul Kelly from Andrew Soutar's novel, "On Principle." The cast includes Harrison Ford, who was Miss Talmadge's leading man also in "The Wonderful Thing;" Montagu Love, Cooper Cliffe, Mabel Bert, Michael M. Barnes, Fraser Coulter and E. Fernandez.

Renco Picture Praised by Hodkinson Staff

"At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern," made by the Renco Film Company, for release by Hodkinson, was voted "the most entertaining feature that the Hodkinson reviewing staff has seen, in many months," following a showing of this picture at Simplex projection rooms last week. It was immediately decided to move ahead the release date from late next March to the first week in January.

Ralph Lewis Again in Metro Production

Ralph Lewis, whose portrayal of Pere Grandet, in Rex Ingram's "The Conquering Power," has given him a unique place on the screen and again has attached his name to a Metro contract. This time he will be seen with Viola Dana in the Harry Beaumont production of "The Five Dollar Baby."

In the screen version of this Irving S. Cobb story, Mr. Lewis will appear as an elderly pawnbroker whose trials provide a big part of the comedy.

Chas. Baker Heads Vitagraph Scenario Dept.

WITH the news that the connections of George Randolph Chester with the Vitagraph Company have been severed, comes the announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, that he has appointed Charles Graham Baker to succeed Mr. Chester as editor-in-chief of the scenario forces.

Mr. Baker's promotion comes as a well earned reward for years of exceptional services, during which time he has become known as one of the leading photoplaywrights in the country. As associate editor for two years he has had the selection, purchasing and adapting of stories for all the Vitagraph stars, under his personal supervision. Harry Dittmar has been appointed as the associate editor.

Changes in Paramount Exploitation Staff

Max R. Doolittle, for the past year Paramount exploiteer at the Des Moines Exchange, succeeds George Schor as publicity director of the Criterion theatre, New York.

Claud Saunders has assigned Harry Royster of the Buffalo exchange to succeed Doolittle. R. C. Gary, exploiteer at Omaha, has been transferred to the new Milwaukee exchange. Harold Horne, former publicity director for William K. Ziegfeld, will be the new exploiteer at Omaha.

John P. Goring, exploiteer at Kansas City, has been sent to fill the vacancy at Los Angeles. Howard P. Kingsmore, who was assigned to Milwaukee, spent two days on the job before he was ordered to take Goring's place in Kansas City.

John D. Howard, who has been doing special exploitation work at the Century theatre, Baltimore, goes to the exchange at Albany.

Chas. Ray Pays First Visit to N. Y.

Charles Ray was welcomed to New York this week on his first visit to the East. The famous star was introduced to the city by Arthur S. Kane, who joined the star in Chicago to accompany him on the last lap of the journey from Los Angeles. In addition to Mr. Ray and Mr. Kane the party which arrived at the Grand Central Terminal on Wednesday morning, November 23rd, consisted of Mrs. Ray, Richard Willis, general manager of the Ray Productions, Albert A. Kidder, his legal advisor and George Rizzard, his chief camera man. Mr. Ray will make certain scenes for a future First National production while in New York.

Ingram Adds to Cast of "Prisoner of Zenda"

Ramon Samaniegos, pronounced by several directors one of the most promising screen discoveries of the past year, has been selected by Rex Ingram for the role of Rupert of Hentzau in his production of "The Prisoner of Zenda" for Metro.

Trip to Europe Awaits Efficient Managers

FOUR Universal exchange managers will accompany Carl Laemmle to Europe next June, it is announced, when the Universal president makes his annual trip across the Atlantic to study film conditions abroad. The sales managers will go as a reward for efficient service and so they may benefit from a first-hand knowledge of the moving picture business in other lands, it is explained by the Universal home office.

The exchange managers chosen will be on tour for six weeks, visiting London, Paris and other places, all at the expense of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it is declared. In case any of the selected four managers do not desire to make the overseas trip, they will be entitled to draw on Universal for $2,000, as a cash bonus for their efficiency.

Mr. Laemmle's offer is a result of a Universal determination to have 100 per cent representation in the United States and Canada. The Representation Drive is being conducted under the direction of Mr. Berman, general manager of exchanges.

"The Sheik" Sets New Record for Ascher

More evidence of the drawing power of George Melford's Paramount production, "The Sheik," came to the Paramount home office during the convention of district and branch managers in the form of a telegram from Max Ascher, of Ascher Bros., Chicago. The telegram was addressed to H. W. Given, Chicago Branch Manager, and was as follows:

"In the face of inclement weather Saturday, Sunday and Monday, 'The Sheik,' broke all previous house records. Bring back a few more big pictures like these with you. Kindest regards."

The Roosevelt theatre is the Ascher house, in which "The Sheik" is playing.

Vignola to Begin New Production Shortly

Having just completed a second production with Marion Davies in the star role for Cosmopolitan, Robert G. Vignola is now busily engaged in reading scripts with a view to beginning a new production shortly. The special just completed was taken from a magazine story by Sophie Kerr, entitled "Beauty's Worth," and is said to offer Miss Davies as fine opportunities as did "Enchantment," which was Mr. Vignola's first production with the famous star, and which has proven a big box-office success. While his last production was made, for the most part, on the Coast, his next one will, in all likelihood, be made in the East.

"Special" or Regular Service?

Woody Presents Argument in Favor of Average Feature

THERE seems to be a difference of opinion among the exhibitors up and down the land about which class of pictures yields the biggest average box-office dividends per season—the so-called Special Feature or the Regular Service production. This season, especially, the arguments for and against the Special as a steady entertainment diet for the picture public have been particularly in evidence.

J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, in commenting on the sort of pictures which the market is finding bearish right now says: "I'd be the last man to deny that there are some wonderful Special Features playing these days which are making good hard coin for the Exhibitors. I could name you a dozen of them right off the reel. But each one of these big ones has had to stand a pretty hard test. The showman is becoming suspicious of that word 'Special.' And can you blame him?

"There are plenty of pictures which have been touted as 'specials,' booked as 'specials,' advertised as 'specials'—at a special price of course—played as 'specials'—and then gone blooey—leaving a sadder but wiser exhibitor in their wake. Exhibitors have stood for it cheerfully enough in the past. For in a way it isn't their funeral entirely. In order to pay the higher rental demanded for the 'Feature' they were compelled to boost admission prices to their patrons. Now if the picture is a flivver, the higher admission fees leave a bad taste in the mouths of picture shoppers which may result in a change of diet sooner or later.

"Exhibitors simply can't afford to jeopardize the good will of their patrons. I don't say that the public objects to paying higher admission prices now and then, but when they do they are going to make sure that the occasion is worth while.

"And right here is where those exhibitors who prefer the Regular Service method of booking their entertainment put up a pretty strong argument. They claim that their profit during the year is considerably higher through showing pictures which they can obtain on a service basis at moderate prices, thus permitting them to charge old established box-office admission fees, than it would be if they exhibited Special Features, paying increased rentals and charging increased entrance prices.

"For the Service picture obtained through a yearly franchise carries a cumulative value which they can readily appreciate. This value is represented by the appeal of a popularly established star to the public. You can't ignore the hold of the star on the fan. And from week to week, from picture to picture, that popularity grows. Play a Special and when it has been sent back to the exchange, it leaves nothing behind that will serve in anyway to blaze the way for any picture that follows. But play a star series, purchased at a moderate price, and you've got a value at the end of the series that is worth many times what you've paid for it. And you've got a consistent attendance and a constant revenue."

"What pleases me is something that happened down in Washington, D. C., where they are making history every day these days. Mr. Payette, assistant general manager of the Crandall theatres, had provided Crandall's 9th Avenue and E. Street theatre with a Realart Star Franchise, and in its turn he received the production "Dawn of the East." Well, that picture broke every record ever hung up for the house! Then he booked the picture for a repeat run, voluntarily paying the same price for the second booking as he did for the first run.

"Personally, I believe that there is going to be a stronger and stronger demand for good, average pictures maintaining a good, average box-office profit."

New Hodkinson Releases Begun

ADVICES from the Hodkinson home-office inform that three subjects have just been started by producing units affiliated with the Hodkinson Corporation. The producing companies which have just begun the filming of the three new pictures are the Irene Castle organization, which is making a screen version of "The Rise of Roscoe Paine," by Joseph C. Lincoln; the Hugo Ballin Productions, which is filming an original story by Ethel Donoher, titled "The Luxury Tax"; and the Triart Pictures Corporation, which has started work on "The Young Painter," based on the theme of the famous painting of the same name by Rembrandt.

Irene Castle started work last week under the direction of Edwin L. Hollywood on her second production since her recent return to public life. The picture is from the story "The Rise of Roscoe Paine," by Joseph C. Lincoln. The first Castle production, which was also directed by Mr. Hollywood, is "French Heels," a story by Clarence Buddington Kelland, which appeared in Everybody's Magazine. Both pictures will be released by Hodkinson.

"The Rise of Roscoe Paine," which was adapted from Mr. Lincoln's book by Howard Young, is a story of Cape Cod, and of a young man of the Cape who becomes acquainted with the daughter of a powerful New York financier. The part of the daughter, Mabel Colton, is played by Mrs. Castle. Ward Crane is cast in the role of Roscoe Paine. The other important members of the cast are Al Roscoe, Howard Truesdale, Emily Fitzroy, George Pounceforte and Charles Eldridge.

"The Luxury Tax," the Hugo Ballin production, is the fifth in a series which have included "Pagan Love," "East Lynne," "The Journey's End" and "Jane Eyre." "The Luxury Tax" is an original story by Ethel Donoher, author of the recent Equity picture, "The Black Panther's Cub," starring Florence Reed. The cast includes Mabel Ballin, Raymond Bloomer and Crauford Kent. Several other important names will be announced by Mr. Ballin during the next fortnight.

Work on the exteriors of "The Young Painter," the third in the series of productions based on the paintings of great masters, the first of which was "The Beggar Maid," has been started by Triart Pictures under the direction of Herbert Blache.

The first scenes for "The Young Painter" were shot last week on the Long Island estates of Louis C. Tiffany, one of the Advisory Board of the Triart Company. Providing the weather is favorable the exteriors will be completed this week for the studio scenes. Mary Astor and Pierre Gendron, who played the leads in "The Beggar Maid," are featured in "The Young Painter." Walter Petri also has an important part.

"The Young Painter" is based on the famous painting of the same name by Rembrandt, one of the priceless canvases in the Altman Collection at the Metropolitan Museum.

The second in the series of Triart Great Master productions, "The Bashful Suitor," featuring Mary Brandon and Pierre Gendron, has been cut and titled and according to schedule will be ready for general release by Hodkinson early in December. "The Bashful Suitor" is based on the painting by Josef Israels, also at the Metropolitan.

Peoria is a nice place, but Paris is more interesting.

That's why there is more about Paris than about Peoria in the World's Greatest News Reel.

20,000 Enter Goldwyn Scenario Test

Several surprises have been furnished by the Chicago Daily News—Goldwyn Pictures Corporation $30,000 scenario test. One is that 45 per cent of the 20,000 entrants are men, which runs counter to all expectations. Considering the great popular interest in motion pictures among women, and the fact that they are supposed to have more time for scenario writing than have the men, the proportion of men who sent in manuscripts is to be wondered at.

Another surprise is the number of entrants outside of Chicago, seeing that the contest was conducted by a Chicago newspaper.

FEATURE RELEASE CHART

Productions are Listed Alphabetically and by Months in which Released in order that the Exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need. Short subject and comedy releases, as well as information on pictures that are coming will be found on succeeding pages. (S. R. indicates State Right release.)

A Popular Floor Covering in Moving Picture Theatres

Houses, Both Large and Small, Adopt Linoleum

Today a great many up-to-date motion-picture houses are being equipped with floors of linoleum. In fact, it may be stated, that the success of linoleum as a flooring material in theatres has been thoroughly demonstrated.

In the first place linoleum possesses two qualities of primary importance in any motion-picture house—quietness under foot and durability. And in addition it is sanitary, easy to clean, attractive in appearance, and reasonably low in cost.

Battleship Linoleum

Genuine battleship linoleum is made of pure linseed oil, powdered cork, kauri gum, resin, coloring matter and other ingredients manufactured to meet the rigid specifications of the U. S. Navy. A strong material made to resist the severe wear given the decks of U. S. men-of-war, will give practically unlimited service on the floor of the motion-picture theatre. It is truly a permanent floor.

Beautiful in Appearance

Battleship linoleum comes in attractive shades of brown, green, and terra cotta. The brown seems to be the most popular probably because it harmonizes so well with theatre decorations, and because it shows footprints less than the others.

It should be noted that all genuine battleship linoleum always retains its color regardless of length of service. The pigment goes right through to the burlap back so that it never becomes faded or worn-looking with years of wear.

Easy to Clean

One of the most practical qualities of linoleum is the ease with which it may be cleaned. Just a quick, light mopping with a damp cloth or mop is all that is needed. This takes little time and labor, and means a considerable saving in cleaning costs, especially where there is big floor space. Or if the linoleum has been waxed it may be cleaned satisfactorily with a dry mop.

And linoleum is sanitary. Its smooth surface provides a minimum of cracks in which dust, dirt and germs may gather. It is essentially a clean floor, and from that point of view of importance to the health of audiences.

Economical in Cost

Battleship linoleum can be installed at a cost appreciably lower than that of hardwood, marble, or composition. In fact, price and long wear considered, a theatre floor of battleship linoleum is remarkably low in cost per year of service.

SOME USEFUL INFORMATION

Our readers will find the accompanying article—by a recognized linoleum expert, and with experience in both its manufacture and laying—of interest and informative value.

We suggest that you read this and file it away against the day when you need linoleum for your theatre.

THE EDITOR.

Where to Use Battleship Linoleum

One considerable advantage is that battleship linoleum may be used throughout the entire theatre. It is at once so attractive and so practical that it can be used equally well in lobby, foyer, auditorium, business offices, rest and smoking rooms, and lavatories. This does away with the inconvenience of having three or four different kinds of floor-covering, each demanding different care and different cleaning.

How to Buy Battleship Linoleum

In buying linoleum, one should be careful to get genuine battleship linoleum. The goods bought should be regular Navy Standard quality, made by a manufacturer who follows the U. S. Navy Specifications. It is possible to buy linoleum that is guaranteed by the manufacturer to give absolutely satisfactory service. And though such guaranteed goods may cost slightly more than goods that are not guaranteed, they are naturally to be preferred.

Battleship linoleum comes in three grades or thickness:—one-quarter inch, three-sixteenths, and one-eighth,—called respectively heavy, medium, and light. An inferior grade known as "6 millimeter" or "commercial heavy" will be found on the market. This grade is somewhat under one-quarter inch in thickness. Care should be taken that it is not substituted for genuine heavy battleship linoleum. It is doubtful if this "commercial heavy" battleship linoleum will give satisfactory service, inasmuch as it is not manufactured in accordance with the Navy Specifications.

When receiving bids on linoleum floors, it is advisable to have the price given in either a lump sum for the whole job or "per square yard of floor area covered." This will cause the contractor to reduce waste to a minimum.

Cork Carpet

Cork Carpet, as its name suggests, is a cork product similar to linoleum. But the cork particles that go into it are not so finely ground or so tightly compressed as in linoleum. Consequently cork carpet is softer, thicker, and more yielding underfoot. While it will not give quite the length of service that battleship linoleum of equal thickness would give, it is very durable. Its cost is considerably less and its resilient qualities so pronounced that it makes an ideal floor-covering for those parts of the theatre where absolute quiet is the main consideration.

For Theatre Interiors

For the interior of motion-picture theatres, cork carpet may be used satisfactorily, because of its sound-deadening qualities and durability. When a theatre floor is covered with this material, patrons are not disturbed by the footsteps of people entering and leaving; ushers and attendants welcome the comfort underfoot that this springy floor-covering provides.

The whole auditorium may often be profitably covered with cork carpet; but if this is not advisable, the use of this resilient material on just the aisles and back areas will do away with an appreciable amount of noise.

Importance of Proper Laying

No matter how fine the quality of the battleship linoleum or cork carpet bought, it must be laid properly or the floor will not be an entire success. Each strip must be cemented down "solid" to the floor-base. Just tacking down the strips or cementing them only at the edges will not do; such work will not last any time. Laying should be done by a responsible and experienced firm that can guarantee satisfactory results.

Some manufacturers of linoleum recommend laying heavy felt paper between the floor and the linoleum, and then cementing all three materials together. However, one of the largest manufacturers, who has long studied linoleum laying and has recently published specifications for installation, states that the felt-paper method is inadvisable. First, because three materials cemented together are more likely to give trouble than just two, and secondly, because the tensile strength of felt paper cannot be depended upon.

In all cases it is wise to consult a linoleum floor contractor before specifying the method of installation. The contractor engaged should be a man thoroughly experienced in his work, and able to guarantee a satisfactory job.

If the linoleum bought is genuine battleship linoleum and the installation is made by competent workmen, it is safe to say that the resulting floor will be very attractive in appearance, and that it will wear with entire satis-

Just What Is the Value of an Arc Control in Projection

Prominent Manufacturer Gives Some Excellent Information

By L. M. Fulton, Treas. E. E. Fulton Co. of Chicago

Records indicate that time, promotional efforts, and competition are the leading factors in the selection, general adoption, and universal use of new and worthy inventions, rather than the grasping initiative, integrity, and foresight of the users. What is looked upon as inane today is considered indispensable tomorrow.

These facts are readily called to mind and plainly illustrated in the motion picture industry by the gradual passing of such uses being made of tanks, boxes, and bags for take-ups; the inefficient costly A. C. arcs; combustible booths; machine mechanism cases and tops; water barrels, and grid rheostats; hand driven projectors; and now the steady and growing abandonment of hand fed arcs, these being supplemented by arc controls or regulators.

Time was when the hand fed arc served its purpose fairly well, for a 9 x 12 picture contains but a little over 100 square feet to illuminate. But with the increased cost of producing better shows, larger houses with greater seating capacity were necessary to balance this cost, and along with this bigger pictures, until today the average picture projected is between 20 and 24 feet wide, which represents not twice the area to be illuminated, but three to four times the former amount. So it is evident that larger and heavier arc lamp equipment and heavier currents were necessary to make this increase possible, but with these increases it is also much more difficult to handle and maintain an arc by the former practice of hand feeding. Therefore, as has been often repeated, "Mother Invention supplied the missing link" by producing the various types of arc controls or regulators.

These different changes for the better in the motion picture industry has elevated and has been the means of furnishing the public with a pleasing sort of entertainment and education without any material hazard or physical strain. As a matter of fact, it has been the untiring effort of the different inventors, promotors, and societies for the art, that is largely responsible for its present day popularity. And so it goes, as we progress ever onward it is most profitable for him who serves best.

Those technically acquainted with projection realize that a more or less successful picture depends upon a combination of details, no one apparatus, appurtenances, being responsible for the total results, therefore the better these combinations the better the results.

The arc controller of today is a very valuable addition to any motion picture arc light, as it serves a double purpose. An arc control will not only maintain an even, steady arc light, but will reduce the amount of electrical current and carbons consumed, this fact being proved by an unbiased test made in an electrical laboratory in one of the larger cities, which showed an actual saving of 7% in the electrical current consumed, this being registered on recording watt meters. The test was conducted by operating two arc lamps with identical resistance in the service line on both lights, but one was fed by hand and the other with an arc control. So as the exhibitors become acquainted with these facts, the arc control will soon be considered an indispensable accessory.

Some exhibitors feel that the arc control is a convenient, lazy, labor-saving device, and that it is the place of the projectionist to feed his arc. But this is a biased opinion, and would not exist if the exhibitor would become better acquainted with projection values, equipment, and the work of a projectionist, for they would soon discover that while it relieves the projectionist of a very tedious manual operation, it works to their best advantage. The maintenance cost of an arc control is next to nothing, there being records of eight years' service without any repairs made.

It is almost humanly impossible to feed the carbons by hand and get even good results, as so much depends upon the structure of the carbons, etc., as to when and how much to feed, that the high amperage used today demands the assistance of a mechanical, or combined mechanical and electrical aid.

To get the best results from an arc lamp the current pressure or voltage should be kept as nearly constant as possible, thereby causing the least change in the crater or light delivering source of the carbon. This can only be accomplished by very minute and hair-like movements of the carbons, this being more or less dependent upon the carbon being consumed.

Most arc controls built today operate on a very slight change in voltage, this being dependent upon the relation or consumption of carbons one from the other, and as a very small amount of carbon is burned the control will automatically feed them just the required amount, and no more. The movement of the carbon being so small that it is not discernible to the eye. Contrast this to the hit or miss guess of manual operation, more or less depending upon your projectionist's skill and attentiveness, and it is possible to realize the ever growing list of satisfied users.

Most manufacturers today will demonstrate their assertions by a trial, and from the foregoing evidence, it appears that an exhibitor would be acquainting himself with a device that would be a highly prized addition to his equipment, which would deliver to his patronage a picture free from discolored and poorly lighted corners, and at the same time effect a saving for himself.

Activities in the Southeast

The new Broadway theatre, in High Point, N. C., is rapidly nearing completion, much to the delight of A. B. Huff, owner. Mr. Huff announces that the Broadway will seat 350, and will be the finest theatre of its size in the territory.

Orlando, Fla., is to have a handsome new theatre, if the plans of Barney Beacham, who is building it, materialize. He announces that the theatre will seat 1,200—and he has placed his order for specially constructed seats, with spring cushions and extravagant upholstery. The new theatre is, as yet, without a name.

The Broadway theatre at Rome, Ga., has opened, and is equipped with a modern line of projection equipment, including a Minusa gold-fibre screen, and two Powers 6B projectors. The Broadway was formerly the Amuzu, but has been practically rebuilt.—Gaddis.

Vance, Asheville, Opens

Formal opening of the new Vance Theatre at Asheville, N. C., was held recently the entire city turning out for the ceremonies. Manager L. M. Cadison was delighted with the reception accorded his new motion picture house, which is one of the handsomest structures in Asheville.

The new theatre was christened in honor of Hon Zebulon Vance, former governor of North Carolina, and was remodeled throughout, the new theater bearing little or no resemblance to the Galaxy, which preceded it.

Opera chairs and electrical fixtures were rushed to Asheville by express in order to permit of instalation in time for opening the Vance. New heating and ventilating systems have been installed, a new screen has been purchased and new motion picture machines have been secured by Manager Cadison.—KEENEY.

"Navy Standard"

The Navy Department has drawn up rigid specifications for linoleum to be used on the decks of battleships. Naturally, a linoleum that conforms to these exacting Navy requirements, and that will endure under the terrific wear imposed by Navy service, is exactly the type of floor-covering needed in the theatre.

All so-called battleship linoleum is not made according to Navy specifications. To be absolutely certain you are getting genuine battleship linoleum, made according to Navy standard, you should insist on Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum.

Motion Picture Exhibitors tell us—

DURING the past year we have asked motion picture exhibitors all over the United States what they demand in a theatre floor-covering. Here, in condensed form, are their opinions:

"Theatre floors must be extremely durable to withstand the heavy, daily traffic, up and down the aisles, through the corridors, etc."

"Floor-coverings must be quiet underfoot so that people walking about and looking for seats will not disturb those already seated."

"They must be easily and inexpensively cleaned to keep down overhead expenses."

"Must be durable?"—Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is manufactured in strict accordance with the standards set by the U. S. Navy—made to withstand such terrific, grinding wear as is given the decks of battleships.

"Quiet underfoot?"—"Easy and inexpensive to clean?"—As cork is its main ingredient, Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is comfortably quiet to walk on—pleasantly resilient under foot. Its smooth, sanitary surface can be cleaned in a jiffy by a few whisks of a damp mop. It comes in three colors—attractive shades of terra cotta, brown and green.

No other linoleum so fully meets the requirements of motion picture floors as does Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum. It will pay you to insist upon the genuine.

Gold-Seal Cork Carpet

Some exhibitors, who desire absolutely soundproof floors, prefer Gold-Seal Cork Carpet. This efficient floor-covering is very durable and as velvety quiet underfoot as a woven rug. Made in 6 attractive shades.

The Seven Hundred Seat Solon Theatre, Spencer, Iowa, a Model in Construction

The seven hundred seat Solon theatre which recently opened in Spencer, Iowa, under the management of G. M. Solon, is a model in theatre construction. As one enters the heated lobby, which measures fifteen by twenty-nine feet, he is impressed by the inviting appearance of the marble walls and ticket booth, the latter being finished with the same material. A decorative painting adorns the ceiling and is illuminated by nearly fifty lights which have been attractively arranged.

The main auditorium is one hundred and ten feet in length and the floor drops three-quarters of an inch to every foot. Comfortable 19 inch opera chairs have been installed to insure comfort for the patrons and are provided with aisle lights. The walls are decorated with works of art which are pleasing to the eye, while draperies of grey and old rose are used on all doorways, orchestra railing and as a setting for the screen.

The room measures eighteen feet in width by twelve feet deep and eight feet high. The entire equipment, which was furnished by the Des Moines Office of the Argus Enterprises, Inc., consists of a G. E. Generator set, Fulco Reel Cabinet, two of the latest type Simplex Projectors equipped with Simplex Lenses which project a fourteen by eleven foot picture on an Argus Crystal Bead Screen at one hundred feet. R. W. MacEwan, manager and projection engineer of the Argus, Des Moines Office supervised the installation of the projection equipment which will be in charge of Projectionist Tomer D. Flint, formerly of Des Moines.

faction for a long period of years. A well-laid floor of genuine battleship linoleum takes at least one worry off the shoulders of the motion-picture theatre owner.

CARE OF LINOLEUM FLOORS

In cleaning linoleum use pure mild soap and warm water. Caustic soaps and abrasive powders should never be used. Simply mop off the floor with soapy water, then with clean water—using always the least water possible—and dry quickly.

Waxing is very beneficial to linoleum. Any good floor wax, preferably in liquid form, will do. It should be thoroughly rubbed in. After the floors have been waxed sufficiently, they can be cleaned with a dry mop without the use of water. Waxing should be done about once a month.

It is also possible to varnish linoleum. Varnishing gives the linoleum a brilliant surface covering, and protects it from wear.

Cork carpet floors should not be waxed or varnished. The chief charm of cork carpet is its softness and resiliency and both these qualities would be lessened by varnishing.

Good battleship linoleum or cork carpet, well laid and adequately cared for, will give long and satisfactory service in any motion-picture theatre.

Salt Lake City Dealer Inspects Plants

Sam I. Levin, president of the Salt Lake Theatre Supply Co., has been in New York for about a week, spending several days inspecting the factory of the Nicholas Power Co. Mr. Levin came to New York in order to learn as much as possible about the manufacturing of the equipment which his company sells. He declares that he gathered much useful information, stating that most of the equipment manufacturers are glad to show the methods and materials that go to make up their product. Mr. Levin planned to also spend several days at the General Electric Co.

Emerald Theatre Leased

The Emerald theatre, Thirty-sixth street and Prospect avenue, Kansas City, Mo., has been leased by L. Weil and son, formerly of Sioux City, Iowa. The theatre, which is a suburban house, will be remodeled and redecorated about October 1. The seating capacity also will be increased. A large canopy, a new front and an improved lighting system are among the improvements planned.—TRUE.

Allen Will Be Largest House in Alberta

The new Allen Palace theatre in Calgary, Alberta, will be the largest theatre in the Province of Alberta, according to the owners. The seating capacity is 1,968 and this is said to be about 500 more than the largest theatre in Alberta already in operation.

It is interesting to note that the Allens of Toronto will shortly open the Palace theatre in the city in which they made their real start in the moving picture business. About fourteen years ago they opened a moving picture store show in Brantford, Ontario, but eventually they moved to Calgary where they opened the first of the large exclusive moving picture theatres in Canada. Their chain now extends from coast to coast and they have finally come back to Calgary to build a moving picture theatre that is equal in size and beauty to many other of their new houses in various cities.—GLEDDISH

Buffalo Notes

Peterson & Woods, owners of the Wintergarden and Mozart theatres in Jamestown, N. Y,. will built a new house to be called the Palace on Spring street in the Chautauqua Lake city. The Palace will have a seating capacity of 2,000 and will cost close to $1,000,000. Contractors have started work on the foundations The house will be opened next fall.

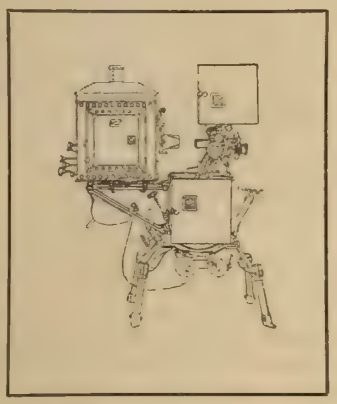
Rumors persist that the Shea Amusement Company will yet build its new Metropolitan on Main street north of Chippewa in Buffalo. M Shea and P. B. MacNaughton have been in Chicago conferring with architects on building costs and plans. Report also has it that the Tivoli, Chicago, will be reproduced in Buffalo if the deal goes through. It will be the fifth house in the Shea Buffalo chain.

Nicholas Dipson has broken ground for a $150,000 theatre on Main street, Batavia, N. Y which will be one of the finest houses in western New York.

The new Lafayette Square theatre in Buffalo is nearing completion and will open soon after the holidays. This theatre is costing a fortune and will be "the last word."

The Colonial in Depew was opened this week by Chester Glanc and Joseph Dworzanowski. It is a 900 seat house costing $40,000.—TAYLOR.

Plan Jersey City Theatre



A $50,000 theatre will be built at 1 Wegman Parkway, Jersey City, by the Rialto Amusement Co. R. D. Blauvelt, of New York City, is the architect.

Carries Elevated Platform on Auto

An elevated platform on an automobile by which pictures can be filmed which would be unobtainable otherwise has been devised by Daniel J. Goff, Chicago cameraman. The platform is shown in the photograph. It was originated and put into commission by Goff during the Pageant of Progress Exposition in Chicago in July. The platform weighs 140 lbs. and can be attached to an auto in eight minutes.

Capitol, Detroit to Open Soon

John H. Kunsky, president of the John H. Kunsky enterprises in Detroit, announces facts regarding the opening of the new Capitol theatre, under construction in downtown Detroit near the Kunsky Madison and Adams theatres in the business district.

The Capitol will open to the public about December 15. It will seat 4,250 people. The building includes theatre and offices and takes up one entire block. The general offices of the Kunsky company will, however, remain at the Madison Theatre Building.

Mr. Kunsky announces that Thomas D. Moule, who has been managing director of the Madison and Adams theatres for many seasons, will also have supervision over the new Capitol. Clyde Wixom will be house manager of the Adams; George Kelley house manager of the Madison, while the Capitol house management has not been filled. Music will be supervised by Eduard O. Werner, musical director for all of the Kunsky theatres. Mr. Werner, until a year ago, was director of the Adams orchestra when he was appointed to arrange the picture scores and overtures for both the Adams and Madisons. Werner, it is expected, will free lance between the three theatres, leading overtures at various times when his time is not occupied otherwise. Howard O. Pierce will continue as publicity man.—HEFFERMAN.

Reopen Canadian Theatre

Announcement is made that the Famous Players Canadian Corporation of Toronto has acquired the Brock Theatre, Brockville, Ontario. This is the only moving picture theatre in the city which has upwards of 10,000 people. It was recently renovated and redecorated but will be further improved by the corporation. —GLADISH.

Plan N. Y. House

Plans have been filed by the Tyrol Realty Corp., Samuel Wheeler, president, for the erection of a one-story motion picture theatre on the south side of East 152nd street, near Melrose avenue, the Bronx, N. Y. The theatre is expected to cost about $130,000.

Hillyard, Wash., Has $50,000 House

Hillyard, Wash., a municipality surrounded on all sides by the city of Spokane, has a new $50,000 picture palace de luxe, known as the Rialto, operated by O. W. Newton, manager. The Great Northern railway shops are located at Hillyard, and the town has the distinction of having its own city government, apart from Spokane, while Spokane virtually surrounds it on all sides, bringing the new theatre closer to residents of Spokane's north hill than any other movie house in the city. The new Rialto contains features no other house in the Inland Empire has, an operating room on the level with the curtain, insuring perfect pictures. Ventilating, lighting, heating are all as near perfect as it is possible to make them. The mezzanine floor is a feature in itself, behind plate glass and furnished with upholstered wicker arm chairs, rockers and settees so that, as Mr. Newton says, "you can enjoy a movie evening on this floor with the comfort, ease and pleasure found in your home parlor."—Colver.

Cameraman Uses Ultra-Speed Device

WHAT is considered one of the greatest advancements in the art of filming motion pictures is the recently introduced ultra-speed attachment for cameras. The first cameraman on the West Coast not specializing in slow-speed to equip his own machine with the new appartus is Park Ries, head cameraman for Hamilton-White Comedies, Inc., at Park Ries, who turns the crank for Educational-Mermaid Comedies, pointing to ultra-rapid speed devise which has been attached to his machine at a cost of $1000.

Hollywood, making Mermaid Comedies for Educational.

The ultra-speed attachment cost Mr. Ries $1,000, and necessitated laying his machine up for three months while it was being put on at the Bell and Howell plant in Chicago.

With the ultra-speed attachment a cameraman can produce on the screen the movement of players at a speed one-twelfth as fast as natural. Some of Mr. Ries's first work with his newly equipped machine is seen in "The Vagrant." Reviewing this picture, the Los Angeles Saturday Night said:

"Perhaps it has been done before, but we have never seen it tried before—meaning the introduction of the slow camera in comedy. And here we have it employed purposely and right cleverly.

"It was Lloyd Hamilton . . . in one of those ridiculous Mermaid Comedies at which one frequently laughs from sheer idiocy, superinduced by screen hypnotism, who executed an opium dream on the roof of a building by the aid of the slow motion camera. It was ludicrous in the extreme and further marked by cleverness of intellectual stamp. 'Ham,' after being pursued to the roof of an opium joint, is mesmerized by the fumes from a fireplace below and does a classic faun dance with the policeman who has cornered him there."

New Theatre of Erie, Pa., a Model for a Modern Medium Sized Play House

Everything Up-to-Date Embodied in Aris, from Projection to the Ventilating Equipment

One of the most modern small theatres in the East is the Aris theatre, at Erie, Pa., which opened its doors to the public recently. Although seating but 750, this house is complete in every respect, from its heating and cooling systems to its projection and screen equipment.

Manager F. T. Egan is well pleased with his house, and states that in the few weeks that it has been running he has been doing capacity business. The theatre is owned by the Aris Amusement Corp. It is located at 1611 Peach street and was erected at a cost of $100,000.

The house is erected with a dance hall on the third floor, and with a tea room connected with the lobby. The building is constructed of hollow tile, steel and concrete. The interior is finished in buff and white. The seats in both auditorium and balcony are arranged in three sections. There are no loges.

A vacuum split system is used in heating the theatre, and an up-to-date system of refrigerated air keeps the house cool in summer. Huge fans are also used for ventilating. Music is furnished by a large Gottfried orchestral organ, which was installed at a cost of $6,000.

The projection room, which is Westinghouse equipped, has a Powers 6-B Cameragraph which throws to a velvet screen 80 feet away. All modern devices are embodied in this model little house, even including five intercommunicating phones. Erie ought to be proud of the addition to the city's playhouse of the Aris theatre.

Majestic Changes Hands

The Majestic theatre at 185th street and St. Nicholas avenue, New York City, has been sold by the Braddon Amusement Corp. to a syndicate. The theatre accommodates about 2400 people which includes a roof garden. Aaron A. Corn was the broker.

Karlton Has Large Organ

The new Karlton theatre besides being one of the most beautiful artistic motion picture auditoriums in the country also boasts of one of the largest and most completely equipped organs of its size in existence. The instrument in the new Karlton theatre is a true Kimball Unit Orchestra of pipes and percussion instruments under the control of the organist as the human orchestra follows the leading of its director. It closely resembles the great unit in the Stanley theatre which is the largest and most completely equipped in the East.

The string section in the Karlton organ contains double basses, 'cellos, first and second violins, and their octaves. In the wood are the clarinets, oboes saxophone, kinura, flutes and piccolo. The brass family is represented by the tubas, trombones, horns and cornet.

Organ tone or foundation stops include the diaphones, diapasons, tibias, bourdons and accompanimental flutes, with mutation stops. The vox humanas and some other specialties also belong in a classification outside of the orchestra proper, making this an orchestra and an organ, with all the advantages of both.

Percussion instruments are present in great variety, exceeding any usual concert orchestra and far beyond the organ resources. These comprise the chimes (tubular bells), harp, marimba, glockenspiel, orchestra bells, xylophone, (piano prepared for, to be installed later), the orchestral drums, tympani, and musical (legitimate) traps, as needed for interpretation of the folk music of the several nations. The musical "effects" considered desirable in the early days of motion picture accompaniment, and by some exhibitors even now, are conspicuous by their absence.

Being located in solid concrete chambers and under control of individual electric motors, the expression is perfect, from gentle gradation of crescendo and diminuendo to the crashing sforzandos.

This Unit Orchestra and Organ is operated from a console of the most practicable type, that designed by Robert Hope-Jones and used by this company in an idealized form. All means of control are within reach of hands or feet without stretching or inconvenience, even the manuals being inclined to the natural angle of the arms and the double touch being at the same time positive and easy to play. The combinations all visibly operate the stop keys and have double touch to control the pedal simultaneously or not, as desired.

Visits Motiograph Factory

Chief Projectionist Hanson, of the World Realty Company, Omaha, Nebraska, which owns and operates an important chain of theatres, made a special trip to Chicago to inspect the factory of Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, makers of Motiograph De Luxe.

He was greatly impressed with the first hand knowledge he gained of the splendid materials and workmanship put into the new machine and the atmosphere of efficiency that prevailed in the factory, and said after his inspection that he was a greater booster for the Motiograph even than he had been before.

Mr. Hanson reported that the new De Luxe models, recently installed in the Sun theatre, have been giving splendid results ever since their first run, and that the brightness and steadiness of the picture is a source of great satisfaction to the management and patrons of this house.

What Have Gundlach Projection Lenses Done for The Motion Picture Industry?

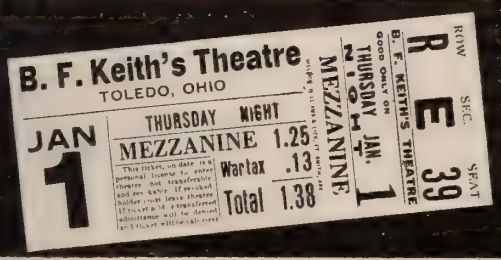
They have raised the standard of quality and illuminating power to the highest degree.

They have supplied lenses in three sizes to provide the exact focal length with the utmost illumination for every possible condition of projection.

They made the No. 2 size Projection Lenses available YEARS AGO which removed the limitation formerly upon the distance the picture could be projected and the size of theatres.

They have standardized the mount and jacket with spiral adjustment.

They have set a standard for optical quality, illumination and uniformity which may be equalled but not excelled.



Better look for the name GUNDLACH and be sure you are getting lenses with a reputation. There is no better value.

Reserved Seat Tickets for BIG PICTURES

There are a great many really big productions available today by exhibitors. These are productions that in the past would have been road shows, either not playing your town or playing the opposition combination house. You can give these special productions the proper presentation right in your own theatre. The secret is RESERVED SEATS. "The Birth of a Nation," "'Way Down East," "The Four Horsemen," "Over the Hill," "The Old Nest," and many other unusually big pictures must be played with reserved seats. They are too long for a grind show. They must be presented at advanced prices, and be put on in real showmanship manner. Are you able to handle the big pictures? The Reserved seat policy will make for success.

Get Perfect Light and a Perfect Dissolve at Less Cost With

TransVerteR

The Standard M-G Set of the Motion Picture Industry

TRANSVERTER (double arc type), furnishes two perfect arcs in series simultaneously, each of the same amperage and light value—and in striking the second arc the one showing is not disturbed in the slightest degree. This gives a perfect dissolve.

And, throughout the whole operation the automatic voltage control maintains constant amperage without the use of wasteful resistance, which, of course, means less heat in the booth and less maintenance and operating cost than any other device.

These are but a few of many TransVerteR features that contribute to the successful operation of motion picture theaters.

TRANSVERTER automatic voltage control maintains a constant amperage and steady arc without the use of a wasteful resistance.

John E. Barber Claims Movies Need a Banker

At an open meeting of the American Society of Cinematographers on the night of September 12, Mr. John E. Barker, vice-president of the First National Bank of Los Angeles, and vice-president of the Cinema Finance Corporation, addressed the members on the subject of motion picture economics, the high lights of which are most interesting. Mr. Barber introduced his subject by stating that the motion picture industry seems to have been affected less than any other industry by the general slump in business; that, whereas shoes, cotton, wool, cattle, steel, etc., have been badly depressed, the demand for motion pictures, measured by attendance, has been off only 30 per cent. Although other industries have been prostrate, the United States admission tax of 10 per cent and the rental tax of 5 per cent from January 1 to June 1, 1921, show a material increase over the preceding six months. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, the 10 per cent admission tax increased 15 per cent over 1920, and the 5 per cent rental tax increased 37 per cent over 1920, but tax receipts for automobiles, cigars, jewelry, pianos, candy, all decreased heavily, showing that motion pictures are not in the luxury class, and that is most encouraging from a banking point of view.

Continuing, Mr. Barber said in effect: The motion picture industry is in a state of flux; it is unsettled and unorganized, if not disorganized. Recent conditions will prove to be a blessing in disguise, since extravagance is being eliminated. Leaders are emerging and there is a general "settling" in all departments of the industry, and this applies to the artistic as well as the business side. It is the duty and the opportunity of the bankers to help to stabilize the industry. The great obstacle now and heretofore has been the almost entire lack of reliable statistical information about motion pictures such as may be had about railroads, copper, cotton, steel, coal, oil, etc. All has been guesswork and questionnaires have failed to bring reliable data. It is essential that bankers know accurately the facts of an industry to determine whether it is entitled to credit, and if so, how much.

There has been a lack of capable business management equal to the creative and artistic abilities shown by producers, directors, photographers and actors. This has led to inefficient methods, waste of money and time. Lately progress has been made in some studios along business lines and there is better accounting, and reduction of waste, but too often the producer is his own business manager, to the detriment of his pocket book and his business reputation. There has been regular over-production, costing the industry millions. Oil wells shut down, copper mines suspend, factories close, but picture production goes on in spite of glutted markets. This is a corollary of three and could be corrected if better understood.

Studio facilities far exceed the demand. This is uneconomic and is the result of personal vanity, which constitutes a danger.

The marketing machinery of the industry is costly. It takes 25 to 35 per cent of selling prices to market a picture; this shows the importance of centralizing distribution and eliminating duplication. There are now in the United States fifteen large and one hundred and twenty-five small distributors. Also there are difficulties encountered with selling agents three thousand miles away.

There is a lack of adequate capital to run the picture industry economically. Where have the huge returns from picture production gone? None has been put back into the business. Between pictures most producers must go through the agonies of financing for the next and this complete lack of an adequate financial structure has led to an inability to get banking credit, for there is no open market for motion picture securities as for railroad, etc., and the producer cannot go to the banks for seasonal requirements as farmers, the manufacturer, the mine operator.

It is plain that the industry has outgrown private financing and it is not sound or economic for the distributor to finance production. Pictures should be sold on percentage which would be cheapest and most logical and satisfactory to all. It is a fact that the producer pays 20 to 60 per cent and often 100 per cent for money necessary to make his production. Although having outgrown private financing, the industry is not yet stable enough for public flotation; and until it is, producers must be accommodated by banks and corporations like the Cinema Finance Corporation, recently organized in Los Angeles.

Our experience in financing motion pictures has been most satisfactory. For years we have believed it a legitimate industry—the largest here, and therefore legitimately entitled to its share of community credit on reasonable terms. We qualified it as an industry under

1. Size.
2. Stability.
3. Marketability.
4. Risk and Profitableness.

At first we lent only to men whose financial statement warranted unsecured loans; this limited the bank's helpfulness, because many able producers and directors could not show means; therefore, we evolved a scheme of lending on negative, i. e., to put picture loans as "commodity loans." We required the producer making the loan to put up one-third of the amount required, the bank lending two-thirds; this was secured by a chattel mortgage on the negative, insurance, lien on receipts, interest charges and trust receipts. Such an arrangement widens the bank's sphere of usefulness immensely.

The net results are, first, a large volume of loans; second, profitable business; third, no greater hazard thus protected than any other kind of business the bank is asked to finance; fourth, liquidity—results more dependable.

Each loan, therefore, is carefully scrutinized and judged under the following head:

1. Character of story, type of picture, and its quality; also director, cast, etc.
2. Producer—His ability, his experience, his resources and his integrity. Especially his business organization.
3. Release arrangements—who and when. (Time of loan important to bank) subject to screen examination, etc.
4. Insurance.
5. Estimates of cost, stars' salaries, directors' salaries, etc. (Advances made only on cost sheets.)
6. Market value of collateral, i. e., film based on box office returns of previous similar pictures of this producer.

Mr. Barber sees the motion picture industry on the threshold of a new era; he declares that bankers have been able to help other industries at critical times, and can do so here.—The American Cinematographer.

Fred Chaston and his combination camera

Completing Ashville House

Work on the Imperial theatre, now being erected on Patton avenue, Asheville, N. C., by the Southern Enterprises at a cost of more than $110,000, will be completed about December 15. With a seating capacity of approximately 11,500 persons, the Imperial will be one of the finest motion picture houses in the Carolinas.

The main theatre building is situated on Lexington avenue, while the arcade is on Patton avenue. Restrooms for both men and women, equipped with handsome furniture and adorned with palms, ferns and other plants, are being arranged. A Robert-Morton pipe organ, costing $10,000, has already arrived and is now being erected.—KEENEY.

Devises Combination Camera

Fred Chaston, a veteran cameraman, has followed out a novel idea by which he has been able to get a camera which fits every need. Working on the principal that all cameras have several good points, while no one camera is adapted for all uses, Chaston has made a combination which he says is good all around—for speed, adaptability and precision.

Mr. Chaston is a cameraman who has been a motion picture photography for over fifteen years. He is a member of the United Society of Cinematographers and of the Moving Picture Photographers Association. He has just finished a year and a half with D. W. Griffith.

In order to get a good all around combination Chaston has assembled the camera shown in the photographs. This combines all the quickness of changing lenses with a turret and at the same time focus can be made on the film or ground glass from the back. There is no sliding back and forth on a track. The film can be seen at all times. The camera has many new vignetting and double exposure devices necessary for the advanced cinematography of the present day. The camera was built by the American Motion Picture Machine Co

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

Arcadia Theatre, Windber, Pa.

Dear Editor:

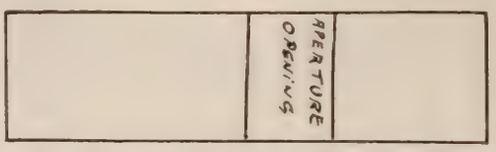
Inclosed find my application for membership in the N. A. M. L. . . . In my mind the league is an excellent movement, as it is not only benefits projectionists, but the public, exhibitor and producer as well. . . . Am enclosing a drawing of my plans for a very useful article for members of the N. A. M. L.—the misframe finder.

J. D. Smouse.

Salem, Ore.

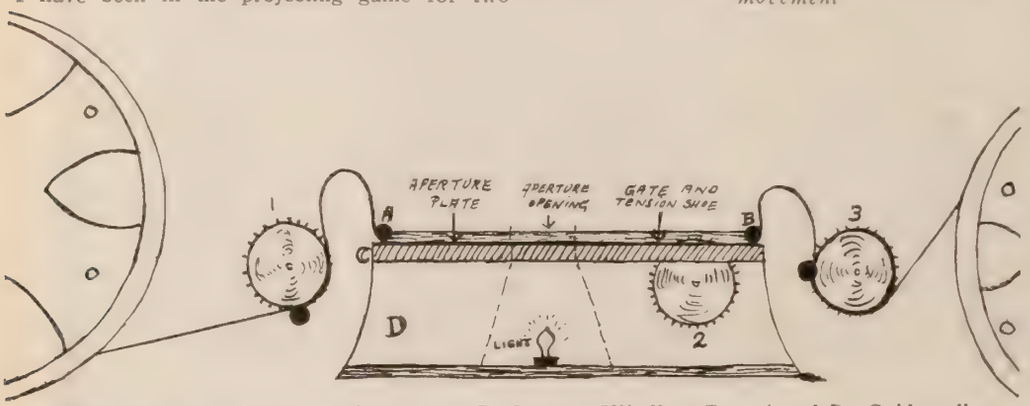
Dear Sir:

Am enclosing membership application. . . . I have been in the projecting game for two years; previous to this I was stage manager in this house. I get a great deal of bad film here, as this is a second run house, combining vaudeville in its program, and the population of the town is only 17,000. So I have plenty of film repairing to do.



I have talked the matter over with the other projectionists here and we have all decided to join the league. This is not a union town, as there are not enough of us to organize and the nearest charter is in Portland, but it is closed.

B. Neeland, Bligh Theatre.



Ashland, Catlettsburg, Ky.

Dear Ed.:

We are two old members of the N. A. M. L., Nos. 913 and 914, and have taken a great interest in the troubles of the projectionists as published in the Forum. . . . We have faithfully lived up to our pledge that we took in joining the league. . . . Films that we are getting now are in the best of condition, but once in a while we get a film that is all shot . . . but we always send them out in the best possible condition.

Top view misframe finder. When film passes through the misframe finder as it does in the projection machine a misframe can easily be detected, because of the light and intermittent movement

Plan of misframe finder. Designed by J. D. Smouse, Windber, Pa. A and B—Guide rollers. C—Surface for aperture plate. 1 and 3—Feed and take up feed sprockets. 2—Intermittent sprocket geared according to sprockets 1 and 3

We believe that all projectionists will be helped greatly by the league. . . . Both of us have been projectionists for over six years and expect to keep at it. We enjoy reading the letters of the other members.

Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Ave.,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen—I am herewith attaching clippings of film from a print of Douglas Fairbanks in the "Three Musketeers," which played in the Regent theatre, Springfield, Ohio, Gus Sun, manager, week of November 6.

Would appreciate your giving this publicity, as operators who mutilate film in this manner should certainly be reprimanded through the trade's papers.

Yours very truly,
United Artists Corporation,
R. K. Evans,
Sales Manager,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Note—The samples of films enclosed were disgraceful. Some operator had punched holes in many places. It is up to the N. A. M. L. members to assist all in stopping this evil. There is no excuse for such treatment of film and those operators who do so are only working to the detriment of the men who want the industry to advance.—Technical Editor.

Barnesboro, Pa.,
Sept. 23, 1921.

Dear Sir:

I am the operator in a new theatre. And with the equipment I have I ought to get a better picture. This is what I have: An Extra-light screen; Simplex machines with Gundlach lens, Extra-light shutters, D. C. current.

Here is the trouble; poor focus, can not set shutter perfect. On the left side of the screen the picture is all right but on the right side it is distorted.

The throw is 80 feet. Size of screen is 14 by 1[illegible] feet. Have 4½ inch focal lens. Where should shadow box be placed and how?

Can any N. A. M. L. members help me out of this trouble?

Yours truly,

H. H. [illegible]

Due to great number of applications received for the N. A. M. L. we have exhausted our supply of labels and membership cards. As soon as these are printed they will be forwarded to all who have not as yet received them.

Sherman Recollects Old Days

Dear Eidtor:

As I sit here at the old typewriter, I can hear the mad uproar of hammer and saw, as the mechanics work like demons to complete the finest theatre in eastern Tennessee, and my mind goes back to the old days when the writer was "shootin' 'em over" in a two-bit, stand-'em-up joint, commonly known as the black-top.

I still have my membership card No. 362 in the N. A. M. L., and often think of the boys, who, after hearing of the terrible storm that swept Corpus Christi, Texas, two years ago, were good enough to step up and offer me help to get going again. From Maine to California came letters from fellow-craftsmen that were sincere in their offers of assistance, and it may be that I was a little careless in not thanking the boys at the time, but we were so hard pressed then, that it seemed to me to be impossible, and then I had to give up my typewriter for a long time, on account of sickness, coupled with the fact that I was on the go a great deal, leaving the projection-room to find health.

This letter finds me up in the Appalachians, in a pretty little city of fifteen thousand souls where hard times are unknown, and prosperity reigns supreme.

We are just completing a theatre that will be a credit to this city, and to the state, and I am going to tell you all about it when I write again.

I just can't keep from mentioning the fact I am using a pretty good feature for change-overs, and will call your attention to it in this letter, and want to see what you think of it.

In the lens-ports are two four-inch dissolving diaphragm shutters, connected with a steel rod, having convenient handles arranged on same, so that by sliding the handle, opens one diaphragm, and shuts the other, so there are no springs, strings nor any other light equipment to give away just as you are ready to use it. Quick and positive in action, and unbreakable it will deliver the goods.

If I can interest the bunch, I will agree to write again, but there's no reason why the pages should not hold some good letters from Cameron, Griffiths, [illegible]

National Anti-Misframe League Pledge

As motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and whe nfilm is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

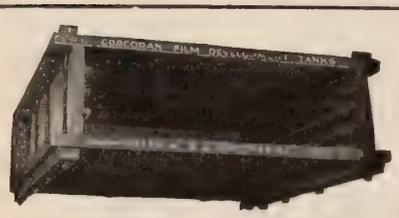
Rush Work on Rochester Movie House

The last of the mammoth steel girders for the motion picture theatre de luxe being erected by George Eastman on the Eastman School of Music site in Rochester, N. Y., has been hoisted into position. The girder is 17 feet in length and weighs nearly 17 tons. The placing of this girder marks the completion of the main supports of the theatre roof, which includes seven trusses ranging in length from 74 to 137 feet and weighing from 18 to 23 tons each.

Completion of the steel framework in time to enable the enclosing of the building before severe weather sets in has been the aim of the steel contractors. It is expected that the roof will be "topped off" in a few weeks. Enclosing of the structure this year will enable the interior work to proceed throughout the winter regardless of weather conditions and hasten the date of the opening of the completed theatre in 1922.

The steel framework is complicated because the site has only one right angle corner. The main floor and two balconies are slanting and incurved, making it necessary for the steel contractors to discard the standard right angle connections and make special bevel connections for all the work with the exception of the roof. Above the stage section are two proscenium girders 73 feet in length, each weighing about 20 tons. Above these are five trusses which carry the roof and gridirons.

The two-balcony and foyer steel work is much like a spider web on angle, with cantilever arms at the outer side of the web. In one section of this framing is one girder, which carries 150 tons concentrated load. Some of the steel columns in the auditorium are 100 feet in length. The entire steel work for the theatre comprises more than 1,200 tons.



The theatre will have a seating capacity.—TAYLOR.

Plan Batavia House

Batavia Theatre Corporation will be formed at Batavia, N. Y., for the purpose of erecting a $140,000 theatre in that city. Plans for the house provide for a seating capacity of 1,000 on main floor and 500 in the balcony. The theatre will be 80 by 140 feet. The directors of the corporation will be H. H. Chapin, Nikitas Dipson, J. R. Osborne, W. G. Pollard and D. W. Tomlinson.

Dear Editor:

Following the lead of other members I am dropping you a few lines. . . . I believe that the suggestion of Robert E. Bryant that projectionists should get together and go after what they want should be followed up. Films should be sent out on 2,000 ft. reels instead of 1,000 ft. ones . . . it would mean much to the projectionists and to the exchanges. . . .

I have William A. Romer's misframe record beaten. The film was a First National comedy, "Married Life." I cut 32 misframes from it. I watch the forum closely for new items and drawings and at present am working on some of the latter, which I will send in.

Reisenfeld Has New Idea

Pauline Frederick's "La Tosca" Cut to Fit Composer's Score

HUGO REISENFELD, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, New York, is making Sardou serve the ends of Puccini, this week at the Rialto, by editing a print of Pauline Frederick's "La Tosca" made a few years ago by Famous Players Lasky, to fit the composer's orchestration.

The result is a half hour's presentation of pictures and music that is one of the features of the Rialto bill.

As far as can be ascertained this is the first time that a film drama has been edited with a composer's score in mind, the usual method being to select music to serve the picture.

Mr. Reisenfeld, long an important figure in opera as concert master, conductor and composer, interested Adolph Zukor in his experiment and was granted permission to reedit the film production of "La Tosca" to his purpose. The film play was originally in six reels. This was reedited by Mr. Reisenfeld to a little more than two reels, the great dramatic moments of the film being synchronized with Puccini's operatic setting. The orchestration from the opera is used exclusively, with an aria sung by a voice back stage in the closing scenes.

"This presentation of 'La Tosca,' with music from the Puccini opera matched into the scenes, is frankly an experiment," said Mr. Reisenfeld. "It may lead to the successful realization of the musician's dream of screen grand opera or it may be merely an incident in the development of the motion picture program."

In creating this new form of film entertainment, Mr. Reisenfeld used the musician's attitude in his work. Puccini's orchestral setting is notable for the skill with which the composer reflected the action in the score, interpreting in musical terms the characters and the situations. While Sardou's tragedy was exceptionally sombre, Puccini's music is of such beauty as to relieve its rather dark mood, and with these two mediums—the film and the orchestration—Mr. Reisenfeld has evolved what may be considered a musician's new creation of film drama and opera instrumentation.

The success of the experiment will be watched with interest in film and music circles because it may point the way to a new development of the two arts. Just as in opera several arts are brought together to form a perfect ensemble, so this short film and music presentation of "La Tosca" may open new fields in bringing together the photoplay director and the composer.

Operatic Solos for Use with Short Subjects

Combination of film short subjects with operatic soloists as practised by the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre is an evidence of the usefulness of the short motion picture themes, according to Edward L. Hyman, who endeavors to make the most out of every novelty presented.

Mr. Hyman recently found a striking way to utilize a short flower film in which veritable mountains of roses are shown opening buds and growing before the eyes of the spectators.

Hadyn's well known ballad, "Love's Garden of Roses," served as the foundation for the idea. Estelle Carey, favorite Brooklyn Mark Strand soprano, sang the number and as she reached the chorus in the finale bars the curtains parted and the billows of roses rolled and opened on the screen in artistic confusion.

The simple effort to emphasize the beauty of the song through motion pictures was acceptable and the appreciation was shown in applause. In this way a singer in one had her efforts enhanced and an ordinary solo number went over with a bang.

Tabloid Opera Pleasing Capitol Theatre Patrons

The revival of selections from "The Geisha" at the New York Capitol theatre, were so well received that S. L. Rothafel has decided to continue this type of tabloid operetta.

The current week, Mr. Rothafel is presenting "The Chocolate Soldier," enlisting the services of orchestra, soloists, ensemble and ballet, and including such popular numbers as "My Hero" sung by Maria Samson; "Sympathy," by Erik Bye; "Gira Lala,' 'by Elizabeth Ayres, assisted by Della Aosa, the French violinist, and additional selections by the Capitol Mixed Quartette.

Moor's New Piano Keyboard

Emmanuel Moor, whose versatile compositions in various forms have been not infrequently played in New York, and who years ago was a resident New York musician, has invented a two-manual, octave-coupler piano that has attracted some attention in England. Donald F. Tovey, the English pianist and composer, whose inclinations have always been toward the conservative, has found it interesting to play on, and a correspondent of The London Times gives an enthusiastic account of the new instrument, which he saw at Moor's home in Switzerland. Effects can be produced on it that he calls "simply astounding," and, he declares, without loss of tone or loss of delicacy resulting from coupling the keyboards. There is also an attachment for converting the piano into "a very powerful harpsichord," that is, modifying the tone to imitate a harpsichord.

But some not yet venerable can remember when similar revolutions have been predicted as a result of other keyboards, such as the Janko keyboard. That new principle attracted some interest, but the modern pianoforte has not yet become obsolete. There have been other such inventions, but of course their drop into oblivion does not necessarily prove that Mr. Moor's is not so much better as to supplant them, and even the ancient model of the piano keyboard, if its time has come.

Verdi's Musicians' Home Suffers from War

THE home for disabled and aged musicians founded by the will of Verdi and located on the outskirts of Milan has fallen on evil days since the war.

It was Verdi's dream to give to those in their old age who had enjoyed a passing glory, success, triumph or fame all too fleeting, the sense of ease and comfort in an atmosphere of harmony where dreams should make happy their closing years of life. But the war came and the great composer's guests were compelled to vacate in haste and the home became a temporary hospital for Italy's heroes in whose honor Verdi had composed many of his inspired choruses and his best orchestral pieces. When the war ended and the former guests wished to return, ways of existence had changed. There was lack of money. In 1902 there had been money and much charity. An income of 50,000 lire yearly (about £6,000 at par rates) helped them to live, if not in luxury, in great ease. But now all this is changed and while it is being planned to again reestablish the home, expenses must be cut and new avenues of revenue found.

It is thought that Italians will not suffer these veterans to want and that the royalty on some of Verdi's operas now available for the home will be augmented by private subscriptions.

Dupre Makes Visit to America

Marcel Dupre, organist of Notre Dame, is to make his American debut in New York, Nov. 18th, and will later appear in a joint series of recitals in the metropolis and Philadelphia.

Dupre's "De Profundis," written in memory of the French dead in the war and first given in Paris at the Armistice Day ceremonies in 1919, is to be one of the special events of his visit here.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

Screen Snapshots
(Federated)

THAT it is possible to feel in such close contact with some of the most popular screen celebrities of the day, while witnessing one reel of film, seems unlikely. Yet it is true. For instance, Betty Blythe, made doubly famous by "The Queen of Sheba," an identity that will follow her through life, distributes her smiles among sailors aboard Battleship Arizona. Arrayed in smart street costume, which as the "Queen!" she was not called upon to wear, one may find that Betty's great charm is never hidden by apparel, for her friendly, genuine queenliness is as visible while expressing interest in the battleship equipment as when driving the chariot race.

Follows Hobart Bosworth. No wonder he is known as the "man's man." He is as deliberate in making ready for the camera as in his scenes, one of which is shown in the making.

Joey MacCreey is announced "with her family." Her maternal instinct might be called a realistic bit of acting, the objects of her affection being well behaved honest-to-goodness orang-outangs. There is no "monkey business." What a source of envy to their brothers in the zoos!

King Baggott, remembered among "fans" as an actor is seen next, directing "bathing scenes" with Marie Prevost, the "reel" bathing girl, herself, and other celebrities acting as "extras."

For the finish has wisely been held views of the all-star Western Rodeo which Pauline Frederick staged at her Beverly Hills estate for the benefit of crippled children. In the frolic are seen: Ben Turpin, Larry Semon, Will Rogers, Ruth Roland, George Beban, Rudolf Valentino, Slim Summerville, Mabel Normand, Penrhyn Stanlaws, Charles Murray and Nazimova, in addition "Snowy Baker," riding his Australian mount, with some thrilling thrills.—LILLIAN R. GALE.

"Nature Lovers' Rambles"
(Kineto Review No. 161)

MR. URBAN takes his audience by the hands and leads them through a farm, giving a brief introduction to each and every animal found within its borders. It is a very fertile farm for every animal from a cow to kittens is presented for inspection. A few insects, bees, moths, butterflies, spiders and partridges make their bows. Two roosters start a six round battle which is regrettably, never finished. And this is all of the picture. There are not titles, the pictures of farm animals succeeding one another without verbal introduction. Length one reel.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"What's the Limit"
(Sketchograf Series — Released Through Educational Exchanges—One Reel)

DEVELOPED from the arms conference this cartoon is not only of the greatest interest to the public, but is instructive of the aims and ideals of the naval limitation plan. "What's the limit?" is the pith of the entire debate and a series of intimate drawings the nations of the earth are shown sitting together and talking over the proposition. "Well boys, what do you say?" asks Uncle Sam. Cartoons show that ninety seven per cent of the United States revenue is used to pay for past and prepare against future wars. The argument against unlimited armament and senseless naval competition is brought vividly to the mind of the audience. "What's the Limit" should be acceptable in any theatre. Length one reel.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Old Dynamite"
(Universal Western—Two Reels)

A TYPICAL Western feud is exposed in Universal's "Old Dynamite," which takes up the conflict between neighboring ranches with a discharged foreman adding fuel to the fire. Old Dynamite is the owner of the Lawson ranch and he is at war with the superintendent of the adjoining Melrose ranch over the boundary. A tenderfoot stranger enters the scene and because of his ability is made superintendent of the Lawson ranch. Meanwhile the love interest finds expression in the young man's advances to Old Dynamite's daughter.

Some good melodrama is offered which carries plenty of Western atmosphere and action. It presents the youth leading the old man's forces against the neighboring ranchmen, and rescuing the girl from the discharged foreman. There is a twist at the end which reveals the young man disclosing himself as the real owner of the neighboring ranch. And by winning the girl he settles the long established feud. The picture keeps going from beginning to end and is adequately acted by Percy Challenger in the title role, Harry De More, Ben Haggerty and Laura La Plante.—LAURENCE REID.

"Permanent Peace"
(Presented by Charles Urban—One Reel)

THE arms conference in Washington is responsible for this single reel subject, although the picture is broader in scope and shows scenes of the conference at Versailles, and the League of Nations in session at Geneva. After a title, "Lest We Forget" are shown some war scenes, and then follow peace sentiments uttered by such men as Foch, Haig, Petain, Wilson, Admirals Jellico, Kato and Sims. The peace pageant in Paris is shown. There are also some views of modern naval vessels which are inspiring. The view of the League of Nations in session is unique.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Kiss and Make Up"
(Christie Comedy — Released Through Educational Exchanges, Inc.—Two Reels)

IF this comedy is not up to the Christie standard, let the blame fall chiefly upon the story. The farce comedy idea in back of all the nonsense has neither the sparkle nor originality of previous Christie offerings. Helen Darling and Earl Rodney, the latter acting with an oversupply of dash and vigor, are featured.

The story concerns newlyweds. Hubby insists upon hotel life, so to a hotel they go, and after his wife becomes the belle of the establishment, they migrate to a California bungalow. Then, when wifie is planning a surprise party for him, the husband comes home unexpectedly. The musician, caterer and florist are made to hide behind curtains and beneath sofas. They are discovered, of course, and accused of being the wife's lovers. There are further complications when a messenger boy, by mistake, brings an amorous letter to the wife. The atmosphere clears eventually.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"A Battle Against Odds"
(Return of Cyclone Smith Series—Universal)

THE second of the "Return of Cyclone Series" offered on the Universal program presents Eddie Polo in a characteristic Western. The plot revolves around the recording of an option of valuable oil lands, with the heroine taking up the difficult duty of putting it on record. She encounters the hirelings of the villain, but Cyclone Smith, the roving cowboy rescues her and chases the outlaws. Later the plot develops another conflict to get the papers, the villain having employed a dance hall girl to recover them. The end comes after a melodramatic moment in which Cyclone takes up the pursuit of the senorita and the sheriff takes up the chase of the elusive outlaws. The picture is staged appropriately and acted by a cast that includes Kathryn Meyers, Malveen Polo and Joseph Hastings.—Two Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Playing Possum"
(Century Comedy—Two Reels)

THE attempt at suicide is always mirth provoking whenever the unhappy pessimist can think up enough novel methods to take his life. In this Century comedy, Harry Sweet relies upon many tried and true situations as well as some which can be catalogued as entirely new and novel. Harry has had a verbal tiff with his wife and in despair because she has had the last word, he decides to end it all. He employs flivvers, cars, trains, roughnecks and divers and sundry other methods—all to no avail. He seems to bear a charmed life because something always happens to prevent the suicide. Finally Harry gives up in disgust. And to show the way of fickle nature it is when he resolves to let well enough alone that a car comes along and hits him. This comedy is up to the usual standard—a neat little filler. —LAURENCE REID.

"Stars and Stripes"
(Hallroom Boys Comedy—Federated)

THERE is nothing patriotic about this short subject, despite the title. It refers to two escaped convicts who borrow the clothes of the Hallroom Boys, while they are endeavoring to wash away the odor contracted through close contact with a skunk. There is a dog who hauls them in a conveyance, hitched up like a horse and buggy. The dog does the best acting in the outfit.

Perhaps comedy can be extracted from showing humorous happenings in a prison, especially the interior of the room where electrocutions take place, but it surely will not appeal to a semi-refined or at all sensitive audience. It is hardly a thing to burlesque. The boys are mistaken for the escaped convicts, confined to prison quarters, and their antics with the Warden and attempts to escape go to make up the two reels, which strains hard to be funny. Direction Herman C. Raymaker.—LILLIAN R. GALE.

"A SAILOR MADE MAN"

(Harold Lloyd-Hal Roach-Asso. Exhib.)

All's Well in This Rollicking Comedy—A Sure Laugh Getter

"OH for the life of a sailor!" That's how more than one spectator will express himself after seeing Harold Lloyd's humorous comedy of the bounding deep, "A Sailor Made Man." The Hal Roach star has employed all the rich ideas which are associated with a sailor's life and has presented them in such a clever manner that one funny scene, one ludicrous burlesque, follows another with lightning rapidity. It is a carefully worked out comedy, there being a stamp of rehearsal over it which indicates that Lloyd never offers anything hap-hazardly conceived and executed. Give a comedy plenty of rehearsal to put over the stunts and incidents so as to give them a flavor of spontaneity and introduce some brand new ideas—and you can rely upon clever entertainment every time.

Hal Roach has spent a snug sum in creating a comedy which is correct in its realism, which contains rich sets, and which never relies upon worn-out hokum. Trust the Roach-Taylor-Lloyd-Newmeyer quartette to present original ideas. The longest sufferer from dyspepsia on earth is going to forget his troubles in watching the begoggled comedian burlesque life on a warship. The sponsors have used a genuine man-of-war with real sailors and everything to give it an authentic stamp. And to point out every detail would consume a volume. Let it be said that Lloyd is a rich idler who is advised by the girl's father to get to work if he is serious regarding matrimony.

His efforts at the recruiting station are exceedingly funny. But it is his duties on board ship—his tricks in avoiding the rough-neck sailor which will bring the loudest laughs. Finally the two enter partnership and their efforts to outwit the officers and the other men are presented in some brand new incident. Meanwhile the ship has reached some Oriental port and the sailors get shore leave. Here is the comedy at its zippy punch. The girl's party have also gone ashore from the yacht. And the plot takes up some original stunts before Lloyd succeeds in rescuing her from a harem and saving his own hide from the villainous caliph. Lloyd, dreaming that he is an officer, and marching through the ranks lined up for inspection, while his eyes are focused straight ahead, strikes home—it is so real. And when the two pals are overwhelmed by eight Arabs and the tough guy telling Lloyd to take his four, the comedian waits until a quartette have been "sent to sleep" by his buddy and then points with pride to the fact that his delegation has taken the count. He calmly asks—"What made you take so long?" It is such episodes as these which are constantly flashed which makes this comedy so uncommonly clever. Another incident shows him eating some pastry made up like a sailor's hat which arouses his pal to the probable thought—"what manner of man is this anyhow." The girl is rescued in thrilling and funny fashion. Lloyd is constantly doing the unexpected. The titles are pithy and to the point and the cast and director co-operate with perfect team work. Certainly a gem of a comedy.—Lengh, 4 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

The Boy.....Harold Lloyd
The Girl.....Mildred Davis

By Hal Roach, Sam Taylor and Jean Havez.
Directed by Fred Newmeyer.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

If you want to come and see a rollicking story of the sea with the inimitable Harold Lloyd enacting a sailor—then come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see "A Sailor Made Man." This funny satire of a sailor's life is just about the cleverest comedy in which the star has appeared. It carries a deep sea tang about it that stimulates one. Fashioned by Sam Taylor and Hal Roach it gives a spectator a treat in the way that the sailor on one of Uncle Sam's warship's conducts himself. The boy is a wealthy idler—a land-lubber when the story begins. When the girl's father tells him to get to work if he would succeed in winning the daughter, the youth applies at a recruiting station and is accepted for three years. His duties on ship-board—his shore leaves—his rescue of the girl from a treacherous caliph in the Orient—his escapades everywhere—these bring the star to the foreground in scenes which are ridiculously funny. Mildred Davis plays the girl in spirited fashion and the cast comprises a goodly number of genuine sailors.

PROGRAM READER

Oh, Ho-Ho, for the life of a sailor. You will be shouting it, singing it once you have seen Harold Lloyd in "A Sailor Made Man," his newest contribution, which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This comedy presents this clever star in the richest opportunities for burlesque in which he has ever appeared. His moments on a real warship—his shore leave—his ridiculous comic moments—these are apparent throughout the unfolding of this exceptional picture. It is a picture which carries fifty minutes of solid laughter. A brand new assortment of gags, stunts and incidents are flashed. Come and see this breezy comedy. You will want to join the navy after seeing it.

SUGGESTIONS

You can work up a lot of interest for this comedy. Snappy teasers, ads, catch-lines and every conceivable line of argument can be exploited to put this comedy over. Play up that it compares with "Never Weaken," and gives Harold Lloyd a chance to show his capabilities in another direction. A prologue can feature an ensemble showing the deck of a ship with the men garbed in sailor suits singing and dancing sea chanties. The girls can be placed in an ensemble to represent a crew. Ket them in and the spectators will attend to the rest.

"THE LIGHT IN THE CLEARING"

(T. Hayes Hunter-Hodkinson)

Powerful Melodrama; Superior Entertainment

THERE are reasons more definite than the "moralizing" trend of the times for sex plays and objectionable farce having faded into insignificance when it comes to pictures. Such offerings as "The Light in the Clearing" are more or less responsible. It is not difficult to forego one enjoyable form of entertainment if another, more interesting and of greater purpose, is substituted.

A worthy example of this has been accomplished in the dramatization of Irving Bacheller's heralded story in the hands of the directorial genius, T. Hayes Hunter. His keen visualization is plainly evident. He has given picture followers another production that will add to his list of prize winners.

It was not an easy task to incorporate the counterplot and voluminous detail, integral parts of Mr. Bacheller's story. In fact, it has taken a picture of too great a length to do it. The interest develops slowly, there being an excess of description and characters to introduce. Once it gets a fair start, however, it runs along at an increasing speed until the first great climax. Therefore it is necessary to arouse the interest again.

It would be impossible to outline the story, the lives of the characters being interwoven with one another, developing a story each in itself. Suffice it to say that it is of the "New England" variety, and the time, long, long ago, Mr. Hunter's great respect for details has been carried throughout. If anything to hold the "atmosphere" were missing, we did not notice it. He selected a cast that is second to none. Each player scores in a part that has required artistic as well as hard work.

It tells of a great American statesman and a harmless half crazed woman, who many years before was cast out by her father and spends her time hunting for the child she gave birth to twenty years previous. The statesman has no connection with the disaster except to endeavor to right the wrong. He is a firm believer in following the "still small voice" of one's conscience, the theme being intended to prove that in living aright, regardless of seemingly unimportant side-steps, one may hope to profit ultimately and that one step in the wrong direction may lead to others, thence to a misspent life.

The scenes depicting the attack on the jail by men intent upon a lynching, the suspense held while the young hero defends the law, is among the most thrilling incidents yet seen on the screen and certainly well done.

There is a lesson for the young and old, the love interest supplied by a clean cut youth who admires the daughter of a village snobs. And one of the best things about the offering is the excellent photography.—Seven reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Did you read Irving Bacheller's great story, "The Light in the Clearing"? If so, don't miss the screen version, which comes to the ———— theatre on ————. If you did not read it, do not miss profiting by the great lesson it teaches and at the same time see a thrilling, melodramatic photoplay of such unusual distinction that it includes scenes never before attempted on the screen. It was directed by T. Hayes Hunter, who was responsible for "Earthbound" and "Desert Gold." It has a cast that will please the most critical. Life-like New England characters are perfectly depicted, and a worthy lesson taught.

PROGRAM READER

Not only in the "sunny South" was "lynching" once prevalent. It happened in New England, too. In "The Light in the Clearing," screen version of Irving Bacheller's great story, the scene of the attempted "lynching" is one of the vital "punches," and it is said to be "reel realism" of a real kind. It is the dramatization of a world-wide famous book. The director of "Earthbound" has given it the same powerful presentation that is identified with his previous work. It is a Hodkinson production with a cast guaranteed to please—their names all being familiar to followers of photoplays.

CATCH LINES

How Bart Baynes overcame the four perils and took his place as a leading figure in the community.

How Roving Kate saved Bart from the fourth and greatest peril that confronted him.

The mob that gathered to take Amos Grimshaw from the clutches of the law, and how it failed.

"SILENT YEARS"
(Gasnier-R-C Pictures Corp.)

Accurate Screening of Powerful Novel

A DISTINCTIVE offering. One that will satisfy the demand for "something different." Incorporates spendid direction, unusually fine photography, a worthy cast. It is a Northwestern melodrama of great human appeal. It is unlike the ordinary run of pictures if for no other reason than that the leading character is a woman not possessed of any great beauty of face or form, yet blessed with an able mind, high spirit and a character so genuine as hold the intense interest established with her first appearance. Also, in that this story begins and remains in one locale, the great Canadian country, through which flows the St. Lawrence River. Most of the action centers in and around the cabin, situated in the Canadian woods, while incidental scenes depict life in an adjoining village. Therefore, it can be truthfully said that the scenic value is paramount.

Founded upon Harriet T. Comstock's famous novel, "Mam'selle Jo." Daughter of a brutal, unnatural father, who drinks himself to death, leaving Jo and an invalid sister to struggle for a livelihood, the woman, Jo, robbed of feminine charm because of her work-a-day life, assumes the responsibility of caring for the more unfortunate sister. There are no means of support, the roof over their heads heavily mortgaged, and an unscrupulous land shark lying in wait, to foreclose. Jo is a competent farmer in addition to being a skilled needle woman. Through her untiring efforts, debts are gradually paid off and necessities supplied.

A fine specimen of Canadian manhood loves Jo, despite her unattractiveness, and asks her to become his wife. Jo, feeling duty bound to devote her endeavors to the nursing of her little sister back to health, asks him to wait until she feels more competent to assume wifehood and prospective motherhood. In pique, he marries another woman, a spineless flatterer, intent upon conquest. The news of the union crushes Jo, who bravely conquers her sorrow, puts her shoulder to the wheel, goes on paying up debts, only then to lose the beloved sister.

Some years later, the old lover, robbed of his health, returns to Jo's cabin, while she is absent, leaves a sick child, writes a note explaining his condition, begs Jo to raise and care for her, stating the mother has not seen her since she was a baby, and proved unfit to bring up a daughter.

Starved maternal affection vents itself upon the little girl, whom Jo raises to girlhood, the object of town gossip and slight, the evil element having started a report that the child is hers.

In the end, the mother's confession to the parish priest establishes the identity of the child, who, unable to understand the way in which she is treated, marries the son of Jo's persecutor. The child's gratitude and loyalty to the foster-mother, however, brings Jo happiness in the end, of which she was deprived many years.—Length, 6 reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Are you weary of the petite, artificial, dressed up, sometimes soulless sort of feminine lead in motion pictures? Would you be interested in seeing a thrilling, compelling drama of Canadian life, in which a woman of soul and beauty of character, unselfishly sacrifices herself through life, that others may profit, as the principal character? Then don't miss "Silent Years," the screen version of Harriet T. Comstock's great novel of human sacrifice, which comes to the ———— theatre on next ————.

It is accurate in the description of "Mam'selle Jo," Mrs. Comstock's beautiful story, in which Rose Dione, the French tragedienne, is the leading character. Others in the cast include many of your screen favorites and regardless of how many motion pictures you have seen, in "Silent Years" you will find something entirely apart from those that have gone before.

PROGRAM READER

Harriet T. Comstock's great human novel, "Mam'selle Jo," has been adapted for the screen, and produced under the title of "Silent Years." It is that great story laid in the St. Lawrence River country, in Canada and was directed by Louis J. Gasnier, one of the foremost directors of the cinema, whose success in the screen version of "Kismet" has been difficult to equal. It is the story of a woman, who, having no beauty of face or form, was deprived, for a time, of the beautiful things in life for which she longed and, more eloquent than words can describe, the character of this woman is depicted on the screen, against a background of storm, passion and strife. An unusual photoplay.

CATCH LINES

Just what is a good woman? "Silent Years" is the story of one good woman, despised and slighted by other "good women," because she chose to live her life in her own way, with no respect for their ideas of convention, yet herself a living monument to truth and love.

"LOVE NEVER DIES"
(King Vidor-First National)

Enough Homespun Touches to Make an Average Heart Interest Drama

KING VIDOR has long been recognized as a director who is ever striving to make his contributions genuine. He is ever searching for the human note and audiences who patronize his offerings are certain to find enough of this element to satisfy them. The exhibitor who books "Love Never Dies" will present his patrons with a good heart interest drama—a drama which cannot be said to represent Mr. Vidor at his best because the realities striven for are marred occasionally by a faulty continuity. This director is strong for the simple virtues of love and faith and he manages to express them even when the plot carries illogical treatment.

The fact that a blase audience in a New York neighborhood house laughed over a scene created for the simple effect of displaying a blighted romance is no reason that it won't be taken seriously elsewhere. New York has its boob element too—an element looking constantly for the risque note. So when the youth returns to his snug little cottage, discovers his wife gone, flops on the bed, gives himself up to tearful despair, and pulls his better half's nightdress from beneath the pillow and fondles it tenderly, this New York audience snickered. It thought it had found something risque. True it is that the interest of this congregation is not always held. It is difficult to establish the identity of two characters—one of whom is represented as the boy's evil mother. And when a disappointed suitor informs the girl's religious father of his rival's true identity the old man takes his daughter away.

That's all there is to the plot. And the title comes into its expression with sharp emphasis. The interludes show the youth rising to the top, a snug companionship with his little bride, and some gentle comedy expressed by a feminine Wesley Barry—freckles and all. Some of the action never becomes definite through a faulty arrangement of scenes. King Vidor has gotten away from simple standards to add a couple of melodramatic touches—one of which shows a thrilling miniature of a train going off a high trestle, the other flashing a picturesque and vivid shot of a rescue scene, with the hero who had returned Enoch Arden like to claim his bride, saving his rival from a watery suicide—the rival having married the unhappy woman through the belief that her former husband is dead. Will the public overlook the inconsistencies? We are inclined to believe it will find the love note, accept the pretty backgrounds, and adequate acting, and forget the more or less arbitrary plot and illogical development. Certainly it inspires sentiment and a sort of romantic illusion.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story of abiding faith, of a disillusioned love, of the power of romance is "Love Never Dies," which comes to the ———— theatre next———— as a King Vidor production featuring Lloyd Hughes and a cast that includes Madge Bellamy, Frank Brownlee, Claire McDowell and others. It is a simple story of a powerful love—a love that continues though it is shattered by tragic episodes. The plot revolves around a young man who is condemned by the community because of the shady reputation of his mother. This does not deter him from an ambition to succeed. And when his ability is manifested in a neighboring town, a girl responds to his advances and accepts him. He brings her home to a snug little cottage and is happy until her father is acquainted with the news concerning his ancestry.

So the elder man takes his daughter away, and the husband believing the worse, picks up his belongings and seeks sanctuary in a distant city. Eventually he returns to find his bride the wife of another. The moments with her brings back all the heartaches but he gracefully departs. Her second husband, appreciating the true facts, attempts to commit suicide and succeeds but only after a fruitless attempt is made to save his life. Eventually the wicked mother is revealed as no relative at all. The picture ends happily. It is well acted and staged and comprises several dramatic thrills.

PROGRAM READER

Does love ever die? Is it possible to marry a young girl and love her devotedly with the ardor of the courtship days? Suppose there was some taint connected with your name and the wife's father stole your bride away? Would your love continue to flourish? It has been said by ancient and modern philosophers that love never dies—that once born—that once the man and woman with perfect understanding appreciate this divine emotional fire—that it never can be consumed. Whatever the poets and philosophers say about it—one thing is certain that "Love Never Dies" makes a thoroughly compelling picture—one with strong sentiment and appealing romance and thrilling dramatic moments. At this theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

A King Vidor picture is usually dependable as entertainment because of the human, simple, homespun note which is invariably found in one. So play up "Love Never Dies," as picture which carries fine sentiment, genuine homespun touches, a fine flavor of romance and several dramatic touches. A prologue can be built around the theme. Also romantic, sentimental songs indicating the title in some shape or other can be used as a feature. Play up King Vidor as the man who produced "The Jack Knife Man." The title is a winner and should be exploited for its true value. Play up Lloyd Hughes and Madge Bellamy who are in the cast. Start a series of catch lines and teasers built around the title.

CATCH LINES

See "Love Never Dies," a picture of youthful love and faith—a picture of rich illusions—a picture of fine sentiment and appeal. Don't miss it.

"MOLLY O"
(Sennett-First National)

They Have Another "Mickey" Here

THEY all said he couldn't do it—produce another "Mickey," but Mack Sennett has come through again with a clever comedy-drama, and Mabel Normand is the star. "Molly O" is a sort of Irish Cinderella story, relying a great deal upon an identical plot, which shows a girl of modest circumstances, hoping and realizing a fine position in the world. But Sennett is craftsman enough not to trust the picture to this simple plot. He has elaborated it with as fine an Irish sauce as has ever lurked about a dish of corned beef and cabbage.

The story gets off to a flying start, showing the fire engines running wild, and Mabel speeding ahead of them on a trusty bicycle. Her shack is dominated by a contractor from the ould sod; her lover is a roughneck plumber, excellently played in straight fashion by Eddie Gribbon, who, if he never does another thing, will be remembered for having the biggest boob hair cut ever seen. Molly, as played by Mabel Normand, might be another name for Mickey. She flashes her individual talent as it hasn't been flashed since that earlier triumph. She is Irish through and through—the tilt of her head—her mannerisms and gestures, her carriage—her impulses, and finally the conversation which she speaks—these are genuinely Celtic.

Molly picks up the paper and discovers a Beau Brummel physician on the front page. Who will be the lucky bride? She measures her position in life but it does not prevent her from giving play to her romantic fancies. She will have him or die in the attempt. And she gets him despite the rough-house tactics of her father and Irish lover. Keeping pace with the story are a hundred and one incidents which characterize a Sennett picture. He even becomes a Griffith and philosophizes and in those scenes he bests that director. He does a Griffith scene much better than Griffith does a Sennett scene. When the fashionable doctor takes her home and sits down to dinner, you will see a typical Irish scene—one thoroughly genuine and rich in local color. And when the charity ball is given and father stays up late to prevent Molly from attending, her mother aids her in stealing from the house and she appears at the ball disguised as a grand dame, and leads the grand march because she is made up to resemble the doctor's fiancee. She comes home and is advised to leave.

And the next scene finds her married with the father interrupting the happy love nest by a flash of gun play. He sees the light and the girl forgives him. Sennett has introduced an anti-climax which leads one to think it might be a different story. It shows a melodramatic touch with a villain lurking about to compromise the heroine. The Irish family are all in society, and Molly is rescued in startling, dramatic fashion from a dirigible. This mighty thrill is so novel that it could be used for a future production. However, it does not detract from the enjoyment of this live comedy. The soft focus effects—the lighting—the backgrounds—the acting—all are in their proper place.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mabel Normand, who will be remembered for her clever picture, "Mickey," will be the attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— in her new contribution to the screen, "Molly O," written and supervised by Mack Sennett, and directed by F. Richard Jones. This comedy, based upon a Cinderella theme and showing the manner and custom of an Irish family, reveals a thousand and one little intimate touches which are appealing and fascinating. The star plays the part of Molly, a family drudge, who delivers washing and does odd chores. She dreams of a fine romance. Eventually she meets her ideal because her Irish blood compels her to get everything there is out of life. It is a picture which flashes from grave to gay with charming appeal. It is excellently staged and directed.

PROGRAM READER

Mabel Normand is the star of "Molly O." Nuff said. If you remember "Mickey" then you will recall that Mabel Normand is unusually gifted to play an Irish slip of a girl. So come next ———— and see this irrepressible star in the greatest triumph of her career. Come and see this Mack Sennett picture which takes you from the depths to the heights—which shows you a cross-section of an Irish home—where you see the family living their comic and quaint lives—a life of poetry and song.

SUGGESTIONS

This comedy can be put over by simply comparing it to "Mickey." Most everyone has seen the latter picture and by bringing it into comparison you will be putting it over with the public. For further advertising, a complete poster, teaser, throwaway campaign should be used. Go after every type of patron. Get them in. Put on a musical prologue. An Irish tenor or an Irish reel—these and similar ideas can be employed. Irish tunes should be used entirely for your prologue and if the picture carries a score—use it. Play up Mabel Normand.

"THE SIN OF MARTHA QUEED"
(Dwan-Associated Exhibitors)

Story of Parental Distrust and Anger Is Fairly Entertaining

ALLAN DWAN has drawn a very sharp dividing line between good and evil in his picture "The Sin of Martha Queed," which he wrote and directed himself. It may be that there are such fathers scattered about ruling their households with a whip-hand, and who constantly fall back upon some religious scruple fostered by ancestors for their exceptionally cruel attitude, but visualized upon the screen and sharply emphasized they do not make very wholesome figures and leave one in a sort of unhappy frame of mind. Mr. Dwan has a lesson to point out—which is to show a toleration for the impressions of youth. However, he harps so continually upon his theme and turns it up to the light from so many angles that the fine flavor of romance fails at times in pointing a ray of sunshine.

The picture is too heavily balanced with depressing shadows. Joseph J. Dowling is intrusted with the role of the stern, religious, unyielding father, and so heavily does he interpret the figure that the sentimental side of the story is quite eliminated. It is hard to reconcile Mr. Dowling in this part because in "The Miracle Man" his mission was entirely opposite to what it is here. His daughter, a school teacher, does not possess a single trait of her parent. It happens that an accident causes her to remain a goodly portion of the night in a young man's cabin. And when an evil gossip—a drunken lout in other words—informs him of the fact, the father gives the girl a revolver and tells her to go upstairs and kill herself. This touch cannot be accepted as otherwise than crude.

The plot becomes illogical when the old man compels her to marry the drunken derelict—whose sin is real and genuine. The father's lack of sympathy and faith somehow does not ring true. The picture then develops a melodramatic note, showing the drunken husband being killed and the girl tried for the murder. And her father is the prosecuting attorney whose lack of any regard for his daughter's shame and unhappiness destroys any vestige of hope of redemption. Mr. Dwan is at least consistent, for applying a moment of humanity would be like mixing acid with sugar. It turns out that a cripple fired the fatal shot to save his ideal from a living death. The picture is eloquently staged amid scenes of rustic beauty, with long shots and medium shots revealing a wealth of atmosphere and local color. Mary Thurman plays the heroine with real appreciation for the pathos and sentiment, while Niles Welch fills the demands of the role representing the lover. Frank Campeau is colorful as the evil gossip.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture of broken faith—a picture of discord in a family in which the father is so stern and unyielding that he condemns everyone who does not obey his orders or thinks as he does—a picture of romance and undying love is "The Sin of Martha Queed," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast comprising Mary Thurman, Joseph J. Dowling, Eugenie Besserer, Niles Welch, Frank Campeau and others.

Allan Dwan, who wrote and directed the feature, has conceived a story which demands attention because of its dramatic sweep and the lesson it teaches—that of showing toleration. The heroine is a good girl, healthy and normal. But her father is ever condemning her because she does not live up to his religious scruples. When she remains away from home through suffering an accident, the father upbraids her and advises her to kill herself. Disappointed in this direction he compels her to marry a drunken derelict. The story progresses through several dramatic and romantic scenes which are appealing and rich in atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

Her father worshipped the religious scruples of his ancestors. He lived up to the stern manners and customs of the ancestral Queeds. Thus it was he could not look with toleration upon any fancy or impulse that varied from the orthodox policy of his life. His daughter committed no sin. But he thought it a sin. The big sin was his lack of understanding. This father actually——. To tell you more would rob you of the interest which this story demands. Rest assured that when you see "The Sin of Martha Queed" at the ———— theatre next ———— you will see a picture of misguided parental influence. You will see a picture which teaches a strong lesson. You will see a cast of clever players in this interesting work.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture is written and directed by Allan Dwan. If his name means anything to your patrons (and it should) then give him all the space possible. You can play up the theme which shows parental intolerance. And a teaser campaign pointed in this direction can stimulate a deal of interest. Play up the cast. Joseph Dowling, Niles Welch and Mary Thurman are in this cast, and your patrons are all familiar with their style of acting. They command attention through good work here. Play up the rich, dramatic thought which lies behind this picture. Use stills showing the beautiful exteriors.

"THE DEVIL WITHIN"
(Fox)

Not Up to "The Primal Law"

THOSE exhibitors who booked Dustin Farnum in "The Primal Law" will certainly discover that "The Devil Within" does not compare with it in entertainment values before the film has progressed very far in its plot. The brutal sea captain who browbeats his men has lost some of his vitality through constant repetition and the fact that a good share of hokum is uncovered concerning a curse of a Malay witch will be accepted as so much incident in making the story colorful. The best thing about the feature is its technical equipment, the exteriors in the fore-part revealing a genuine schooner and some appropriate atmosphere.

But when the story swings into its melodrama, it reveals such a wide range of plot and counter-plot that one must take it as a sort of harum-scarum adventure tale. It travels over two continents and a space of forty years. The brutal sea captain becomes an apostle of kindliness, but when he marries his wife and child die, the thought is brought home to him that the witch is having her way with the curse. There is absent any semblance of dramatic form or unity, though the vitality of the melodrama keeps one more or less interested. The latter part of the story discloses the old skipper living the life of a recluse in a made over boat with paraphernalia of the sea, and some old cronies as his only companions. His life here revolves around the adulation he pays his grandson who is ungrateful for the old man's attentions. He is as vicious and brutal as the erstwhile skipper.

The plot builds several crude scenes before the old man saves the life of the boy by tossing off a formula to discover whether it is fatal—the formula being used for poison which has been carried on the end of a sword which was hurled at him years before. The atmosphere of the land-locked boat is first rate, but the action is of the topsy-turvy variety—no attention being given to show characterization or incident, but only an intent to reveal a punch. Dustin Farnum is hardly the type for the brutal captain, since his good-natured smile disarms him from any thought of real viciousness. As the old man he is much better, though here he sticks out his chest in a youthful manner as if he was in the first flush of unbounded vigor and health. A series of close-ups are employed which reveal many faults of character portrayal. However, "The Devil Within" contains a flash of rugged adventure. Forgetting the illogical touches and it is apt to please those who go to the theatre solely for recreation.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The latest Dustin Farnum feature, "The Devil Within," is to open at the ———— theatre next ————. It recalls in part Jack London's "Sea Wolf," and contains a battle of brute strength against mental strength and the latter quality triumphs. It is a picturesque story which travels over two hemispheres, taking up for its theme a curse which is used as a symbol of wrath that falls upon a man for his habitual violation of the laws of God and man.

The story opens with Captain Briggs ruling his crew with an iron hand. He obtains a clay idol that the natives hold sacred, and thereby brings down on his head the curse of Vishnu. The captain retires from the sea and marries. He loses his wife and later becomes enfeebled as a result of sorrow and age. His only interest in life is his grandson, Hal. The picture carries tense scenes and many thrills and is capably acted.

PROGRAM READER

A smashing, vigorous, thrilling picture of the deep sea—a dramatic story of a brutal captain who was visited with a curse—a powerful picture of retribution of a redeemed soul—this is "The Devil Within," whch comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with the virile Dustin Farnum as the star. You will see this popular actor playing a vigorous, fighting part with all the customary finesse for which he is famous. You will see a colorful tale of life in the South Seas. You will see battles galore. You will see the kind of picture which only Dustin Farnum can interpret. So come next ———— and see "The Devil Within."

SUGGESTIONS

By playing up Dustin Farnum and bringing to the minds of your patrons that this sterling actor has lately returned to the screen you will stimulate a curiosity which will eventually bring him back his erstwhile following. Play up that his first release, "The Primal Law," is equalled in punch and tense drama with "The Devil Within." Emphasize that it is the kind of story which appeals to red-blooded men and women. Play up its adventure, its hefty punches, its local color, its conflict, sweep, vigor and vitality. But your best bet is the star. Use stills and give him a good send-off. An Oriental dance would be effective as a prolog.

"THE FOURTEENTH LOVER"
(Metro)

Typical Viola Dana Number; Pleasing Entertainment

GIVE Viola Dana one of these snappy romances, which calls for a healthy lot of flirtation and cutting up didoes in the accepted sub-deb fashion, and this star may be depended upon to score whether the story contains any imagination or not. It happens that this particular document follows an orthodox plot if you remember that it has been used as the background for many a polite comedy. It varies somewhat in that the heroine is not content to be satisfied with one or two or three or four lovers, but must have twelve or thirteen or fourteen. And being a spoiled child, the appeal of the picture is found in her tantrums with a guardian aunt who would marry her off to the thirteenth eligible, when the girl discovers that the fourteenth is her ideal, notwithstanding the fact that he is the gardener on the estate.

That's all there is to the picture. It keeps going because scenes are given the proper balance. The gardener has his moments—many of them—and for the sake of conflict the eligible suitor is given certain encouragement. The aunt packs the girl off to the summer home and the latter is diplomat or politician enough to lug the gardener along. He knows his place and keeps it, but when the girl strikes up a bold attitude he is lover enough to respond. The aunt catches them in a romantic embrace and the gardener is discharged. Here is the moment for Viola Dana to register her saucy pout. She pouts and pouts and pouts some more and when the aunt stages a bit of intrigue to belittle the gardener the girl accepts the advances of the thirteenth suitor. Not for long, however, for the gardener's mother appears and tells her of the love her son has for the rich girl. So the heroine packs up hurriedly and elopes with him, to the discomfiture of her wealthy relatives.

The picture is single track in plot and incident, and any patron can tell the outcome far in advance. But despite the obvious note, the picture carries enough pep and vitality to get over. The scenes are appropriately staged and the photography is up to requirements. Jack Mulhall is inclined to pose as the hero, but his performance is satisfactory. Frederick Vroom and Kate Lester play the aristocrats in acceptable manner.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Viola Dana is the star of "The Fourteenth Lover" which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. In this comedy-drama, the piquant Metro star enacts the part of a spoiled darling—the heiress of vast wealth, whose object in life is seemingly matrimony. She has thirteen lovers, but owing to a belief in superstition she consents to have another. Everything is all set for the nuptials, when she falls in love with a common gardener working on her uncle's estate. He doesn't respond owing to his station in life and feeling himself incapable of caring for such a rich girl. But the heiress has her way, and after many vicissitudes which take the characters through scenes of compromise and rich comedy, the picture ends in a fine flash of romance. Miss Dana is thoroughly at home in the interpretation of the role and her abundant vitality comes to the foreground and is thoroughly appealing. Jack Mulhall and Theodore Von Eltz are in the cast. Harry Beaumont directed.

PROGRAM READER

One would think that a girl would have enough to do taking care of one lover or say at the most three or four. But when a girl comes along who boasts of thirteen lovers and is looking for the fourteenth one to add a little more variety —well all you can do is throw up your hands and wish her the best luck in the world. You rather suspect that she is a little flirt—that she cannot know her own mind. Maybe that's why she is hunting for the fourteenth lover. Viola Dana found him working in her uncle's garden. He was just a working man. But he meant more to her than the pampered sons of the rich. Come and see Viola Dana in "The Fourteenth Lover." Next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is Viola Dana at her piquant best. So get out your copy and state that she has a winner in this picture which presents her in the role of a wealthy coquette whose object seems to be that of adding one lover after another. She has thirteen and is looking for the fourteenth and she finds him. Your copy should be made real snappy and up to the point. Make it breezy. Tell that every girl has a lover or more when she goes to a summer resort. Play it up as a snappy comedy of youth and springtime. Feature Jack Mulhall who appears in the opposite role. Ask your girl patrons if they can make snow pudding. Use this as a blind teaser. It fits into the story.

CATCH LINES

Some Moving Moments in This Production

THE George Loane Tucker of "The Miracle Man" which put him in the film hall of fame as one of the few imaginative directors of the screen, has not found such a story in his last production. In the first place the idea does not carry the simple, broad, dramatic strokes, nor the human appeal, nor the exceptional message. This director, whose death cut short his uplifting work, flashes some of his individual talent for situation and climax in certain moments here, and his philosophizing is clearly established at times. But so complicated is the story which carries three distinct plots—so uneven is the character development that the story does not indicate any progression of reaching a smashing finale.

It is a story of the feminine sex on the defensive—their object being to make the most of their opportunities with little show of virtue. These figures are supplemented with a forlorn outcast who is depicted as receiving one tragic blow after another in her search for happiness. Mr. Tucker indicates that only the resourceful woman who is quick to grasp her opportunities in a man-made world is certain to succeed. Thus he tells the truth, for life shows no partiality only to those who possess the fighting instinct. The patron of average intelligence will wonder at times just what the director is driving at, since there are no clearly established broad strokes. The action centers around a group of wealthy characters all apparently living under one roof—the sole exception being the kitchen drudge who enters into the dramatic scheme in an arbitrary manner.

There is a long time in planting the characters, the heroine, played by Betty Compson, making a belated entrance. Once she appears on the scene there are no moments which show her developing any real character. Her portrayal seems the same when worshipping at a false shrine as when she finds the spark of love. But she is lovely to look at and in a bathing suit silhouetted against a sunset is splendidly radiant. The theme is that ladies must live contrary to the standard conventionalities which would keep them in their place—as dummy figures. But the psychology of the drama is not indicated because of the complicated incident and the uneven progression of the plot. There are some exquisite pictures and a few scenes of moving drama, but they never reach dominant climaxes because of the flow of counterplot. The picture is excellently staged, the lighting and technical arrangement being perfect. The cast interprets the separate characters with fairly adequate portrayals. The lack of simplicity never makes the spectator really acquainted with them. It is a picture which is apt to please after a fashion. The tone and quality will doubtless get it over.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The last production of the late George Loane Tucker, creator of "The Miracle Man," written by Alice Duer Miller, "Ladies Must Live," will be shown at the ———— theatre next ———— with Betty Compson as the star. This gifted actress who possesses great personal charm, will be remembered for her sterling performance in the first mentioned production, and in the feature to be presented next ———— she again flashes her exceptional talent and charm. The feature carries a vital, appealing theme.

Miss Compson has the role of a young girl who has been reared by her rich brother-in-law and whose penniless father plans to marry her off to some rich man in order that his income, derived from his son-in-law, may be increased. But there is another woman who has similar plans to obtain an easy living and two clash with interesting results.

PROGRAM READER

All the sides of a woman's life—her glory—her foibles, her ways with the world and men. These are intimately brought forth in the Betty Compson picture, "Ladies Must Live," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. George Loane Tucker, who created the memorable offering, "The Miracle Man," once again flashes his genius for moving pictures which tell something. And Miss Compson, long recognized as one of the real accomplished actresses of the screen and whose personal charm is not excelled, reveals a talent that places her in a secure place—a place which has established for her a wonderful popularity.

SUGGESTIONS

Since Betty Compson is the star of this production, you should give her name every possible space for exploitation. Tell that she was the outstanding star of "The Miracle Man," and that she again duplicates her performance in that memorable picture. Use stills of her. She is recognized as one of the real beauties of the screen. Play up George Loane Tucker, and feature him as the director of "The Miracle Man." Describe the picture as a consistent document of modern life. Play up its theme and mention the large cast, which comprises players well known to every fan. A prologue might feature a society set, with dancing and singing holding the high lights.

"LITTLE EVA ASCENDS"

Clever Comedy Furnishes Amusement and Novelty

THE exhibitor who wants to give his patrons something unique in the way of comedy—a comedy which is entirely novel, bright and illuminating, should not overlook "Little Eva Ascends," adapted from the Satevepost story of the same name with Gareth Hughes doubling as the sad, but pretty daughter of St. Clair in the road company of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It is a novel burlesque, and the fact that this antiquated play has served Mack Sennett will not lessen its entertainment values. It is not raw burlesque such as he concocted, for behind it is a legitimate story of an ambitious stage mother who has placed her two sons in a company and is touring the provinces.

The idea is so novel—so rich in its humor and quality of make-believe that it stands out conspicuously as one of the comedy treats of the season. Once again the sponsors have guaged the star's adaptability for comedy expression. And he fits into the role of Little Eva like a born pantomimist. The picture opens on a train with the company speeding to a town which harbors the hero's sweetheart. He argues and rebels against going on in the role for fear of the humiliation that will sweep over him once the girl sees him. But his argument is of no avail when it is pointed out that his absence would spoil the show. There is some bright comedy flashed when the "troupers" reach the hotel and the woman's two sons are given commercial travelers' meat instead of actor meat. This is because their father is the proprietor—a father they had never known since their mother had left the fireside years before and taken the children with her.

The father is made acquainted with his offspring and has a good time in watching the boys perform. There are some uproarious moments as the play unfolds. Little Eva cannot hide "her" identity. He is "spotted" by the little boys of the town and the girls discover his doubling act. Finally when he ascends to heaven via the step-ladder route and has a fall the show takes a flop and the hero doesn't care. The father invites the boys and the girls and some other fathers to his country estate. A grand reunion takes place, the boys are willing to give up the stage and the picture is over. It sparkles in nearly every scene, there being a wealth of good incident and the captions are snappy and to the point. Gareth Hughes will get over with a bang if given such clever ideas as "Little Eva Ascends." Comedy is his forte. May Collins and Elinor Field play the girls with plenty of animation.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is considered one of the cleverest and most illuminating comedies of the season is due to appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in "Little Eva Ascends," which introduces Gareth Hughes playing the part of the sad, but pretty little heroine of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Many will remember this story which appeared in the pages of a popular magazine, and it has been adapted to the screen with remarkable fidelity. It is a rare story, unusual of theme, and genuinely novel. The plot revolves around a traveling company whose only play is "Uncle Tom's Cabin." When the company is booked in a certain town, the young hero objects to playing his familiar role because of the humiliation attached to appearing in feminine disguises before his newfound sweetheart. However, his mother, the manager, has her way and he is compelled to bedeck himself up in the quaint costume. In the meanwhile he meets his father, the proprietor of the local hotel, and the story brings them all together. The picture is funny and cleverly acted. In the cast are Elinor Field, May Collins and Edward Martindell.

PROGRAM READER

Little Eva always died at a certain time every night. No matter whether they flogged Uncle Tom until his back was blue, Little Eva ascended to heaven by the stepladder route. But this particular night Little Eva did not want to play the role. Reason being that the man who doubled for St. Clair's pretty daughter, was in love with a girl, and he thought if she saw him as Little Eva she would give him up and be disillusioned. So he rebeled—did Gareth Hughes. Come and see "Little Eva Ascends," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. How the star plays Little Eva and gets into all sorts of trouble is told in five rollicking reels.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a particularly clever comedy—almost a riot in its mirth-provoking moments. So emphasize that it is something absolutely new—somethng novel. Play up the title. And make your copy entirely snappy. The original appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Acquaint your patrons with the fact that they are seeing a story which carries plenty of appeal. Tell that it is Gareth Hughes' best picture—a picture that is as rich as "Garments of Truth." You can put on a sort of burlesque number for a prologue—a burlesque on "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

CATCH LINES

See Gareth Hughes in "Little Eva Ascends," a picture of clever burlesque. Come and laugh.

"A PARISIAN SCANDAL"
(Universal)

Carries Enough Sparkle to Get Over

THERE may not be much to this story in the way of plot and characterization, and it is brittle and episodic in development, but in spite of these drawbacks this picture is certain to get over because there is a star adorning it who is rapidly making a name for herself as a capable light comedienne. Marie Prevost is certain to establish a healthy following once the sponsors have gauged her personality correctly. Just at present her vehicles are hardly substantial enough. "A Parisian Scandal" is pretty light to extend through five reels. And its weakness is noticeable in the array of incident and episode, for these qualities are forced to get over owing to a lack of any real plot interest.

The story is all about a vivacious French girl whose youthful enthusiasm —whose flapper tendencies cause her and her many host of suitors a peck of trouble. There is a spirit of "give and take" to the story which furnishes it with an adequate sparkle. The star flits in and out of rooms, doors, and other conveniences with delicious poise and charm. And she wears enough gowns to turn Lucile green with envy. The boys who are following the star's career on the screen (and there must be an army of them) because of her shapely figure, will not be disappointed here. The bathing suit episode comes into expression before the story has reached the climax. It is only a fleeting glimpse that she gives, but it is enough to send the boys home satisfied.

Meanwhile the patrons will look upon a piquant French girl whose mission in life is of no consequence. She flirts outrageously and finds particular delight in tormenting a peculiar type of American—a youth who is much of a book-worm or the species who revels in bugs and botany. You know him when you see him. He is begoggled and fussed every moment. The object of this story is to show him awakening to the call of love. Once he finds himself—well he beats up the wicked Frenchman. Thinking that he has no chance he sets sail for America, but the girl goes along on the same boat. And there you are. His mission in France is to report on the girl's character to her grandmother. There are scenes which show a gaming table—and others which show a duel and a storm. It is a light story but so dominant is the star's personality that she fairly carries the picture along on her pretty shoulders. The piece is not up to the caliber of some recent offerings, but is sparkling enough to succeed with the majority of fans.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Marie Prevost, the piquant and dainty Universal star, whose ability is now recognized by the screengoers, will come to the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest release entitled "A Parisian Scandal." In this bright little comedy-drama Miss Prevost plays a spirited French girl who gets into a peck of trouble but always manages to find a way out due to her resourcefulness and beauty. She has a host of suitors but turns a deaf ear to their entreaties until a young American comes over on a mission of the heroine's grandmother to locate the girl and report on her character. He meets the girl and is charmed by her deportment whether it is pleasingly wicked or sweetly virtuous.

His love is awakened when he has occasion to show a vicious nobleman his place. Thinking he has no chance to win the girl he leaves for America but she engages passage on the same boat and thus the picture ends. It sparkles with comedy and human touches, the star commanding attention through a clever impersonation and her ability to wear an elaborate array of costumes. Tom Gallery is the leading man.

PROGRAM READER

She came from gay Paree. One could see that at a glance—so adaptable was she for every mood. She delighted in cutting up capers—in smoking, flirting and carrying on pranks. And she constantly had a host of suitors jumping at her beck and call. These lovers were Frenchmen. Not until she met an American did she respond. And then her French character asserted itself in a piquant manner. She finds herself sought after by two desperate rivals—who fight a duel for her. It is a sparkling comedy with the star carrying the plot along on her pretty shoulders. Miss Prevost is a beauty who is destined to be extremely popular. Come to the ———— and fall in love with her in "A Parisian Scandal." Next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Marie Prevost has not been a star very long. But the few occasions which she has graced the screen has awakened a public response for her pictures. The reason may be found in her adaptability for light comedy as well as a pleasing figure and a piquant personality. Her latest picture is rather plotless, but it sparkles with plenty of humor and charm. So play it up as an entertaining light comedy with Marie Prevost in a likable role. Emphasize the star's ability to wear fine costumes. Use stills showing her in bathing attire. She is a big hit, and the boys are going to wake up and demand her pictures. Without a doubt she possesses the most shapely figure on the screen.

CATCH LINES

See Marie, Prevost the charming beauty, in "A Parisian Scandal." She is naughty but nice.

"PARTNERS OF THE SUNSET"
(Bert Lubin-States Rights)

Very Unusual and Pleasing Western Comedy Drama

HERE is a Western which refutes the opinion that there can be nothing new in this type of picture. "Partners of the Sunset" boasts of a hundred new bits of business, melodramatic action that is never stereotyped, artistry in lightings and camera work, settings that are not only totally unlike those of the unusual Western production, but which also measure with the best that can be found in a scenic; a fight which for originality and realism has never been excelled, and a lot of semi-educational views of life in Texas, all of which makes the feature unusually interesting and attractive from an audience standpoint.

As to story, "Partners of the Sunset" only uses so much of a plot as is necessary to make plausable the action and provide a reason for the dramatic situations. The picture begins with what might be termed character introductions, backed by scenic shots and original incident. It gradually explains that two Eastern girls who have inherited a ranch in Texas are being conspired against by a neighboring ranchman and his gang, the purpose being to purchase the property at less than its value. A young geologist, camping in the neighborhood, inspired by love of one of the girls, undertakes to frustrate the villain's plans. He does, in the meantime striking oil on the property, and finally the troth is plighted.

It is the way that this story is told and the action built up in perfect tempo which makes the picture grip and hold interest. There is nothing theatrical about it and there is no faking. When the hero has his fight with the villain's underlings, he doesn't lick a dozen big roughnecks, but is finally beaten in a realistic scrap of which almost every angle is new stuff on the screen. Likewise a scene in which the villain is killed is unique, not in what is accomplished, but in any way it is done.

"Partners of the Sunset" is the third starring vehicle for Allene Ray and certainly discounts her previous efforts in every way. The feature was directed by Robin H. Townley, who has proven himself an adept at devising incident and in gauging suspense.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The ———— theatre announces a new kind of Western picture in "Partners of the Sunset," booked for showing for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

The picture is the third starring vehicle for pretty, petite Alene Ray and shows this talented ingenue in a role eminently suited to her talents. Miss Ray plays the part of an Eastern girl who inherits a Texas ranch and decides to take up her residence on it. Here she learns to ride and shoot like a native daughter and finds her romance when a young geologist happens along to protect her from the villainous neighboring ranchman who desires to cheat her out of her property.

"Partners of the Sunset" is a striking example of the fact that there can be something new in a Western. This picture has all of the action of a Bill Hart offering, with much of the incident of a new turn and besides possesses all the beauties of a scenic, the heart interest of a light comedy and the suspense of a mystery drama.

In support of Miss Ray is a strong cast of well known players each selected carefully as to type. The feature was directed by Robin H. Townley and photographed by John K. Holbrook. Walter Hall wrote the story and scenario.

PROGRAM READER

"Partners of the Sunset," a new semi-Western picture, starring Allene Ray and with Robert Fraser and J. W. Johnston in prominent roles, is the feature picture scheduled for showing at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

The feature is announced as something new in pictures of its type, in that besides having the action, incident and suspense of the average Western, it also possesses a strong vein of humor, heart interest and some wonderful scenic views of an entirely new sort.

Robin H. Townley, the director has developed his story with a fine regard for tempo and incident and has caught the true spirit of the West as it is today. Miss Ray is cast in a suitable role and duplicates if not eclipses her performances in previous starring vehicles, "Honeymoon Ranch" and "West of the Rio Grande."

"Partners of the Sunset" is frfom an original story by Walter R. Hall and the photography is by John K. Holbrook.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill as a semi-Western stressing the fact that while the picture has the action of features of its kind it also possesses other qualifications. Boost Miss Ray for her beauty and talent and let your audiences know that while she has looks and personality, she can still ride a horse and put over the action stuff. If you have played Miss Ray's previous pictures, mention that as another of the series. Promise thrills, action, comedy, great photography and incident.

CATCH LINES

The story of an Eastern co-ed who undertook to boss a Texas ranch and got away with it.

A semi-humorous but thrilling picture laid in Texas, with action, incident and heart interest nicely mixed and distributed.

WHY I SHOW
Paramount Pictures

By

Robert G. Peltier

Proprietor Bijou Theatre

Mt. Clemons, Mich.

I have often been asked why I show Paramount Pictures at the Bijou Theatre. The answer, to me, is a very simple one. As long as I have been in the show business, and it is rounding out nearly 25 years at this time, I have always made it a point to cater to the demands of my public. If I didn't I would have been in the showman's graveyard long ago. If an exhibitor doesn't show good pictures his public will tell him about it. We have made it a point at the Bijou Theatre to get just as close to the public as possible, and one of the methods we use is a standing invitation to the people of Mt. Clemens to call us on the telephone at any time for any picture nformation they want. Therefore the telephone in our offices is buzzing most of the time.

For the past few months I have made it a point to tabulate the number of queries from prospective patrons on what we were showing, together with whatever comments they might have to make. I discovered at the end of a three months period that a little more than 90 per cent of the telephone inquirers were winding up their conversation with our employes by asking, "Is it a Paramount Picture?"

The name "Paramount" means something to me besides good, reliable pictures at all times. It means that my audiences are partly created in advance. If I never was convinced before, that telephone tabulation set me to thinking. If 90 per cent of the people that called our theatre were interested in knowing whether the day's offering was a Paramount picture or not, then the product must have a firm hold on the public mind.

A good showman can never allow himself to get into a rut and succeed. I believe that an exhibitor should constantly keep up with his public's wants. Because I keep my hand over the pulse of a good percentage of the people the Bijou Theatre caters to is the reason why I am showing Paramount pictures.

"CONCEIT"
A Unique Creation

"CONCEIT"

THE PICTURE OF NO REGRETS

"Conceit" is the second of the Selznick Supreme Six—the series of important picture productions of which "A Man's Home" was the first. It was directed by Burton George, from the story by Michael J. Phillips, and the scenario is by Edward J. Montagne, who wrote the script of "A Man's Home".

"Conceit" is one of those unforgettable pictures that stand out, distinctive achievements of the allied arts of the camera. Its characters are not mere "puppets, jerked by unseen wires," but men and women who love and hate, smile and weep, and fight intensely the tremendous battle of life.

"CONCEIT"

A TRIUMPH OF ALL THE ARTS

"Conceit" will interest everyone who has ever known fear or conquered fear—the fear of a relentless enemy, the fear of humiliation—the nameless fears of the night—and the fear of what people will say. It is a story of man at grips with himself in the asphalt lanes of the city and in the trackless forest. It is a story to stir the pulses—a drama of deeds.

From the lady of fashion to the simple daughter of the woods, from the millionaire sportsman to the wilderness outlaw—every role in "Conceit" is played by a master of dramatic interpretation. Wm. B. Davidson, Mrs. De Wolf Hopper, Charles Gerard, Betty Hilburn, Maurice Costello, Warren Cook, Patrick Hartigan—an impressive list.

THE PICTURE THAT HAS EVERYTHING!

"CONCEIT"

CAST—A group of distinguished players, perfectly adapted to their roles.

SETS—Staged under the personal direction of Albert d'Agastino, the noted Italian scenic artist.

Thrilling

FEW features have come out of the west which match this one for sheer action and breath-quickening heart throbs. It is a story of revenge and romance centered in the career of a character who killed by instinct and by profession. Sent to "get" a man, he found in the flashing blue eyes of his victim's sister a power which challenged the scrutiny of his steel-grey stare; a courage which matched his relentless nature. He became a champion of the weak, a protector of the innocent. He was feared and admired; despised and respected. He saved with the same savagery he had destroyed. The manner in which he deceived the girl in order to rescue her brother is one of the biggest moments in a feature which abounds with rapid-fire action. The story is vividly enacted by a cast which includes J. P. McGowan, Lillian Rich, Jean Perry, Gordon McGregor, Stanley Fitz, Andrew Waldron and Dorothy Wolbert.

You can book "The Ruse of The Rattler" and be assured that it will satisfy your patrons' demands for rousing good entertainment

Christmas Number Motion Picture News

For several years past our Christmas number has been the standard of values as a record book of the motion picture industry.

It affords the distributor an opportunity to list his product for the coming year and, equally important, to list his pictures already released.

To the producer, especially the independent, it affords an opportunity to go on record for the coming year by listing his past productions, how they have been distributed and his plans for next year, so that they may be a ready reference for the distributor and the industry at large.

It is important that your advertising appear in this number, the issue of December 31st, and an early reservation of space will be appreciated. Forms close December 17th. The rates remain the same as for our regular issues.

Here's a Review as Funny as the Picture!

Hand yourself a big laugh. The picture has hundreds of them. Wid's calls it one of the comedy hits of the year—Read This:

"Hel-lup, the Ship's Sinking."

"A splendid comedy. Live ly, funny and original. One of the best two reelers of the year. Every foot of 'The Boat' has a good laugh. The business is a scream and Keaton does some of his very best work in this one. No time is lost between the laughs. All the action has to do with the boat that Buster builds for himself in the cellar of his house. When he comes to put it into water he finds that it is too big to go through the door. He drags it out with a flivver and pulls the house down in doing so. From the ruins he saves a bath tub which he attaches to his ship for a lifeboat. His wife and children attend the launching and help hold the rope that lowers the boat into the water. Buster stands proudly at the bow as the boat slides into the water and sinks like lead. Only the anchor floats. But as a title explains: 'It is hard to keep a good boat down.' The family soon set sail upon one of the funniest voyages ever recorded on the screen. The boat does all kinds of tricks and the skipper rushes about from one end to another. At a calm moment he nails a picture to the wall of the cabin, only to discover that he has punctured the ship below the water line. This leak grows worse and Buster is forced to send out an S. O. S.—but the name of the ship was 'Damifino.' The shipwrecked family take to the tub and sail along until one of the boys pulls out the plug. After saying farewell to each other they find themselves in water only knee deep, so they wade ashore. There are many other funny incidents in the comedy. Every moment is a splash and every splash a laugh. You will make no mistake in giving this one to your people. It should go over big, for it is one of the comedy hits of the year. 'The Boat' is the second of a new series of comedies that Buster Keaton is making for First National."—Wid's.

Motion Picture News

The Big Picture

"NO picture is too big for a Motion Picture Theatre," says Leo A. Landau, director of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee.

And he proves his contention by playing "Over the Hill" recently to a gross of $36,000 in two weeks at 55 cents and 75 cents for loge seats.

Mr. Landau takes the stand that (1) "producers must realize that big pictures belong to picture theatres" and (2) that "exhibitors must insist on playing these productions but must not hesitate to raise their admission prices so as to yield a larger revenue to the producers of such pictures."

In an editorial on "The Big Picture" in an August last issue we took a position similar to that of Mr. Landau, pointing out that the producer would turn naturally to the source of the greatest revenue—but did the Broadway run and the road show tour of legitimate theatres yield a profit greater than the big picture houses could give?

Mr. Landau says not.

"Producers," says he, "can rent legitimate theatres on Broadway, N. Y., and Madison Street, Chicago, and charge high prices for their productions but when the week is over the result will be chronicled in scarlet fluid.

"Producers can also play these productions in legitimate theatres at high prices if they are willing to accept less revenue than if they had played them in the two or three thousand seat motion picture theatre in that same city."

"No motion picture," he continues, "in a legitimate house in Milwaukee ever played in four weeks to as much gross at $1.50 and $2.00 as 'Over the Hill' played to in two weeks at 50 and 75 cents (and that notwithstanding the present amusement condition)."

It is a matter of seats, for one thing, says Mr. Landau. The legitimate theatre in Milwaukee playing to capacity, two shows a day, can take in but two thousand admissions. On the other hand, the 2500 seat Alhambra runs seven shows a day, making it easy to play to six or seven thousand people per day.

$1.50 and $2.00 prices for pictures are too high today, Mr. Landau contends. The public will not pay them.

On the other hand, he says and forcefully, the exhibitor must raise his prices if he is to house the big picture and give the producer a rental price that will encourage the making of such pictures.

To quote his own words:

"At this point I would like to impress upon exhibitors that the day of regular admission prices without ever raising the same, is also passed.

"The amusement seeking public expects to pay for what it receives and so long as it receives value for its money it will be satisfied.

"If, for example, your admission price is 40c, you must not hesitate to raise that price to 50c if you expect to show these big productions.

"If you have a smaller theatre and your admission price is 20c you must expect to raise to 30c or 35c.

"The exhibitor must never forget that if he wants to play big productions, the producer must receive enough money for those productions, to warrant his making them.

"Let it not be forgotten for one instant, that when I use the term 'Big Productions' I mean productions like 'Over the Hill,' 'Queen of Sheba,' 'Four Horsemen,' 'Theodora,' ''Way Down East,' 'The Three Musketeers,' 'The Affairs of Anatol,' etc. I do not mean the regular run of motion pictures by any means.

"Do not be afraid to raise your admission price for a really big production. The cry that admission prices must come down is a fallacy.

"Right here in Milwaukee two theatres during the summer period when things were so dull, reduced their admission prices, and at the same time naturally reduced the quality of their performance and found to their surprise that they were playing to less people than they were playing to with their higher admission price. And they have gone back to their original price.

"Another Milwaukee theatre is now reducing its admission price for matinee and a careful investigation shows that it is playing to no more people at matinees than it did before that price was reduced.

"It is only a matter of a short time that they will see this and raise that matinee price back to normal.

"The same conditions exist in every other city.

"Showmanship and exploitation never meant so much as they do today.

"The public wants the big productions and is willing to pay for them. The exhibitor also wants these big productions and he wants them first-run, but he must be willing to increase his admission prices when he plays them. Such runs as that of 'Over the Hill' in this city should make exhibitors as well as producers sit up and take notice.

"No production is too big for a motion picture theatre. Motion picture exhibitors must insist on getting these productions.

"The producer, however, must also realize that he can obtain a larger revenue and bring about a much friendlier feeling between himself and the exhibitor by playing his productions in motion picture houses at advanced prices and with a fair percentage of the gross receipts for himself."

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Act to Prevent Rentals to Non-Theatrical Groups

The initial steps to prevent the renting of films to non-theatrical institutions in Kansas City were taken on Thursday of last week at a dinner at the Hotel Baltimore, Kansas City, given by President Charles T. Sears of the M. P. T. O. of Missouri to members of the newly appointed Kansas City Advisory Board. The board, which was recently formed and which is composed entirely of exhibitors, was created for the purpose of consulting and advising with county and state officials concerning problems affecting the motion picture industry in the Kansas City district.

In addition to local efforts to reach an agreement with the various exchanges relative to the renting of films to non-theatrical institutions, a request was sent to the headquarters of the M. P. T. O. of A., asking that immediate steps be taken to halt this growing practice, which is declared to be endangering the business of exhibitors. In some instances, churches and schools give screen exhibitions almost daily, it is reported.

Reformers Receive Scant Encouragement in Quebec

A Committee of moral-uplifters received scant courtesy when they waited upon Mayor Samson of the City of Quebec on November 24 to demand that the Blue Sunday law be enforced in Quebec to the end that all local moving picture theatres be compelled to close doors on Sundays. They also officially advised him by letter, personally presented, that they had secured the dismissal of an appeal to the Division Court from a conviction against local exhibitors of an alleged offence in conducting Sunday performances. The theatres have continued to conduct Sunday shows despite the ruling of the court and they have been backed up by Mayor Samson.

The Mayor reiterates that he saw no harm in Sunday pictures, and promised that the letter would be given his careful attention, but no definite action was promised.

The deputation was made up of Abbe Casgrain, C. Marquis, J. T. Ross, M. A. Lemieux, K. C., and Cyrville Tessier.

Texas Methodist Conference for Blue-Laws

Before the Central Texas Methodist Conference adjourned its fifty-sixth annual session at Cisco, Texas, last week, a resolution was passed urging rigid observance of Sunday blue laws. The resolution covered more ground than provided for in the present statute. It asked for a national law to prohibit the operation of interstate trains, publication of newspapers, distribution of mails or doing any other work except for charity or emergency cases. Sunday movies were also to be excluded.

L. M. Abbott on Staff of Motion Picture News

MOTION PICTURE NEWS takes pleasure in announcing that Mr. L. M. Abbott will join its staff about the middle of December. Mr. Abbott is an engineer, having graduated from the Worcester Polytechnic Institute. For the past three years his work has been entirely devoted to motion picture engineering. He is conversant with all projection problems, details of theatre construction, heating and ventilating problems, and other questions which arise in connection with theatre construction and renovation.

The securing of Mr. Abbott's service as a permanent member of MOTION PICTURE NEWS' staff is in line with the NEWS policy since its establishment. The News has, at all times, tried to work for the interests of the theatre owners and managers and now offers them still another service, as any subscriber to MOTION PICTURE NEWS may feel at liberty at any time to ask Mr. Abbott's co-operation in laying out plans for new theatres or in helping in the renovation of old houses.

The question of proper lighting, heating, ventilating, projection, etc. are perplexing and oftentimes need an expert in order to solve them. From Mr. Abbott's past experience we know that he will fill a place in the industry which never before has been taken care of.

The theatre man desiring information on these various subjects has had no source of information. This information and help may now be secured by consulting with Mr. Abbott. This consultation is a service offered by MOTION PICTURE NEWS without any cost whatsoever to the theatre man.

Mr. Abbott, being a projection expert, will be able to be of inestimable help to the projectionists all over the country, who are invited to call upon him at any and all times. We know he will fill a long felt need in the motion picture industry.

Urges Meeting of North Ohio Exhibitors

In a letter addressed to the members of the M. P. T. O. of Northern Ohio, Martin Smith, secretary of the Toledo Amusement Managers' Association, declares that exhibitor members operating outside of Cleveland must assert themselves if the exhibitors' organization in Northern Ohio is to be any more than a Cleveland local. Mr. Smith declares that no system has been provided for the keeping of state funds apart from local and that "the active minority who are in control of the organization seem perfectly satisfied with the situation and seem inclined to ignore the out-of-town members." Sam Bullock is exonerated by Mr. Smith of responsibility for the alleged state of affairs.

Mr. Smith suggests that the exhibitors of the northern part of Ohio hold a meeting next month in Toledo for the purpose of "forming a real organization of Northern Ohio exhibitors." Should a sufficient number of exhibitors approve this plan it will be presented to Sydney S. Cohen, the national president, for approval, says Mr. Smith.

Nat'l Ass'n Obtains Permission to Film Conference

When the Disarmament Conference was "shot in action" by the film news reel weeklies last week in Washington it required only four minutes to take the motion pictures. But in those four minutes were crowded the result of many weeks of preparation, during which great quantities of departmental red tape had to be unwound and safeguards established to prevent any serious interruption of the history making deliberations of the world's assembled statesmen.

When the news reel weeklies first applied for permission for their cameramen to enter the conference hall, their request was politely but firmly denied. Then began negotiations which lasted several weeks. Finally William A. Brady, President of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was asked by several Government officials to attend a conference in Washington on the subject. This he did and arrangements were made whereby five news reel companies—Fox, International, Selznick, Kinograms, and Pathe—were granted permission to have two cameramen each admitted at a given hour to the Conference Hall.

New York Incorporations Show Decided Increase

With only four days' business, motion-picture companies incorporating last week in New York state, show a decided increase both in number and in the amount of capitalization represented. Twelve companies with an aggregate capitalization of approximately $500,000, filed papers in the secretary of state's office, and included the Progress Productions, capitalized at $52,000, with Nathan Hein, S. H. Falk, of Brooklyn and A. J. Argondizza, of Maspeth, L. I., as directors for the first year; the Esperanto Service Corporation, $100,000, J. J. Sussmath, Union Hill, N. J.; J. B. Closer Contact Between Franchise-Holders

Resident Franchise-Holder at Home-Office Is Provided for in New First National Plan

FIRST NATIONAL has inaugurated a plan designed to augment the personal contact of franchise holders—and of sub-franchise holders through their advisory boards—with the executive force at the home office in New York. The plan adopted at the regular semi-annual meeting of the original franchise holders at Atlantic City, November 24 to 27, calls for the "sitting in" of the twenty-six original franchise holders at the home office during the course of the year. Each franchise holder will spend two weeks at the New York headquarters, according to the arrangement; and in addition to conferring with the organization's executives, he will keep in direct contact with the local advisory boards throughout the country.

In a statement descriptive of the newly adopted plan, issued this week, First National submits the following explanation:

"Each member will donate his time to the organization and for the good of the organization without salary. During his term he will keep his fellow franchise holders advised of everything that transpires which may be of importance to the exhibitor. This information, passing through the original franchise holders in each territory, will reach all the franchise holders through their advisory boards. Reversing the current, the advisory boards, through the original franchise holder in each territory, will be urged to send in suggestions and recommendations to the home office, and the resident franchise holder will be able to co-operate with the home office executives in clarifying such suggestions and formulating courses of action from them.

"Not the least important duty of the resident franchise holder will be to meet all franchise holders who may be in New York at any time, and be ready to discuss any and every phase of the organization with members whenever they may be in the city.

"The additional and closer contact between the various members of the organization and local which will be obtained by this system, when taken in conjunction with the election of local advisory boards in every territory, constitutes one of the most radical departures taken by an organization in the motion picture business. The formulation of the resident franchise holder idea was the result of weeks of careful study and examination of the recommendations made by various divisional spokesmen and delegates at the 'get-together' in Chicago in October.

"The ways and means of carrying into execution each and every one of the recommendations adopted at Chicago have occupied the entire time of the executive committee since the first week in November. First and foremost was the creation of local advisory boards at each of the local get-togethers. The franchise holders of each territory, as they meet to hear the reports of their national delegates, are electing advisory boards, and these boards are already functioning.

"Shortly after the Chicago meeting a special committee of six original franchise holders was appointed to consider all the suggestions and ideas propounded at the 'get-together,' with instructions to be prepared to bring in a report at the regular semi-annual meeting. The special committee worked for three weeks, compiling and collating all the data at their disposal, and the result was the formulating of the resident franchise holder plan, to supplement and co-operate with the local advisory boards, both in receiving and transmitting information."

The plan was unanimously adopted by the executives and original franchise holders at the Atlantic City meeting.

Tariff Bill Hearings to Be Resumed Shortly

HEARINGS on the tariff bill will probably not be resumed by the Senate Finance Committee until after Congress convenes in regular session on December 5. The committee's attention just now is directed principally toward working out the American valuation plan, and the rates to be reported out will not be finally determined until this feature of the bill is settled to the committee's satisfaction.

Motion picture interests are chiefly concerned with Paragraph 1451 of the bill, which provides for a 30 per cent ad valorem duty on exposed motion picture film negatives, whether developed or not, and on positives and duplicates of any kind; and 20 per cent on sensitized but unexposed films. The present duty is 2 cents a foot on negatives exposed but not developed, 3 cents a foot on exposed and developed negatives, and 1 cent a foot on positives, with unexposed films admitted free. These duties have worked out at about 6 per cent, 7 per cent, and 20 per cent ad valorem, respectively, for the three classes mentioned. There is thus a considerable increase in rates, which the American valuation plan will make still higher than is indicated by a mere comparison of the new schedules with the old.

Second Sunday Opening Victory in Missouri

Blue-Law Advocates Beaten in Kirksville; "On to Next Town" Is State M.P.T.O. Slogan

THUS far Missouri exhibitors are "hitting" 1,000 per cent in a game which might be called "Exhibitors vs. Reformers." The second "hotbed" of radicalism and opposition to Sunday shows was given a thorough cleaning last week and the "blue" blotches removed forever.

The campaign, on the part of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, started a few weeks ago with the first of a series of district meetings in Chillicothe, Mo., which resulted in the repealing of a Sunday closing amendment and the reopening of theatres on Sunday. On Tuesday of last week the second district meeting was held at Kirksville, Mo. Several prominent state and county officials were called into conference with the exhibitors, whose ranks included Lawrence E. Goldman, counsel and secretary of the state organization.

Result: Motion picture theatres in Kirksville, which have been closed on Sundays since the wave of a reform campaign last July, will again open their doors for Sunday shows, beginning December 14. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri will throw all of its resources, if necessary, back of the exhibitors of that city.

A statement from Mayor W. E. Neil of Kirksville:

"Without any qualification whatsoever, nine-tenths of the people of this city desire Sunday shows, including the Mayor and City Council. I do not think the churches of this city have gained in attendance as a result of the Sunday closing. If the sentiment of the people is against Sunday shows they will not patronize them. Sunday shows bring people to the city from the country and lend a progressiveness to a town. The statute under which the Sunday closing threat was made by the county prosecutor is an antique and not consistent with the spirit of the times. I see no reason why the Sunday closing law can be enforced, as there is no city ordinance to that effect."

The meeting of the exhibitors, which included those from the First and Second Congressional Districts, was held at Poo hotel. J. I. Wright of Bevier, Mo., a member of the representative exhibitors of the districts, acted as chairman of the conference, while Carl Muff of Clarence, Mo., acted as secretary.

A resolution was adopted indorsing the

Rental Tax Victory a Tribute to Screen

M. P. T. O., Describing Fight for Repeal, Sees Recognition of Screen's Power

THAT the repeal of the five per cent. film rental tax by the United States Senate and the Congress of the United States constitutes a tribute to the power and importance of the screen is the belief of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. In rehearsing the fight made to repeal this piece of injurious legislation, the M. P. T. O. has issued the following statement:

"Bringing this measure of tax relief to the owners of motion picture theatres in the United States is a distinct victory for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, through which the campaign to this end was initiated and later carried to a successful conclusion. As the theatre owners paid this tax there was no special occasion for those connected with any other branch of the motion picture industry to make any effort to effect its repeal. The hearings on this matter, conducted before the Ways and Means Committee of the House and later in conference form with the members of the Finance Committee of the Senate, demonstrated this fact beyond all doubt.

"Through some error of judgment by representatives of the producers, it was sought at one time to make the members of the Congressional Committees indicated above believe that the producer of the picture paid this tax. But this mistake was quickly rectified by representatives of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who were at the hearings. National President Sydney S. Cohen; National Counsel James J. Walker; S. I. Berman, Col. H. B. Varner, M. J. O'Toole, Dr. Francis Holley and others pointed out to the members of the Senate and House that the producers simply collected the tax from the exhibitor to be paid to the government, and that every film bill to the exhibitor contained the explicit statement that five per cent additional was charged for that purpose.

"The move to set aside this tax being the exhibitors' business specifically, President Cohen of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, had representatives of the organization in Washington during all vital periods while the matter was under consideration. They centered their action on the Conference Committee's work and supplementing it with the activities of other Senators and Congressmen brought to an entirely satisfactory climax the great purpose of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America through a favorable conference report on this tax repeal.

"This achievement, one of the most remarkable in the present session of Congress, would have been impossible were it not for the solid front presented by the members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The work was handled from the beginning with the utmost precision, President Cohen marshalled every one of the 12,000 members in the nation. The duties of the Washington Committees were clearly outlined and then all of the exhibitors backed up their efforts loyally in all parts of the United States.

"When it is considered that in the initial stages it seemed utterly impossible to effect any tax reduction in this division the repeal of the film tax is a notable victory for right and fair play.

"It clearly establishes the fact that the motion picture theatre as a national center of thought and action is now fully recognized by the nation's highest officials as well as notable men and women in every division of American life.

"A full sense of their responsible community position now rests on every motion picture theatre owner in the United States. This is being appreciated more and more daily by public officials and others. It means the accomplishment of near miracles in public service in the future as no medium is close to the people or operating more effectively than the powerful visualized lessons of the screen. This public appreciation of the advancement of the motion picture theatre to the front rank as a publicity medium is reflected in the very favorable action of Congress in agreeing to the repeal of the tax."

Canadian Conditions Improving, Says Brunet

Pathe President Back from Dominion Tour, Says General Tendency Is Toward Reconstruction

PAUL BRUNET, president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has just returned from a visit to Montreal and Quebec with the information that the financial and business outlook in the Dominion is very promising. The Pathe executive was especially impressed with "the feeling of friendship, even comradeship, for the United States which animates the principal officials as well as the people of Canada," he declared.

On his return to New York Mr. Brunet said that, respecting film conditions, the situation in Canada seemed to be analogous to that in the United States. The same is true regarding general business. While there is no evidence of anything like a boom in Canadian business, there is a noticeable betterment in the investment market. He quoted the published belief of the financial editor of the Montreal Star that deflation has largely run its course, while the general tendency is toward reconstruction. One of the first signs the public has seen of recovering is in the bond market. As a result of his talks with Canadian men of finance, Mr. Brunet is of opinion that other classes of securities soon will become more attractive to the general investor—all of which obviously are healthful indications.

Mr. Brunet expressed the belief that motion picture interests throughout Canada, as well as in the United States, demand, more than any other single consideration, a reduction in prices of admission, especially in agricultural communities, where the cost of going to the movies is in particularly sharp contrast with the people's buying power, owing to low prices of farm produce.

Immediately on his arrival in Montreal Mr. Brunet found himself the guest of honor at a welcoming assemblage of influential editors and other newspaper men. Mr. P. Arthur Cote, president of the Montreal Press Club, acted as master of ceremonies. After giving a lively description of Pathe's activities all over the world, he introduced Mr. Fernand Rinfret, editor of Le Canada and Member of Parliament for St. James Division, Montreal. Mr. Rinfret, who is one of the foremost newspaper men of French Canada, conveyed to Mr. Brunet the feelings of those present toward the head of Pathe Exchange, describing especially the services of that great organization to the cause of science and of popular education.

Mr. H. M. Boland, news editor of the Montreal Star, speaking in English, said: "A native of Ontario, I am proud to state that Pathe in the Province of Quebec helped me, as it does others, to know more of 'La Pensee Francaise.' I am glad as a humble journalist to tell Mr. Brunet and his very sympathetic representative, Mr. L. E. Ouimet, that the press of Canada acknowledges them as auxiliaries."

Paul Brunet, responding to the toast in his honor, said: "I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the kind and—I must say—unprecedented reception you have given me. While I take some pride in being, through circumstances, the head of Pathe's organization in America, I feel that what you are now doing is a tribute to Pathe's immense work as an educator.

"I think that, in some sense, I am a colleague of yours. While Pathe News publishes only 600 copies of its two issues per week. I am entitled to say that they are of 1,000 feet each. And they are kept constantly in circulation for ninety days."

Hugo Ballin Opposes Lee Shubert on Policy of "Split Bills"

Shubert's Claim of Film's Inadequacy Starts Lively Discussion

WHEN Lee Shubert last week announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS a Shubert Vaudeville service to the owners and operators of moving-picture theatres "to bolster up their drooping business" and volunteered the opinion that "the day of the moving picture as a complete entertainment is a thing of the past," he started what promises to be a very lively discussion. Already Hugo Ballin, the prominent producer, makes vigorous rejoinder to the Shubert announcement, declaring that "the place in the sun for which the standard motion-picture has been waiting so long, is ready. The silver-sheet is the greatest entertainment in the world today." And furthermore asserts Mr. Ballin: "Split-bills of vaudeville and pictures must inevitably lead to the destruction of both."

It appears that Mr. Lee Shubert during a recent trip which covered stops in Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Chicago and other cities, made many important discoveries concerning poor business in some of the largest theatres devoted to moving pictures in those cities. Mr. Shubert would not be quoted on the subject but an associate who accompanied him on the trip, had this to say:

"Shubert Vaudeville is making a bid to supply acts to the better class of moving picture theatres no matter where they are located, and it must be apparent to the average showman that the time is ripe for a change of policy in most all of these theatres. It may be a question of having 'over-built' or again it may be a question of theatres with capacities all out of proportion to the drawing power of the entertainment offered. At any rate, during Mr. Shubert's trip to the West he found many theatres with capacities of from two thousand to three thousand containing audiences of only two and three hundred people. The theatres are literally starving to death. The managers, in order to bolster up their business, are compelled to improve their program by introducing such features as Theda Bara, to whom they pay $3,000 per week, and Victor Herbert, who conducts the orchestra at $1,500 per week. In cases of this kind, the attendance shows an appreciable increase, which has convinced Mr. Shubert that these large theatres cannot subsist on the meagre program of pictures. The big features are too few and far between to hold out hope. The personal appearance of well-known people even though they are not picture stars, is calculated to revolutionize the picture theatre program, and Shubert Vaudeville stands ready to furnish material with this object in view.

"The success of Shubert vaudeville during its first eleven weeks has been phenomenal. The mere fact of opening a chain of theatres almost over night has astounded the entire show world. In order to do this, it was necessary to prepare months in advance and the booking department had, previous to the opening of the first theatre early in September, engaged a sufficiently large number of feature and headline acts to take care of our programs for the first twenty weeks. While the vaudeville circuit is independent of the legitimate end of the business, conducted by Messrs. Lee and J. J. Shubert, this firm is in a position to supply many legitimate stars to their own vaudeville circuit and the whole is at the service of the picture theatres."

So reads the Shubert testimony on the subject, and now comes Hugo Ballin with a reply that proves "there is another side to the story." When asked for an opinion concerning the Shubert statement, Mr. Ballin replied in writing as follows:

"Boy, page Mr. Zukor, and tell him 'Peter Ibbetson' can't successfully be shown without a make-up—i. e., a few vaudeville acts.

"Ditto, advise Mr. Goldwyn the exhibitors cannot hope to break even on the week's business unless they have Dolores and Company, Boob McNutt and the Minstrel Sextette on the bill with 'Theodora.'

"And tell Mr. Griffith and Mr. Abrams that 'The Two Orphans' will have to play Spot No. 8 on the seven-act bill at the Gazunk theatre in Boyle Heights to put it over.

"Mr. Shubert says the theatres are starving to death.

"I hope he doesn't mean the Shubert houses, I know he doesn't mean the picture theatres. Because only this week I have before me reports on my own pictures, notably 'East Lynne' and 'The Journey's End' which shows percentage showings in several theatres and either the exhibitor came off very well indeed or he likes me very much to send such substantial cheques to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for me.

"Just another voice in the now dwindling chorus of depressionists. Conditions have not been so good. They have been bad by contrast, let us say. But they are getting better—ARE better and will be 1,000 per cent better before many moons have passed.

"Exhibitors have lost money?

"So Mr. Shubert writes, in his open letter of the other day:

"'See the handwriting on the wall! Book vaudeville acts.'

"No, Friend Exhibitor, it may be the same handwriting you see on the wall, but not the same message. Let's focus down on this subject and get it straight.

"There is a handwriting on the wall for you to read carefully, a powerful message, a story expressed in pictures like 'Way Down East,' 'Over the Hill,' 'Peter Ibbetson,' 'Molly O' and many, many others.

"Here is the message:

"'Good pictures make money for the exhibitor—ON THEIR OWN!

"'Mediocre pictures CANNOT make money for the exhibitor, WITH or WITHOUT vaudeville or so-called 'added attractions.'

"You knew this before? Of course.

"That's all there is to the message.

"Fair pictures make money, too, we know, through honest and effective exploitation of what good or redeeming qualities they possess.

"Good pictures should make money on their merits in 'most any theatre. Where a steady, tremendous patronage is necessary to defray the enormous overhead of the big theatre the right kind of exploitation is necessary—the better the exploitation the more effective the advertising, the greater will results be at the box office.

"I have had a hand in the production of 82 photoplays for others; in five for myself. I have enjoyed the confidence and contact with the ablest executives in the industry; I know scores of exhibitors personally or through my organization. I feel, therefore, I can state with definiteness an authority that the public patronizes picture theatres for the PICTURE FARE afforded. If the picture is unsatisfactory it helps not one whit that the 'added attractions' are good, or that vaudeville acts surround the production. They are the garnishings of the roast. If the meat's bad, the vegetables won't suffice."

A Prize Contest

"SHOWMANSHIP and exploitation," says an exhibitor, "never meant so much as they do today."

What are YOU doing to increase patronage? What—to increase receipts?

What are you doing to reduce waste? What unnecessary trimmings have you cut?

What, in short, are you doing to see your house through these "not so good" days into the better times ahead?

MOTION PICTURE NEWS offers a first prize of $100.00, a second prize of $50.00 and twelve prizes of $5.00 each for the best articles on this all-important subject.

THE CONTEST CLOSES DECEMBER 20th.

Articles limited to 500 words—shorter if possible. Just sit down now and tell us all about it—terse, fact, practical stuff.

The Key to "Pulling Through" Lies in Work

By Harold B. Franklin
Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

IN the MOTION PICTURE NEWS editorial on "Pulling Through" Mr. Johnston hit the nail on the head. Now is the time for exhibitors to buckle down to work! There is no use trying to befuddle the issue! Things generally are not what they used to be. People haven't as much money to spend. Now the idea is to make your playhouse so attractive that you will "pull" them in regardless. But this cannot be accomplished by a pessimistic point of view. It will not be accomplished by kicking. There is only one thing that can and will overcome a depression, and that is "work." The trouble with most exhibitors is that things came too easy during the extra flush times. Now after the flush is over it is hard to get down to bed rock. The motion picture industry has never been down to bed rock; it developed with the good times and really has not known the pinch of hard times. Lavish spending has accompanied the development of the business.

A long time ago the Shea Amusement Company anticipated the present business depression and took steps to prepare for it. In the first instance, we have tried to eliminate the waste, and by eliminating the waste is not meant to cut down either your program or advertising matter, unless you have been wasteful in that respect before. In fact, in times of depression try to make your show bigger and better than ever before, but not in a wasteful manner. Let me make myself clear: I would much rather have an orchestra of fifteen good musicians than thirty ordinary ones. I would rather run a good picture an entire week than two bad ones in a week—even though the rental cost of the one picture may equal the cost of the two.

The picture public today is shopping. In addition to facing a business depression, we find that the public is tired of the ordinary machine-made movie. They want specials, and it is up to every exhibitor to hunt up these specials to create a market for them to make it worth while for the producer to make them. The picture always gets the business. It is not the embellishments of a program. I would rather run a big picture than a poor one with soloist and settings. Although the large theatre today finds it necessary to continue the embellishments as well as giving them the picture. It has been our endeavor to to stimulate business by some unusual adgive the best show possible; if necessary, ditional attractions and by aggressive advertising.

While on the subject of advertising: Exhibitors must stop exaggeration in advertising! Every show you give is not the "greatest." The public ear has become dulled with adjectives in the superlative degree. Your advertising carries your message to the public. It should be a symbol of yourself.

Optimism is essential! Don't greet your patron with a grouch. The exhibitor's optimism must be reflected by the appearance of the theatre—the snap and pep that stands out. Don't allow your theatre to become shabby. Make it a real pleasure for your patrons to visit you. Optimism is reflected by your entire staff right down the line.

In the beginning of this present session in the city of Buffalo not only did we face a business depression, but in addition faced the severe competition of one of the shrewdest theatrical circuits in the country. We determined that the only way we could successfully face this condition was by a stiff front and giving the public the very best that we could. Even though our theatres are of the highest type, we analyzed every nook and corner that could be improved and spent considerable money in making the theatre even more attractive than before. In addition we planned the biggest programs that could be secured; we engaged Creatore, world-famous conductor, simply for the purpose of conducting overtures; we made our prologues and settings even more elaborate than heretofore; we increased our advertising appropriation; we secured many prominent soloists of national reputation, realizing that here we might appeal to a new type of people that heretofore had not gone to motion pictures. The result has been very satisfactory. We found that it was unne essary to reduce the price of admission, many theatres throughout the country a doing. The public will pay for quali shows.

The exhibitors throughout the count must stop talking about their trouble they must buckle down and go to wor This is the only solution at this tim There are just as many people in your ci as there were yesterday when prosperi reigned, and they must have entertainmer

Old Film Permitted to Be Sent Intact by Freight

OLD film may now be shipped intact by freight from exchanges to their home offices, thus relieving a congestion of worn-out prints which have been accumulating for many years in exchanges throughout the country. Advices to this effect have just been received from the headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

This important ruling has just been made by the Official Classification Committee, composed of railroad representatives, and will save the film companies a large sum annually in transportation charges. It is a successful outcome of the work of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, which, through its Transportation Committee, P. H. Stilson, Chairman, has been endeavoring for a year to secure an amendment of the freight classification rating which would allow freight shipments of old films without mutilation.

For five years the film companies have been obliged to scrap all old film at the exchanges before it would be accepted as freight. Otherwise old prints had to be returned to the home offices by express or parcel post.

The Chillicothe Victory

THE following letter has been r ceived from W. P. Cuff concernir the recent Sunday-opening victor in Chillicothe, Mo:

"Gentlemen:

"In your issue dated November 26, you have article headed 'Missouri Exhibs Continue Fight Blue Laws,' and in this article the following paragra appears: 'In Chillicothe, Mo., recently, the Moti Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, with the aid the M. P. T. O. A. won a signal victory and forev silenced self-appointed censors.'

"I don't know the source of your information, b in the fight I had with the city of Chillicothe, organization of any kind took any kind of a part, a it looks to me very much like someone is trying lead others to think that I would not have won fight unless I had assistance from them.

"The whole truth of the matter is I had no assis ance from the Missouri organization, and all I g from the National Organization was two thousa booklets, that I intended to mail but did not use the for I had the fight practically won when I had the ready to mail. These booklets are still in my posse sion, with my mailing permit printed on them, and will use them later if I have occasion to.

"My fight was staged and financed absolutely b myself, with the assistance of John H. Taylor, attorne I waited for over a year to obtain the services Mr. Taylor as he held the office of postmaster of Chill cothe and could not undertake the task of fightin Blue Law agitators until he had resigned from his offic as postmaster, and it was only through his efforts an my willingness to stick to a finish that the fight wa won.

"I used the newspapers every day, with 'Fa Play' advertisements and of course displayed the sam matter on my screen. I sent copies of all newspape matter to Mr. Cohen of the national organization, an when I had the fight won, I sent him the newspape clipping telling the story, and told him to give it wha publicity he could that would be of help to other e hibitors. Not publicity for me or anyone else, bu just to show how it was done, hoping that others migh profit by my experience.

"It was only last week that I attended a meetin of exchange men and exhibitors in Kansas City, this had been called to discuss the Sunday closing evil, an at that meeting some very well known exhibitors re marked to me, knowing full well that I had not bee assisted by the Missouri organization, that the hand of certain individuals should be called on the matte of how they had assisted me in my Sunday fight i Chillicothe.

"Please understand me, I am seeking no publicit in this matter for myself, for I have been requeste by other trade papers for a letter on the Chillicoth fight, but I have not written to any of them. an would not have written this to you only that the articl I mention above is misleading and untruthful. I don' want some exhibitor to ever be so foolish as to believ his local troubles will be handled by petty movin picture politicians. If he has a fight he had better b prepared to fight his own battles, and use mighty goo judgment in the selection of those he engages to assis him.

"Let me say in conclusion, I am a member of th M. P. T. O. and am executive officer for the secon congressional district; that I was one of the three o four that attended the Cleveland meeting, from th whole state of Missouri; that I helped organize th Missouri organization shortly after the Cleveland meet ing and I don't want this to be taken as a criticism of the M. P. T. O. for I am always for the organiza tion; but the petty attemptp of some to gain publicit for themselves by using the work of others to furthe their political schemes in the organization, should no be allowed to get by unnoticed.

"I would thank you to give this letter the sam prominence you gave to the article I mentioned in th beginning of this kick."

How One Small-Town Exhibitor Beat the Slump

"AN exhibitor who insists upon the very best productions will eventually ride to prosperity upon the wave of success. On the contrary, his short-sighted competitor who displayed the salacious in the endeavor to make the cash-box in the box-office ring a steady tune will eventually find that the tune changes to a dirge and cobwebs collect about the S. R. O. sign."

Here is the story of one of the best examples of combined artist and business men we have discovered in our search for the wisest small-town exhibitor. Let us introduce G. W. Martin, manager of the Irvin theatre in Bloomington, Illinois, whose motto is quoted in the opening paragraph. Proof of his unusual ability may be discerned from the fact that he operated the Irvin theatre at a profit during the depressing summer months when his competitors were forced to shut down their theatres. First National attractions and Associated Producers' productions are regular features of his program.

There is a peculiar factor in every district which affects theatres individually—which makes business spotty. Bloomington, Ill., is a small city of 28,000 people, with a suburb of 4000 people (a college town). The city is practically made up of wealthy retired farmers, and the shop peoples, lawyers, medics, etc., who cater to them—practically no live manufacturing concern exists in this city—any exhibitor who operates in the heart of an agricultural district will instantly recognize the immensity of the problem confronting Mr. Martin—a problem which caused many an exhibitor to close during the summer.

For the benefit of exhibitors who operate in manufacturing cities, let us state that retired farmers, as a class, deaden a city. They move into town, purchase a beautiful home, and then terrified by this outlay, spend the remainder of their days snarling at every effort to relieve them of the cash they zealously guard. That the manufacturing class spend money more readily for pleasure than do the farmers is a fact so well known it does not need discussion.

"I canvassed the town of Bloomington to get the views of the citizens on pictures in general and the Irvin theatre in particular," said Mr. Martin. "Farmers are economical by nature; they have formed the habit of studying advertisements in newspapers and farm journals, and weighing one factor against another. The prestige of a house counts greatly in neighborhood patronage. Prestige is the value built into the theatre by making it worth more and valued more highly by the public as the years go by; and while it is a fine thing, a steady line in front of the box-office is the sign-manual.

"Here is the method I used in overcoming prejudice and habit, revolutionizing ideas until I pushed people's minds into accepting the Irvin theatre as the best playhouse—I booked such pictures as "Mother o' Mine," "The Cup of Life," "The Ten Dollar Raise"—promised "Molly O," and kindred pictures, and told the public about it repeatedly. The longer an advertising force is applied the more effective it is. Repetition, rather than striking announcements, impresses itself more firmly on the memory.

"In Bloomington we have three distinct classes, the noveau riche predominating. They are interested in the cost. I book a costly film, and I place the admission anywhere from 45 cents to $1.50. People say:

"'The Irvin has raised the admission price; there must be something good there.'

"Their curiosity is aroused and they attend. The working class say:

"'Well, it costs more, but I had rather pay a little more and see something good,' and they come.

"I believe absolutely in employing a sliding scale in admission—a set price does not do justice to either the peoples or the theatre, and eventually lowers the prestige so painstakingly builded. It is thrift against luxury, if a luxury, so called, adds to pleasure and contributes to the mental satisfaction of an individual it can hardly be termed a luxury.

"Now as to my scheme for building patronage and prestige for the Irvin—see what you think of the idea.

"I selected a small force of college girls who were able to talk convincingly, armed them with printed pads bearing a series of questions they were to ask the citizens of Bloomington, and started them out to canvass the town. From these pads I expected to get first-hand the opinions of the people upon the subject of pictures—and relate them to the Irvin. It was a marvelous idea to get the pulse of the people. Here were the questions the solicitor would diplomatically ask—together with the check upon the work of the reporter.

"Time started—family called on—address—general conversation—interested in pictures—any children in family, if so, opinion on children's matinee—had person ever attended the Irvin? If not, why—which policy like best, vaudeville, vaudeville and pictures or pictures only—if so, their impressions—what do you like best, orchestra or organ—suggestions—does person read announcements of plays in newspapers—which paper—and name and date of birthdays of all in family interested in arranging theatre parties for children—for adults—other remarks."

"Such an advertising program does not sound easy—nor is it. It involves a certain amount of work—tabulating the reports of the solicitors, arranging a filing system for the cards, etc., but the results are absolutely marvelous. In a live community there is no better way of building lasting patronage, loyal patronage, than by this heart interest method of reaching each individual and making them feel that the Irvin theatre is interested in what they think.

"The solicitor calls upon a woman. Her neighbor says:

"'Who called?'

"'Why,' flutters the flattered lady, 'it is a solicitor from the Irvin theatre who wanted to know what kind of pictures I liked best and what I thought of the Irvin policy.'

"Gosh—it makes the individual stick out his chest like a pouter pigeon to be asked his opinion, and they are strong for the theatre ever after. In my filing cabinet I arranged the cards in accordance with the birthday clause—every citizen whose birthday, for example, fell on October 20 would be filed in the October 20 space—there were spaces for each day of the year. Two days prior the stenographer would pick out every October 20 (or whatever date was up) and send a complimentary ticket along with a nicely written birthday letter of greetings from the Irvin management. Heart interest—a stroke of policy—it is heaven-sent genius.

"Each individual so honored recalls the chain of circumstances leading up to the theatre securing the natal date, which recalls the wholesome effect of the solicitor's call—and any individual is more delighted to receive a complimentary ticket to a theatre than he is to receive a ten-dollar gold piece. The cost for such a campaign is not prohibitory. On the contrary, the splendid results are worth the outlay of time and money—questions can be changed to the locality, and the suggestions thus gained will very often prove valuable, but let me advise showmen to retain that birthday question—it is a winner."

Robbins Co. Purchases Watertown, N. Y. Houses

The Olympic, Palace and Antique motion picture theatres in Watertown, N. Y., were sold last week by Papayanakos Brothers to the Robbins Amusement company, of Utica. The consideration was reported to be $250,000. The new management will take over the houses on December 17. With the exception of the Olympic, which will have an addition to the rear to enable it to accept the bookings of large theatrical companies, the houses will remain unchanged. The Robbins Amusement company owns and controls the Majestic, Avon and DeLuxe theatres in Utica, as well as the Robbins-Eckel house in Syracuse.

The Olympic theatre was opened in 1917, and has a seating capacity of about 2,000. It cost about $100,000.

W.M.P.A. to Edit Nat'l Edition of Paper

Members of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers endorsed a plan at their last meeting, submitted by F. H. Eldridge, managing editor of the Los Angeles Examiner, whereby the publicity men will edit a special Motion Picture Yearly Number of this paper, to be distributed nationally to exhibitors, dramatic and motion picture editors and others interested in motion pictures.

The plan, brought before the W. M. P. A. by Florence Lawrence and Al Price of the Examiner, calls for the appearance in this number of articles by the most famous writers in the country as an answer to the attacks that have been made upon the industry.

Benjamin B. Hampton, the famous producer and former editor, is chairman of the advisory board of the motion picture men who will co-operate with the Examiner and the W. M. P. A. in editing this number.

Incense Burner Held to Be Cause of Fatal Fire

A disastrous fire which broke out in the Rialto theatre, New Haven, Conn., last Sunday night, November 27th, resulted in the death of five persons and the injury of nearly a hundred others. According to the testimony of spectators, the fire started from an incense burner, lying close to the ceiling, which served as part of a prologue setting. The theatre was filled at the time, and a panic ensued during which many were trampled underfoot in the aisles and near the exits. The flames spread so rapidly from the stage that those sitting in the front of the house who managed to escape did so only after being severely burned.

Ray Gets Big Reception During New York Visit

In behalf of the City of New York, Mayor John F. Hylan greeted Charles Ray on the steps of City Hall this week. The Mayor's welcome was the beginning of an enthusiastic reception which has met the famous star on the occasion of his first visit to Gotham. Mr. Ray, after posing for news reels and press camera men, on the morning of his arrival was whisked down to the City Hall where the Mayor received him. Following this formal introduction to New York, Mr. Ray began the program of business and recreation which has been planned for his sojourn in the East.

"Invaluable!"

"Inclosed please find check for another year for the NEWS and a Booking Guide. I, as an exhibitor, would as soon try to conduct my business without films as without the NEWS. It certainly is invaluable to the man who endeavors to keep pace with the times. With best wishes, Yours in the Faith,

M. P. T. O. to Receive Financial Tribute

In recognition of the fine work of the M.P.T.O. of A. in obtaining the repeal, through the senate committee, of the five per cent film rental tax, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan are expected to take action at once in committee meeting toward the setting aside of the aggregate of a week's film rental tax on the part of all exhibitor members of the association. This amount will be sent to the national organization as a tribute and to assist them in carrying on needed legislation in the industry.

Michigan is the first state organization to take such action and it is expected that other state bodies will follow suit. A copy of the resolution has been forwarded to all of them.

Myron Selznick Abroad

Myron Selznick, vice-president in charge of production of the Selznick Corporation, sailed Wednesday, November 30, on the Adriatic on a six weeks' trip to Europe. The only announcement of the purpose of the trip came from Lewis J. Selznick, to the effect that he was sending his son and associate in business abroad to look after a number of matters of importance which have to do with both production and distribution. The travelers' first port of call will be London. Visits to various cities in France, Germany, Scandinavia, and possibly the Spanish peninsula will follow.

Franchise Holders in Accord with Present Policy

First National franchise holders of Upper New York State met recently in Syracuse, N. Y., with Jules Michaels, of Syracuse, presiding. About fifty franchise holders attended. Every member was in full accord with the policy of First National, declaring that it should not be investigated from the outside.

Negro Theatre Dynamited in St. Petersburg, Fla

The Dream theatre, located on South Ninth St., St. Petersburg, Fla., owned by Arthur Norris,, a white man, but run exclusively for negroes was badly damaged by two explosions of dynamite recently.

The police have no clue as to the identity of the person or persons who placed the dynamite charges. The Dream theatre is located just at the edge of the Negro district. When it was built there was quite a little objection raised by the white residents, on the other side, so it is reported. The Manager assured them that he would not operate after 10 P. M., and that he would abandon the place, as a theatre, after the winter season. This seemed to be satisfactory and the dynamiting came as a surprise.

movement to induce Colonel Charles E. Morris, editor of the St. Joseph Gazette and one of the strongest supporters of the exhibitors, to enter the race as a delegate-at-large to the constitutional convention which will be held in February, and at which time a new constitution will be written for Missouri. It is at this convention that advocates of a censorship board are planning to get a blow home.

A resolution also was adopted urging Congressmen from the First and Second districts to work for the repeal of the seating tax and the passage of the Lampert bill.

As the situation now stands, the motto is "On to the Next Town," which may be Springfield, where blue law advocates are threatening to close the theatres on Sundays.

First National Franchise Holders Vote Confidence

Resolutions of confidence in the Executive Committee and officers of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., were passed by the franchise holders of Kansas and Western Missouri at the local Get-Together, held in Kansas City, Missouri, November 28th.

A similar resolution was passed by the Oklahoma franchise holders in their local Get Together in Oklahoma City, November 22. Both resolutions were telegraphed to the Home Office.

Cohen and Walker Attend Charlotte Exposition

SYDNEY S. COHEN, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, accompanied by Senator James J. Walker, arrived in Charlotte, N. C., on Wednesday, November 30, to attend the Southern Exhibitors' Exposition.

President Cohen reviewed the work done by the national exhibitors' organization during the last few months, emphasizing the successful fight for the elimination of the five per cent film rental tax. He also spoke of future plans and thanked the exhibitors of North and South Carolina for their aid in securing the repeal of the rental tax.

Senator Walker's speech proved the sensation of the meeting. In the midst of a gathering made up largely of First National exhibitors, he launched a vigorous indictment of First National. In support of his contention that the contract lacked mutuality and equity, Senator Walker quoted Mr. Lieber, president of First National, as declaring: "This contract must be made more equitable or it won't stand up."

Senator Walker also attacked First National's exhibition values as being so high that the public will not support them with a profit. "We don't want to break First National," declared the Senator. "We want to induce them to bring down their exhibition values to the merit of the picture."

At the conclusion of Senator Walker's speech, the assembly tendered a rising vote of thanks to President Cohen and Senator Walker for their presence.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

M. B. A. Kohn is again connected with Pioneer exchange and will cover Northern Illinois, Northern Indiana, and Southern Wisconsin territory for that company. He also is representing Clyde Elliott, who is releasing Al Jennings' "The Lady of the Dugout," in this territory and arranging for personal appearances of Al Jennings with the picture. Pioneer is now booking Billy West for personal appearances at the same time one of his two-reel comedies is screened at the various theatres in this district.

Universal sales staff and department heads of the Chicago exchange gave a get-together dinner at the Blackstone last Friday at which Manager Lesserman was guest of honor. Mr. Lesserman was presented with a handsome portfolio as a testimonial to the esteem in which he is held by those at the dinner. It was also reported that the happy occasion cured him of a case of indigestion from which he had been suffering for several days.

Alderman Kostner has presented an order to the city council, directing preparation of an ordinance fixing the license fees of circuses, theatres, motion picture theatres and other entertainments at three per cent of the gross receipts. The order was referred to a committee. Alderman Kostner evidently had the theatres showing vaudeville, plays, and musical shows in mind when he introduced the order but it will also hit the motion picture theatres if passed. The Alderman said a three per cent license on theatres would have a tendency to do away with scalping and it is the right to return unsold tickets which makes this possible. A tax such as proposed, he said, on the sales to scalpers, would make scalping unprofitable.

The projection booth of the Plaza theatre, Galesburg, Illinois, the handsome house recently opened under the management of Joe Duffy, was completely equipped by the Exhibitors Supply Company of Chicago, and Manager Duffy declares that without a doubt he has one of the finest projection equipments in the country. Following is a list of the more important equipment furnished: Two type "S" Simplex Machines, one Ft. Wayne 50-50 Generator Set, one 14 x 18 Minusa Screen, Lightning Coin Changer, Victor Double Dissolver, Snaplite Lenses and a bank of 9 Dimmers. Also 2-48" and 2-36" Ilg Ventilating Fans.

More than one thousand members of the Chicago Athletic Club and their friends last week witnessed the Chicago premier of the new Rex Beach-Whitman Bennett-United Artist production, "The Iron Trail." This was the first time in years that the Chicago Athletic Club has presented a picture as a private entertainment to its membership and the event was a great success. An introductory address by Charlie Giegerich, personal representative of Mr. Beach and Mr. Bennett, in which he told of happenings during the production of the picture and the difficulties that were overcome in reproducing the big railroad bridge that crosses the Copper River in Alaska and the matching of the studio shots with the scenes of the real structure, were listened to with interest by the large audience. While the showing was strictly private, it served to introduce "The Iron Trail" auspiciously to the movie fans of Chicago through the newspaper accounts of the showing. Ascher Brothers are making special preparations to present "The Iron Trail" at the Roosevelt in a big way Christmas week and Rex Beach himself is scheduled to make a personal appearance and tell of the story of "The Iron Trail" and the real hero, after whom he modeled "Murray O'Neill."

A scene from "The Way of a Maid," a Selznick feature starring Elaine Hammerstein

T. C. Young, director of Famous Players-Lasky real estate department, passed through Chicago early in the week on his way to take over the new St. Louis Exchange on behalf of his company. The building is located on Washington avenue near Grand and is a handsome one-story structure, embodying the latest ideas in exchange construction, including the labor saving devices for physical handling of film and construction which practically eliminates all fire hazards. Mr. Young will inspect the building and if it comes up to his specifications will accept it for Paramount.

Billy Wendell, for many years booker at Paramount's Chicago Exchange, and who is one of the most popular men in Chicago film circles, has joined the staff of Vitagraph as a salesman and will cover the west side territory.

Hugo Riesenfeld and Felix Kahn, of New York, arrived in Chicago Tuesday to look over Chicago's leading theatres and see how the Windy City managers present their pictures. This is the first opportunityl in many months that Messrs. Riesenfeld and Kahn have had to leave New York owing to the heavy demands of business.

Manager H. W. Given, of Paramount's Chicago office, received wires on Monday from the Capitol theatre, Davenport; Oliver theatre, South Bend; Princess theatre, Springfield; and the Majestic at Rock Island, to the effect that "The Sheik" had opened in these houses to tremendous business, breaking all records for the Fall season and that indications for phenomenal runs were bright.

George N. and Harold M. Gollos, of Gollos & Gollos, report that they have booked their pictures, "The Wandering Jew," for a run at another downtown theatre, the Band Box, where it will open the week of December 11th. The picture has been very successful wherever shown in the Chicago territory. This firm's next release, "The Littlest Rebel," which Gollos & Gollos own for the entire United States, is about to be put on the state right market, it having been entirely re-edited with handsome art titles.

C. J. Callahan, well known film salesman, has joined the staff of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, and will work Southern Indiana, reporting to the Indianapolis branch exchange of Celebrated.

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Cecil B. DeMille, William C. DeMille, and Paul Iribe, art director, stopped over in Chicago last Saturday, en route from the coast to New York. Cecil B. DeMille expects to go direct to Northern Africa with Mr. Iribe, where they will enjoy some falcon hunting. They will then go to Italy, Nice, Paris and other points on the continent, then to England, and back to America in March, to start work on a new production. Mr. DeMille stated that he had just finished his latest picture, "Saturday Night." Speaking of "Fool's Paradise," DeMille said he preferred to have Mr. Lasky comment on it, and the latter declared it was DeMille's best picture. DeMille remarked, "Yes, it is, if you don't count "Saturday Night." When asked what pictures the public like the best these days, DeMille said, "Good pictures." Asked what he meant by good pictures he said, "A good story, good directing, good acting and good settings. In fact, a director might have a million people and spend millions in settings, without his show going over; whereas a picture with one man or woman and a child, that costs very little money, might be the biggest success of the season, because it is a "good" picture.

Pre-View of "School Days" in Chicago

More than five hundred exhibitors and others connected with the industry, both from Chicago and many other cities, attended the invitation pre-view of Warner Brothers feature picture, "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, which was given in the Tiger Room, Hotel Sherman, Chicago, on last Sunday night.

President Joe Friedman, of Celebrated, was asked by Warner Brothers to arrange for the Chicago showing, which was the world premiere of this picture, and it was the concensus of those who witnesse the presentation, that it was one of the best arranged and interesting pre-views ever staged in the Windy City.

Preceding the running of the picture, Gus Edwards and his entire company gave their show, "School Days," on an improvised stage in the Tiger Room, using many of the songs, which were later played as part of the musical setting, for the picture "School Days."

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

CLEVELAND

"Molly O" played at the Allen theatre all last week. And it was held over a second week by popular demand.

Phil Selznick has been out shopping again. His latest purchase for Ohio motion picture exhibitors is "Heart of the North," a companion picture to "Isobel" and said to be as good a box office attraction as its predecessors.

M. J. Weisfeld, former manager of the Cleveland Fox exchange, will spend Christmas in "dear old London" unless the ocean freezes over between now and then. Mr. Weisfeld and his family are booked to sail for England on the Olympic, the 10th of December. He will take part in the distribution of Fox films abroad.

The Lakewood theatre, one of the chain of motion picture houses belonging to the Atlas Amusement Company, was sold last week to A. Printz. Mr. Printz will personally manage the house. He was formerly connected with the Metropolitan theatre of Cleveland, also an Atlas Amusement Company house.

S. Barrett McCormick started it. Others are following it and it's proving a great success. Apologizing for the title of an attraction seems a poor way to introduce the attraction, but that's what Mr. McCormick did with "Why Girls Leave Home" and he did a big business. And that's what Howard Frankel did last week at the Majestic theatre, Columbus, and also caught the public sheckels as well as the public interest. They're doing it right down the line now, even at the smaller houses, and the managers say it's a great stunt. The apology "gets" the people that like highbrow stuff, and the title itself "gets" those who want sensational stuff.

CANADA

Admission prices at the new Garrick theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, have been revised so that a flat rate of 25 cents per seat for any part of the house and for any hour of the day or evening has been provided. This has meant a reduction of 10 cents in the evening price. Manager W. P. Wilson has announced that he has lined up a considerable number of English-made productions for the theatre, which was opened on March 14 last. The Garrick is owned by a number of Winnipeg citizens as a co-operative undertaking.

Standard Films, Limited, has been organized as a moving picture exchange in Canada by Phil Hazza of Montreal, formerly general manager of the Amalgamated Exhibitors' Circuit of Montreal; a co-operative syndicate of independent exhibitors in the Province of Quebec. Mr. Hazza announces that branches have been opened in Toronto, St. John, N. B., and Winnipeg, Manitoba, the headquarters of the new company being located in the Albee Building, Montreal.

Exhibitors of Vancouver, B. C., organized a deputation to wait upon the Provincial Government at Victoria, the capital city of British Columbia, to ask that the amusement tax of ten per cent be abolished at the next session of the Provincial Legislature. They were politely advised that not only was this impossible but that the Province had practically decided to make an increase in the tax which is paid by theatre patrons when purchasing tickets. After considerable discussion, the announcement was made that the Provincial tax would probably remain as at present for another year.

Maurice West of Montreal, for many years the Montreal branch manager of the Fox Film Corporation, has become the proprietor of the Tuotoscope theatre at St. John's, Quebec, which he has renamed the Imperial theatre. West resigned from Fox about a year ago and made a trip to Europe in the hope that he could secure a number of large European productions for the Canadian market.

The Manitoba Board of Moving Picture Censors has passed "The Golem," which is said to be a made-in-Germany feature, and warm endorsement for the picture has been offered by the Board. On the other hand, the Manitoba board condemned "Passion" outright because, it was claimed, that this production contained German propaganda.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Nate Robbins, who runs the Avon and Majestic in Utica, has purchased the Olympic, Palace, Strand and Antique theatres in Watertown, all four theatres being bought from Jim and Alex Papyanakos.

Mell R. Edwards has resigned as a Nu-Art salesman in Buffalo and has been succeeded by George C. Whitsel, former manager of the Temple theatre in that city. Grace Laughren has been appointed secretary to Fred M. Zimmerman, general manager of Nu-Art, and Mary L. Foran has been engaged as a stenographer to assist Art Young, office manager.

Harold B. Franklin was host to some 250 orphans at Shea's Hippodrome, following a turkey dinner for the children put on at the Lafayette Hotel by the Greater Buffalo Advertising Club the day before Thanksgiving.

Mrs. William Bork, former manager of the Rialto theatre supply store in Buffalo, has been engaged by Frank Davidson as his assistant at the newly opened Buffalo branch of the Independent Movie Supply Company in North Franklin street. The Buffalo Rialto store has been closed.

Lally Brothers have reopened the Empire theatre in Dunkirk, N. Y., where they also operate the Regent.

Henry F. Thurston, manager of the Temple theatre in Lockport, N. Y., who only last week lost his baby, is now mourning the death of his wife, Elizabeth.

Charlie Faust will be in charge of the Screen Attractions Distributing Company office in Albany. The new exchange will be opened December 5 at 676 Broadway. Mr. Faust has been a salesman on the R-C Pictures corporation staff in Buffalo.

George Germaine is covering the Syracuse territory for the Buffalo Universal office. Mr. Germaine was formerly with Fox in the Queen City of the Lakes.

Edward B. McCaffery and Frank A. Tierney have arrived in Buffalo from the Fox home office sales school to round out their training in the Buffalo office.

N. I. Filkins, recently appointed general manager of Merit exchanges in the State, is in Buffalo for a few days conferring with local manager Bill Fickeisen.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Charles N. Williams, former manager of the Strand theatre in Providence, has been appointed manager of the four theatres in Newport for which Louis M. Boas is general manager. He succeeded Joseph Mack, who died recently. Mr. Williams took up his new work Nov. 28. Mr. Williams has been identified with theatres in Providence for the past 12 years. He operated the Casino until about six years ago he built the Strand theatre. He left the Strand last April to take a rest. About a month ago he became manager of a new theatre in Marblehead, Mass., and gives up that position to go to Newport.

The Rialto theatre deviated during the week of Nov. 21 from its policy of running straight photoplays, based largely on the society dramatic style and comedy drama, to introduce Harry Carey to its patrons. It appeared to be a chance well taken, as Carey's "The Fox" did a fine business throughout the week, notwithstanding the pre-Thanksgiving days.

MICHIGAN

Michigan is paying homage to another Michigan author, Frank R. Adams, who also is the exhibitor at Whitehall, with the release of the Paramount-Cosmopolitan production, "Enchantment." Mr. Adams is a former playwright and music writer.

Robert Cotton, former World manager in Detroit, has taken charge of the Cleveland office for William Fox.

George Sampson, who recently resigned from the management of the Pathe exchange in Detroit, has been appointed manager of the Wid Gunning corporation exchange in Detroit, assuming his new duties this week.

Close to twenty-five theatres in the neighborhood districts of Detroit have completed their week's run on "Over the Hill," the Fox special. The Detroit exchange tied the picture with a big advertising campaign in the daily newspapers.

Harvey E. Lipp, of Battle Creek, of the exhibitor firm of Lipp & Cross, operating the Regent and several other theatres in the Food City, has returned from his summer cottage and taken an apartment in Post Tavern, Battle Creek, for the winter.

J. E. Flynn, Goldwyn district manager, with headquarters in Detroit, has been named on the entertainment committee of the Detroit Board of Commerce and is now working on talent for the mid-winter cruise smoker to take place December 20.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, one of the strongest and best financed local associations in the country, is moving this week to the elaborate new quarters on the main floor of Hotel Wolverine, Detroit's newest hostelry, situated within a stone's throw of the Film Building.

Jacob Schreiber, manager of the Blackstone, Victoria, and Nettie B. Theatres, has changed the name of the latter house to the Wolverine theatre.

A. S. Aronson, vice-president of Goldwyn in charge of exchanges, spent last Wednesday in Detroit conferring with District Manager J. E. Flynn.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan Avenue appointed a special committee to begin an investigation on the alleged high price of lithographs and other exchange accessories.

Warren & Cohen, proprietors of the Colonial, first run motion picture and vaudeville theatre and a string of neighborhood houses, were Thanksgiving hosts to a party on the stage of the Colonial at midnight last Thursday. Vaudeville players at the Colonial and many exhibitors partook of a sumptuous dinner, after which dancing took place.

OKLAHOMA CITY

The Southern States Film Company, of Dallas, Texas, has purchased a series of eight Neal Hart western pictures, the first one to be released January 15, 1922.

The Graham-Anderson Exchange has opened up for business at Hugo, Okla., with John V. Grady as manager. The new exchange is small as yet, but buys all films outright, including big features.

The Cozy, the Victory, the Savoy and Odeon theatres at Shawnee, Okla., have each signed an agreement to discontinue all Sunday shows, effective immediately. This agreement was reached with a committee appointed by the various churches and Sunday Schools. A committee representing the four theatres made this announcement. We want to assure you that the theatres want to cooperate with the people of Shawnee in every possible way in bringing about the best possible results.

Henry Brunet, the only son of Paul Brunet, president of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., has accepted a position with the Dallas, Tex., branch office, where he will learn the business first handed and from the ground up.

During "Father and Son Week" the Rialto theatre at Oklahoma City opened its doors to all fatherless boys in the city. The invitation was good for the entire week. A large number of orphaned boys accepted the invitation.

C. E. Belk, city business manager at Houston, Tex., has been appointed by the mayor as head of the censor board with full authority to act.

The Clara Smith Hammond film "Fate" is being shown in some of the oil towns in Oklahoma, over the protest of the Oklahoma Theatre Owners and Managers Association's protest.

Court action will be brought to prevent further showing of this fielm in Oklahoma, according to Manager Tom H. Boland, of the Empress theatre, and one of the executive committee of the association.

ATLANTA, GA.

About twenty-five members of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., met in Atlanta on Monday, November 14, and discussed plans, appointing an advisory board to meet monthly to handle the affairs of southeastern motion picture interests.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Don't Tell Everything—
Very good show. The kind of picture that appeals to the majority of fans. Did very well all week but went over very big on Thanksgiving Day and the day following. (Middle West.)

Very, very fine picture which drew very good business. Running it a second week. (Middle West.)

Under the Lash—
A very good picture which did a nice business for us. (Middle West.)

The personal appearances of Theda Bara attracted capacity crowds for the week, making it difficult to judge the real merit of the picture, as a drawing card. (Middle West.)

Ladies Must Live—
Pleasing picture; receipts fair. (East.)

Dangerous Lies—
Pleased nicely. Receipts fine. (East.)

White Oak—
Bill Hart fans liked it, but business was poor. (East.)

The Bonnie Brier Bush—
Average picture which played to fair business. (Middle West.)

The Great Impersonation—
An interesting plot with an unusual twist at the end. Good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Deception—
Second week only fair. (West.)

The Sheik—
Four weeks' run to good business and pleased patrons. (West.)

Experience—
Tolerably good picture, but nothing extra. Business was very good, but this is accountable for very largely by season. (South).

Too Much Speed—
Very satisfactory picture. No complaint. Comment uniformly favorable. Business good. (South.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Wonderful Thing—
A Norma Talmadge picture with fine entertainment value. Played to better than usual business. (Middle West.)

Women didn't like Norma in this picture as well as in some of her former plays. (Middle West.)

This picture was splendidly presented but did not seem to have the drawing power of former efforts by this popular star. (Middle West.)

Fairly entertaining and average box office receipts. (West.)

Well liked. Receipts O. K. (East.)

Woman's Place—
Good picture which played to average business. (Middle West.)

In the midst of a depressing season this picture came out of the sky, filled the house at every showing, put everyone in a good humor, and took a lot of gloom out of the atmosphere. (East.)

Two Minutes to Go—
Charles Ray's popularity and the general interest in football just at this time was sufficient to do a good week's business. (Middle West.)

A rather poor picture. Not enough to it to hold the attention. Moderate business that would have been poor if it hadn't been holiday week when most anything gets over. (Middle West.)

Molly O—
Tremendous success. We put it on for one week and held it over for the second week. Had to use ropes for the balcony in addition to downstairs. Turned away crowds at every performance.

One Arabian Night—
Knocked movie fans for the count. Packed houses. (Middle West.)

Cup of Life—
Went across very nicely and was pleasing to most people. (Middle West.)

Bits of Life—
Wonderful feature. Sure did go over with a wallop. Well satisfying box office receipts. (West.)

GOLDWYN

From the Ground Up—
Aided by favorable press comment, this picture did a good business for the week. (Middle West.)

The Man From Lost River—
An average picture with business about as usual. (West.)

My Lady Friends—
Not so good. Poor picture and poor business. (West.)

The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari—
Third week held up very well. (West.)

METRO

Camille—
Good picture. Rudolpho Valentino great help to star. Wtih Victor Herbert as added attraction business was splendid. (East.)

A boresome production which few patrons liked. Other numbers of the program saved the day. (East.)

The Silver Lining—
Lines at box office during showing of this subject which patrons enjoyed from beginning to end. (East.)

The Match Breaker.
Very poor picture and business bad. (East.)

Ladyfingers—
As good as "Alias Jimmy Valentine;" played to big houses. (Middle West.)

The Conquering Power—
A great picture. The stars are very popular here. Drew the crowds all week. More films like this will help to counteract the German pictures. (Middle West.)

FOX

Over the Hill—
Now showing its third week and still drawing good. One of the best box office attractions of the season. (Middle West.)

Played to more than 100,000 people in five weeks at 50c. price. Still going strong. (Middle West.)

Not a big success but fills the house comfortably. Going strong enough to hold it for the fourth consecutive week. (Middle West.)

The Rough Diamond—
Picture and business both only fair. (East.)

Good picture which brought more than usual business. (West.)

Bar Nothing—
Fair picture for Western stuff. Ordinary business. (Middle West.)

The Queen of Sheba—
Going good on second week. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Dream Street—
Fairly good show, and with the seasonal changes, the fall of the year, the Thanksgiving period and the beginning of the arrival of the tourists and racing sports to this section, business shows decided upturn. (South.)

The Three Musketeers—
Fairbanks' greatest, and one of the best films ever made. A knockout for a two weeks' run. (Middle West.)

The Iron Trail—
Fair production which has fair box office value. (West.)

PATHE

Never Weaken—

WID GUNNING

Good and Evil—
Good picture. Receipts poor. (East.)

SELZNICK

Handcuffs and Kisses—
This picture did not draw well and the peope who attended seemed dissatisfied, although none seemed able to explain just why. (Middle West.)

Good picture and tremendous business. (East.)

The Man of Stone—
Well liked by patrons and did a good business with it. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Conflict—
With a number of excellent exploitation stunts, this picture was put over for a week's capacity run. Picture well liked. (East.)

Second week to good business and pleased audiences. (West.)

The Millionaire—
A red-blooded attraction that did as well as the average show. Not a knockout by any means, but neither was it a flivver. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Why Girls Leave Home—
A great advertising campaign in which we used many innovations put this picture over big, and in spite of its melodramatic title and suggestive theme, it won approval from all the critics and brought the house to capacity every night. We were compelled to run a continuous performance for six days to accommodate the crowds. (Middle West.)

Beyond the Law—
Fair picture, fair business. (West.)

Queenie—
Picture of mediocre quality and business only fair. (East.)

What No Man Knows—
Only fair picture, but very good business. (East.)

Rural Lobby Decorations for "Way Down East"

For a return engagement of "Way Down East" at the Forsyth theatre, Atlanta, Ga., Manager Jack Kaliska emphasized the Thanksgiving atmosphere by decorating his lobby with cornstalks, giant pumpkins, ears of red and yellow corn, strung together, strings of red peppers, strung, and similar things appropriate to the season, not forgetting cut-outs of two or three turkeys, posed effectively.

Encircling the marque were pairs of pumpkins, enormous ones, made of cardboard, with jack o' lantern eyes and mouths, behind which were electric lights. The words "D. W. Griffith's 'Way Down East'" were written on the pumpkins in black letters, and so big were the pumpkins and so well placed that they could be seen for blocks.

Jackson's Chariot Racers Get Gotham's Attention

A street-faring ballyhoo which attracted unusual attention on the thoroughfares of the Washington Heights section of New York City was carried out by Ben E. Jackson, manager of the Audubon theatre, in conjunction with this week's run of "Queen of Sheba."

Getting his inspiration from the chariot race scene in the production, Jackson procured a chariot of the ancient pattern, three white steeds, and a charioteer attired in the mail of an ancient warrior. A large painted banner was attached to the harness of both outside horses and another was carried on a long pole by the driver.

This unique outfit was employed for a whole week, and its daily procession over the streets of Manhattan compelled universal attention.

Ballyhoo for "The Queen of Sheba" used by Manager Jackson of Fox's Audubon theatre, New York

Strand of Denver Builds Fine Lobby Front

By the lavish use of compoboard and paint William Fox's Strand theatre at Denver, Col., made up an unusual lobby display for "The Girl from God's Country."

This theatre has a shallow lobby directly on the street. The box office between the two entries was roofed and walled with compoboard to represent a log cabin in the midst of a snowstorm. Across the entire front ran the title of the picture, supported at either end by compoboard North Woods scenes. Above the title appeared the tops of snow clad mountains, and against them were set a great number of stuffed birds and wild animals, furnished by a Denver furrier. The house artist did his work so cleverly that these figures did not have the stuffed appearance so often fatal to this type of display but seemed almost alive.

Suspended from the roof of the two-story lobby in a huge frame was a poster but little smaller than a twenty-four sheet. This was made by the house artist from the six-sheet supplied on the picture and with the remainder of the space occupied by the billing lettered by the artist.

Nicely decorated lobby on "The Girl From God's Country" which Managing Director Louis K. Sidney, of the Strand theatre, Denver, built for his showing of this picture

"Hell Diggers" Ballyhoo Interests Tacoma Fans

A ballyhoo suggestive of the dredge which forms the basis for "The Hell Diggers" was used by Charles F. McManus, of the Colonial theatre, Tacoma, to exploit Wallace Reid's latest Paramount release.

An abandoned tool-house was mounted on a Ford truck. A simple wooden hoist was added to give it the appearance of one of the "hell diggers." The sides of the house were covered with cut-outs from Paramount twenty-four sheets.

Newark Exploitation on "Two Minutes To Go" Based on Local School Tie-up

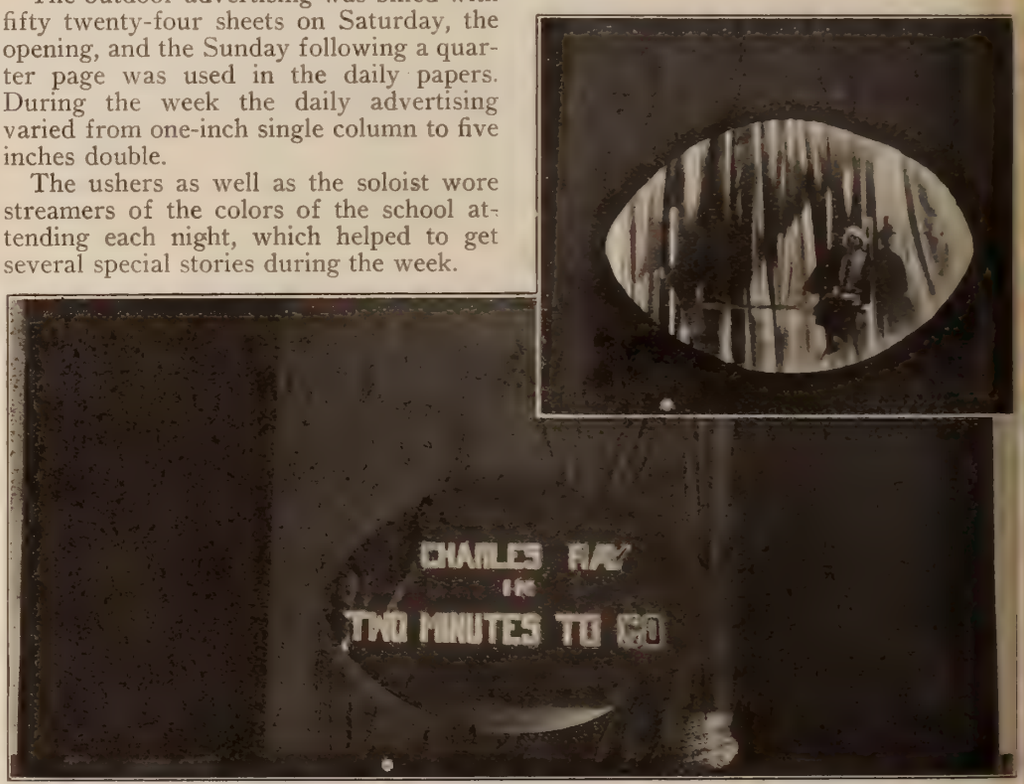
TWO weeks previous to playing "Two Minutes to Go," Managing Director D. J. Shepard; A. Gordon Reid, Reid, production manager, and M. J. Cullen, director of publicity, of the Branford theatre, Newark, planned their exploitation campaign.

It began with teaser ads reading "Coming: Football Championship, Baker vs. Stanley, Branford Theatre." The day before these were changed to read "tomorrow" and on the opening "today."

The week previous to the opening Mr. Cullen made a personal trip to each of the high schools in the city and nearby towns where he conferred with the principal and football coach in regard to having the football squad of the school come down on a certain night and designated the night for the school that was attending. The heartiest co-operation was received from the schools and the sporting editors of the papers just ate all the press matter that they could get hold of, for every team had important games to play.

Different nights were allotted to the different schools, with cheer leaders working in the aisles.

On the day of the opening a large football, measuring 15 feet long by 9 feet deep, was hung from the marquee on Branford Place, with smaller miniature footballs hanging from it. Each of these smaller ones was painted in the colors of the school on the night they were to attend, and in this way the outside advertising was made good use of.



A special music score was arranged by Jacob Rittenband, musical director, and Mr. Reid.

A scrim drop, cut in the shape of a large football, was provided. Behind the scrim miniature goal-posts were erected and Miss Norma Leyland sat on the cross-bar and rendered a solo. Each night she sang a verse of the song, using the name of the school attending, which made a big hit with the boys. As she finished, the title, "Charles Ray in 'Two Minutes to Go'," slowly lighted up, the picture started. A purple drop formed the background of the prologue with numerous colors playing on it from baby spots and arc lamps. The predominating colors were red and blue, which blended into a beautiful deep purple when they hit the background.

The outdoor advertising was billed with fifty twenty-four sheets on Saturday, the opening, and the Sunday following a quarter page was used in the daily papers. During the week the daily advertising varied from one-inch single column to five inches double.

The ushers as well as the soloist wore streamers of the colors of the school attending each night, which helped to get several special stories during the week.

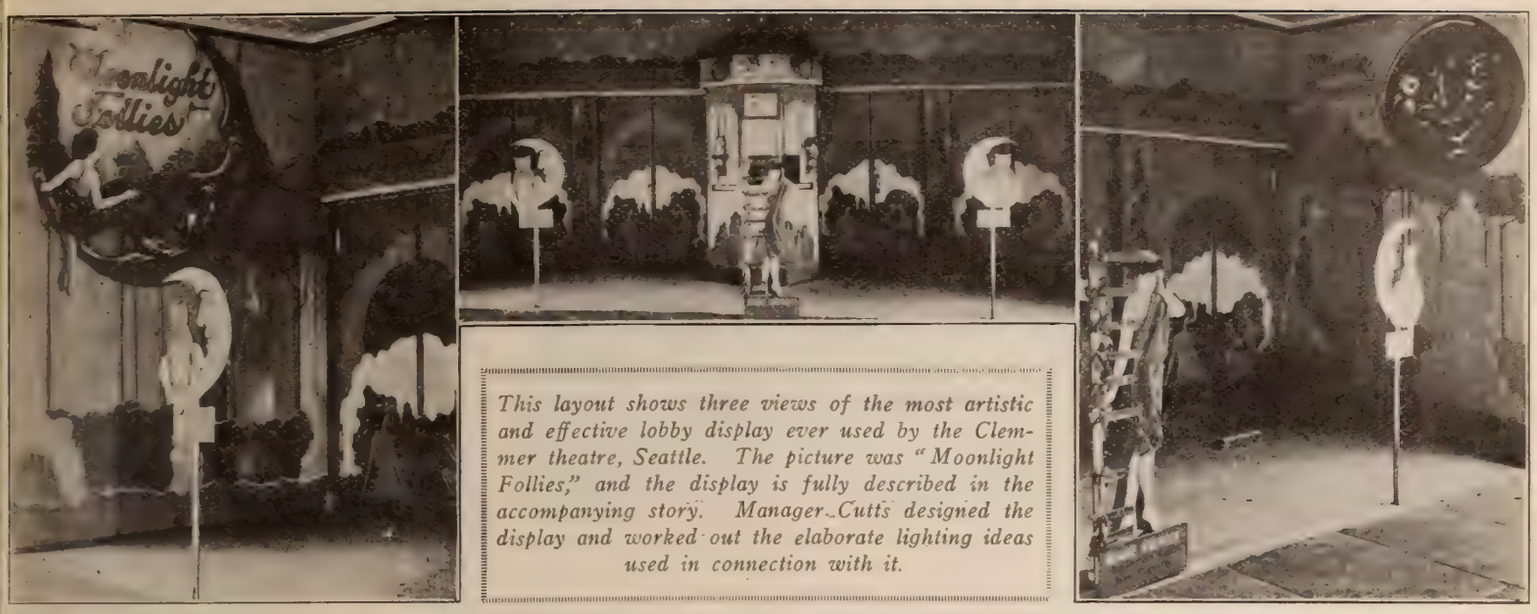
Ingenious Exploitation fo "The Blot"



One of the most ingenious exploitatio for "The Blot" that has been attempted the South was put on by Manager Ja Kaliska, of the Rialto theatre, Atlant when the picture played a week's engag ment there.

One week previous to the opening the picture, he built an interest-compellir display in one corner of the theatre lobb This was a big square of beaver boar which had been scraped so that it wa somewhat absorbent. Splashed again this rough bit of beaver board was a bott of ink, making a huge blot that sprea until it almost filled the square. Abo this was a small card reading "Ne Week," no title appearing on the card beaver board.

When the picture opened the lobby wa decorated with five "fountain pens about three or four feet high. These we filled with water, which was colored an which dripped down on another square beaver board treated so that the ink woul blot. Above this blot was a sign whic read "The Blot—growing bigger ever moment,"

In addition to the pens, broken bottle of ink were scattered about the lobby, an squares of blotting paper, each with it large blot, played a prominent part in th lobby display.

There was also a tie-up with a local sta tionery store by which cards were use in the store's windows with a display o fountain pens. The whole thing wa ridiculously inexpensive — but certainl caught and held the attention to a marke degree.

This layout shows three views of the most artistic and effective lobby display ever used by the Clemmer theatre, Seattle. The picture was "Moonlight Follies," and the display is fully described in the accompanying story. Manager Cutts designed the display and worked out the elaborate lighting ideas used in connection with it.

Cutts Originates Highly Artistic Lobby Display

Accompanying is a cut showing three views of a lobby display on "Moonlight Follies" arranged by William Cutts, manager of the Clemmer theatre, Seattle.

The scenic part of the front was heightened by an electrical display of varicolored lights—blue, yellow, orange and gold—and some ingenious mechanical arrangements.

A small "shimmying" doll on the box office drew much attention. The girl in the "moon" wore a silk skirt and the feather was real. A concealed fan blew the feather and ruffled the silk. The live goldfish in the bowl was illumined by a spot at intervals. The bathing girl behind the scrim wood set was brought into prominence by bunch lights every few seconds. The figures of the dancing and flute girls behind the scrim over the doors were illuminated in red and white, alternating every fifteen seconds. The center figure was a revised three-sheet cut-out draped in georgette silk with a real wreath about her head. The pole was done in gold bronze and the measurements shown were on silk ribbons. The figure was constantly illuminated by a strong spot concealed under the marquee. The "girl" in the bathtub was made conspicuous by the use of a flashlight placed in the eye of the "moon."

The marquee and ceiling lighting was in blue. The display was declared one of the most artistic ever attempted in Seattle.

"Quo Vadis" Essays Go Good at Toronto

A feature of the exploitation campaign for "Quo Vadis" put over by the Strand theatre, Toronto, was the inclusion in the newspaper display copy of a questionnaire based on the historical angles of the story. An essay contest open to children was part of the exploitation campaign. A special children's matinee was given each day of the run.

Poor Telephone Service Exploitation Aid

FOR the showing of "A Divorce of Convenience" when it showed at the Forsyth theatre, Atlanta, recently, Manager Jack Kaliska made a play on the current poor service of the telephone companies, which is proverbial in most cities.

Four telephone booths had been rigged up in the lobby, made of Beaver board and very realistic. In each booth was a wax figure—two men and two women, the figures borrowed from downtown department stores, and all very nicely dressed.

At intervals, there would be a mad ringing of bells—this managed by the doorman—the crossed wires and jingling bells never failing to attract attention.

A cut-out of Owen Moore and the leading woman, in a pose which suggested that the star was trying desperately to explain something that the leading lady didn't care to hear, were posed on a marble bench, which was surrounded by palms, to give the impression of a conservatory.

Buffalo Magazine Helps Franklin's Attractions

Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, arranged with the editors of "Truth," a magazine published in the city, to take over the front page of the publication for a boost of the engagement of "The Wonderful Thing."

Mr. Franklin supplied an engraving of one of Norma Talmadge's most attractive photos for use on the frontispiece. Cut lines under the photo told of the coming of "The Wonderful Thing" to Shea's Hippodrome. In addition to this, Mr. Franklin used an especially attractive series of hand-drawn ads, which were changed daily. The posters used in the elaborate mahogany frames in the Hippodrome were also of unusual design and color.

Mr. Franklin is able to tie up with "Truth" frequently and many a star gets a full-page cut in consequence.

"Dangerous Curve Ahead" Exploitation Interests Both Authorities and Public

FOR the showing of "Dangerous Curve Ahead" at the Majestic theatre, Wilmington, Del., Manager Blair, Goldwyn Exploiteer W. R. Ferguson and Elias Wetstein, publicity director for the Ginns Circuit, to which the Majestic belongs, put over a number of stunts that brought great returns.

One of the most successful ideas was an adaptation of the "bridal automobile" stunt. But in this case the automobile was shown in the lobby of the theatre (and extending out several feet on the sidewalk) and the car had been in a smash-up. The doors were off, the steering wheel twisted, the windshield broken, the radiator was wrecked and the tires deflated. Confetti, rice and old shoes were freely used as decorations. A large cut-out heart, with a weeping Cupid sitting on the heart, was mounted in the center of the lobby, on the sidewalk line, with a large traffic sign—"Stop!"—showing back of his head, and the following legend on the heart: "They didn't see the 'Dangerous Curve Ahead'."

On the base of the mounted cut-out was the word "Crash!" in large type.

The lobby was choked with colored paper streamers and through them played colored lights. The automobile remained in the lobby until the police, the fire marshal and the building inspector ordered it removed for obstructing traffic. But in that time the display had attracted all kinds of comment and attention and obtained a news story in one of the papers. The "Dangerous Curve Ahead" exploitation stanchions were freely used in the lobby.

As soon as the automobile had been removed Mr. Ferguson and Mr. Wetstein filled in the vacant space with a large oval mirror, about six feet high, fastened into a mounted cut-out of Helene Chadwick, looking into another mirror, which reflected a full view of her face. The cut-out of Miss Chadwick and her reflection in the hand mirror were taken from a large photographic enlargement (about three by six feet) from a still.

This entire display was about four by eight feet. Down the panel at the side of the big oval mirror ran the printed injunction: "Girls! Five dollars for one look! If you think you resemble Helene Chadwick, leave your photo and name and address at the box office. Five dollars will be paid to the girl who most closely resembles Miss Chadwick."

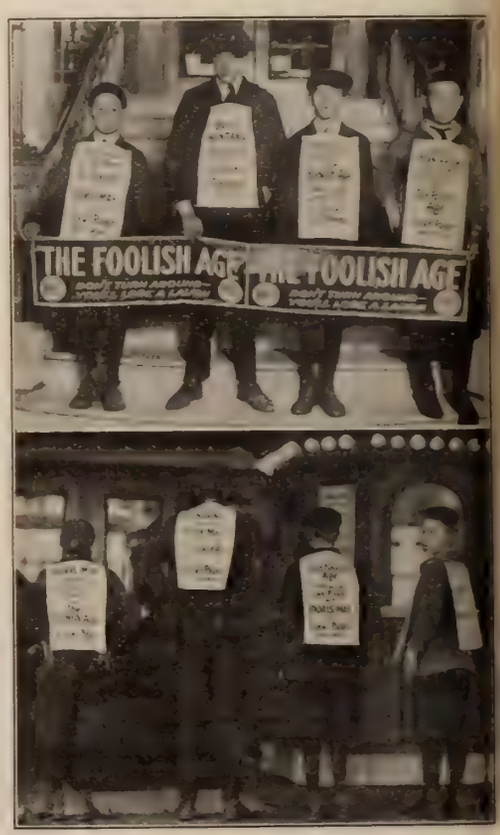
This display the police allowed to remain. Mr. Ferguson was not so lucky with a large fifteen-inch gong which he installed in the lobby and had connected up with the electric current. Every ten minutes the gong was sounded for about two minutes. It could be heard nearly ten blocks away and brought excited crowds about the theatre. The police said it the city was being sounded at once and asked Messrs. Ferguson and Wetstein to take it down. Their request was complied with, but the few hours that it had remained up it had attracted more attention to the Majestic theatre than it had had in weeks.



Bull Montana Imitator Helps "Foolish Age" Engagement

The fact that Bull Montana is a nati of Washington and also plays a part "The Foolish Age" gave a R-C Pictur exploiteer an exploitation idea when t picture was booked for Loew's Pala theatre in the capital city. A pugilist looking individual was hired to para about the principal streets, and as he slu along in the wake of pedestrians chewi a massive cigar, with placards on h bulging chest and humped back declari "I am not Bull Montana; look at my ba and note the way to happiness," ever body with whom the slouch came in co tact turned around and read "Bull Mo tana Is with Doris May in 'The Foolis Age' at Loew's Palace Next Week."

At the Washington Hotel, where th chief delegates to the disarmament confe ence are stopping and closely guarded, th pseudo Bull Montana was stopped by a indignant policeman, who demanded to se credentials permitting the individual t parade. None was forthcoming, so th policeman took the alleged nuisance t headquarters, where he was roundl scolded for disturbing the peace of th community and warned not to repeat th offence.

The City Attorney was consulted, an he informed the police that there was n ordinance which legally forbid the ma from parading, so the sandwich man wen back to his post.

Besides an unusual display in prom inent store windows along the principa business streets, the R-C men revived th old-fashioned sandwich men's parade

Chakeres' "Over the Hill" Campaign Thorough

Manager Chakeres of the Majestic theatre, Springfield, Ohio, executed several good exploitation ideas in connection with the recent showing of "Over the Hill."

A substantial newspaper campaign in the local dailies and in newspapers of six neighboring towns—Xenia, Urbana, South Charleston, Yellow Springs, Cedarville and Mechanicsburg—was the first step in publicizing the picture. The newspaper copy embodied extracts from letters received by Manager Chakeres from various leading citizens of Springfield who had previously been invited to attend a special showing of the production. The letters were unanimous in their commendation of the production and thus afforded ample opportunity for their use in advertisements.

To obtain news space in the papers, Manager Chakeres arranged for a private morning screening for the inmates of the following: Old Ladies' Home, Masonic Home, Children's Home, Odd Fellows Institution and the Knights of Pythias Home for the Aged. The inmates were taken to the theatre in automobiles furnished by business men of the city.

A tie-up with the Postal Telegraph Company was effected and utilized to good purpose as a lobby display. The telegraph company provided an instrument and table for the entrance to the theatre, and a large canvas placard was designed as a telegram.

The instrument ws operated electrically and the ticking sound pervaded the entire lobby. On a small card next to the instrument were the words: "Send Mother a Telegram."

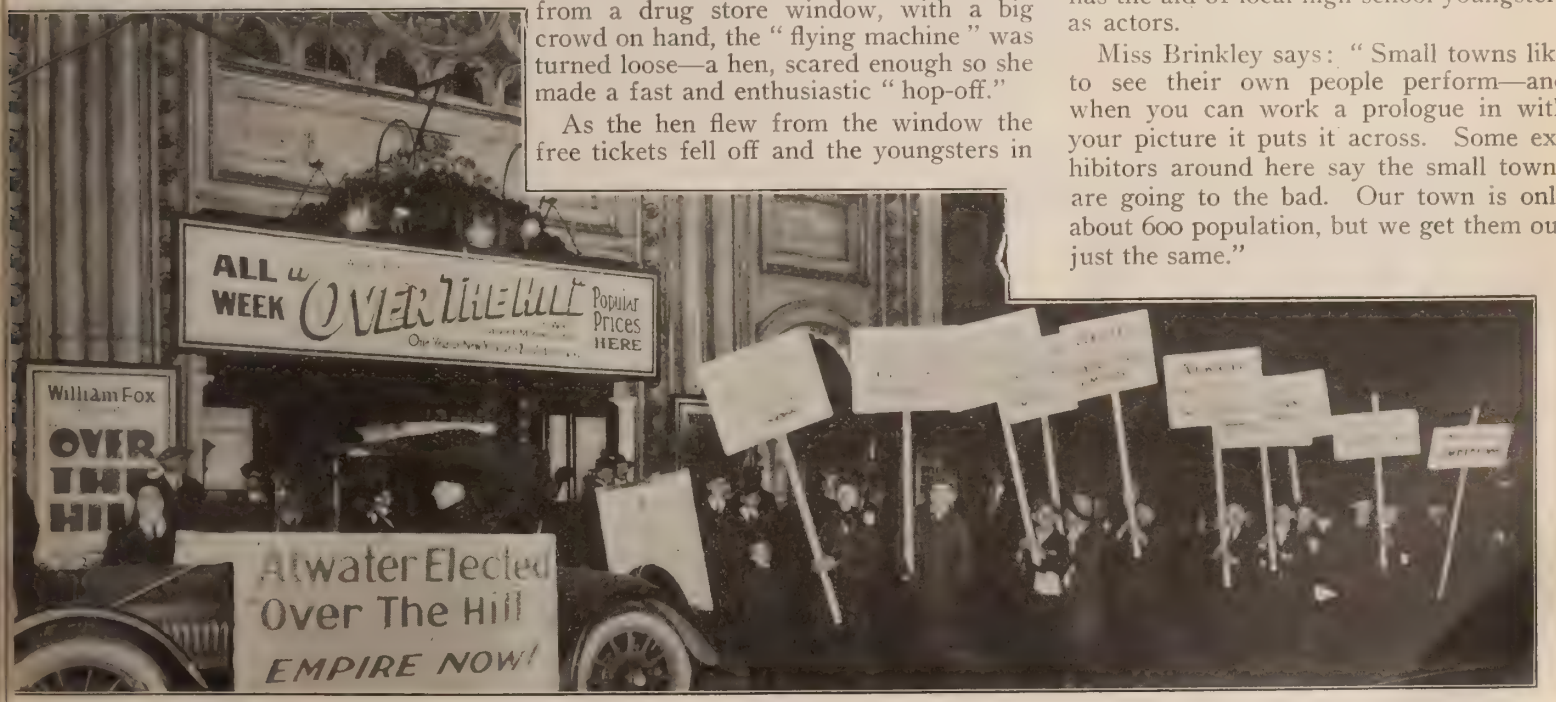
In a drug store near the theatre which deals in confectionery as well, a window display was arranged.

This "Her Sturdy Oak" lobby display is the work of Dan Burgum, manager of the Garden theatre, Des Moines, Ia.

Miss Brinkley's Hen Stunt

Small Town Showman Exploits "Girl From God's Country" in Ingenious Manner

THE small-town exhibitor who suffers from the glooms may well take a lesson from Hazel Woody Brinkley, who runs the Brinkley theatre in the little town of Moran, Kansas. Miss Brinkley is sitting pretty, playing to crowded houses, because she is a good showman and knows how to attract audiences without spending much money doing it.



One of Miss Brinkley's recent exploitation campaigns was on "The Girl From God's Country." She used the press book "She's Coming" idea, ending with a "She'll Land at 4.15" announcement. A big cloth sign announced that a certain kind of a flying machine would distribute five complimentary tickets. Then at 4.15, from a drug store window, with a big crowd on hand, the "flying machine" was turned loose—a hen, scared enough so she made a fast and enthusiastic "hop-off."

As the hen flew from the window the free tickets fell off and the youngsters in the crowd made a grab for both the hen and the "comps." The boy who captured the hen was also awarded free tickets. The stunt pleased Moran residents more than anything which Miss Brinkley had ever put over.

A window display was also used to exploit the picture. Miss Brinkley planned her display and a boy did the mechanical art. A small aeroplane with a little ladder leading down to the film case in which the picture had been shipped from the exchange was suspended in a well-located local window. A card leaning against the case read "She's Here."

Miss Brinkley produces numberless prologues for her attractions, in which she has the aid of local high school youngsters as actors.

Miss Brinkley says: "Small towns like to see their own people perform—and when you can work a prologue in with your picture it puts it across. Some exhibitors around here say the small towns are going to the bad. Our town is only about 600 population, but we get them out just the same."

Patterson Has Fine Idea for "Jane Eyre"

When Manager Willard Patterson, of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, played "Jane Eyre" he concentrated his exploitation on the fame of the book from which the picture was adapted.

Especially effective was a lobby display built along novelty lines and carrying out this idea.

A huge book, built of compoboard and covered in dark green, with the name, "'Jane Eyre,' by Charlotte Bronte," lettered in huge gold letters on each cover. The book stood erect, half open, and beneath the title on each cover was a huge tinted "still" of "big" moments from the picture.

Except for stock one-sheets on either side of the lobby and a lobby frame of "stills," this was all.

Window display secured for "Reputation," when this picture played the Allen theatre, Regina, Canada, of which H. A. Bercovich is manager.

Eleven Dollar Campaign Puts Over "Quo Vadis"

This is the story of how Grand Rapids, Mich., a town particularly familiar with good exploitation, was made to turn out for "Quo Vadis" by a campaign, the total cost of which was $11.80.

William M. Myers, special exploitation representative, was sent out to help put the picture over at Power's theatre. He put a man in Roman costume with a sign on the streets during the rush hours for five days. He tossed big red air balloons off the roof of the Hotel Pantlind the day before the opening, the balloons bearing tags warning people not to miss the picture. He arranged a special showing for prominent people, with consequent publicity. He arranged a window tie-up with a big drug store opposite the Pantlind based on the store's display of Roman candles. He had a violin window tie-up with the largest music store and a book window tie-up with the largest book shop. He conducted a special children's matinee previous to the usual Saturday afternoon showing, at which children were admitted for 15 cents.

The box office was taking 'phone reservations three days before the opening of the picture.

Another Prison Lobby Front Used at Atlanta

"The Ole Red Brick Schoolhouse" gave place to the "Ole Red Brick Jail" for Manager Frank Miller, of the Rialto theatre, Augusta, when he used a bit of ingenuity in his lobby display for "The Infamous Miss Revell."

A cell was erected of four sections of beaver-board, painted to represent a red-brick wall. Four windows were cut in this cell, and bags were placed in the windows. Inside the cell had the usual cot, one stool, and nothing else, save dirty, begrimed walls—and the occupant of the cell—a rather nice-looking young man, dressed in the conventional stripes of one who has run afoul of the law.

Over the cell was a sign which read:

"This man can't go to see 'The Infamous Miss Revell' at any price—but you are more fortunate, for you can see her here today and tomorrow for twenty-five cents."

Scotch Specialty Numbers Please Brooklyn Strand Patrons

It has been the custom of Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre to feature music and dances of the various nations represented in the city, giving over a week to each nationality. Such features had already been provided for the Irish, Italian and French population of the city.

Mr. Hyman's latest folk number was a tribute to the Scottish race.

A real highland scenic set was furnished for the recital of Scotch songs and dances. The participants wore the plaid and kilties with the maidens in the costume of their land. The upper background showed heavy moving blue clouds, a clever lighting effect, the singers and dancers sat on tree stumps and ragged rags, which were cut-out prop.

Jackson Kinsey, baritone, in kilts and to the tune to the pipes, sang "Border Ballad." Mary Fabian, soprano, interposed here with "My Love She's But a Lassie Yet." Sonia Serova and Mildred Marsh, as Scotch lassies, barefoot and in tatters, danced folk dances, which embraced "Shepherd Boy," "Bonnie Sweet Bessie," "Banks of Loch Lomond" and "Blue Bells of Scotland." A trio composed of Mr. Kinsey, Miss Fabian and Ruth Watson sang 'Comin' Through the Rye" in conclusion.

Swain's Lobby Front for "Foolish Age" Pleases

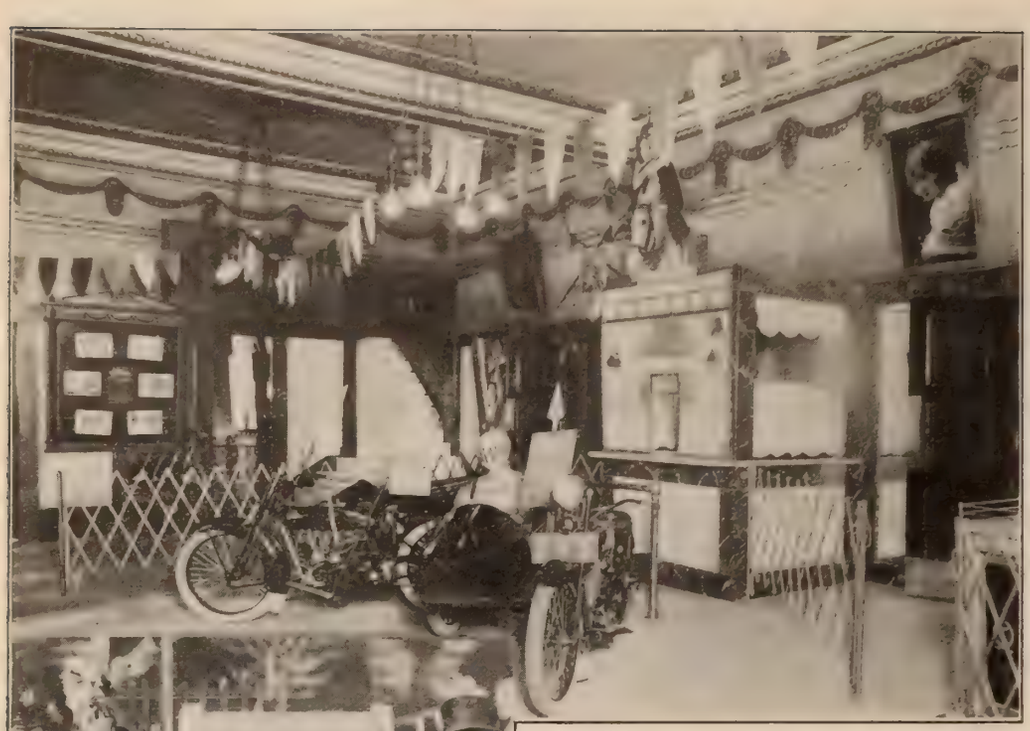
MANAGER J. W. SWAIN, of the Pastime theatre, Columbus, Ohio, devised a most attractive lobby front for the showing of "The Foolish Age."

Life size, cutout figures of Miss May in a fetching gymnasium costume, with her fists encased in regulation boxing gloves, were placed at either side of the lobby while in the center stood another attractive photograph of Miss May on an easel, together with a number of photographs also used liberally while the name Doris May was shown in big and emphatic letters on a fancy banner stretched across the lobby from right to left.

Wright Builds New Lobby Display

The prologue and lobby display used by Manager H. B. Wright, of the Strand theatre, Seattle, recently, were to a great extent responsible for the large attendance during the two weeks' run there of "Way Down East."

As a prologue to the feature, a short singing and talking act was arranged by Manager Wright and Musical Director S. K. Wineland. Although the Strand is somewhat hampered by a small stage, the cut shows the results obtained by mere suggestive scenery on each side of the screen. The three characters shown were the principals of the prologue, who sang songs of a rural nature.



The second cut shows the lobby display used by the Strand. The idea of a farm, with picket fence surrounding it, was carried out, and decorative display cards shaped as pumpkins emphasized the rural phase of the film. The main characters in the play were brought to the attention of the public as they leaned over the fence in the foreground.

Both lobby display and prologue were not expensive and brought much extra business to the Strand for the week's run.

Top cut—Illustrating the prologue which Manager H. B. Wright, of the Strand theatre, Seattle, originated for his showing of "Way Down East." Bottom cut—Mr. Wright's lobby display on this picture.

These illustrations are explained by the accompanying story relative to the exploitation of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," by Manager Max Greenman, of the Fox's Liberty theatre, St. Louis.

Greenman Makes Big Splash on "Connecticut Yankee"

Manager Harry Greenman, of the William Fox Liberty theatre, used some unique methods of advertising "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court" as shown by the accompanying cuts of the lobby and of street scenes put into good effect by Greenman.

A large squad of motorcyclists were drafted into service and the parade of these men through the streets of St. Louis bearing banners calling attention to the showing of the picture at the Liberty resulted in capacity crowds throughout the week. Cards were mailed to persons throughout the city dilating upon the excellence of the picture and inviting them to attend the show. Leading cigar houses of the city entered into the spirit of the thing and carried banners reading, "Mark Twain smoked ——— Cigars. So does King Arthur at the William Fox Liberty this week."

The large display windows of the Woolworth downtown stores were used to splendid advantage and the photograph enclosed shows just one of the many crowds attracted by this method of advertising.

Men dressed in the costumes of the days of King Arthur walked the streets and naturally enough, every one's attention was attracted to such an extent that many questions were asked, all of which resulted in increased business.

Hyman's Thanksgiving Prologue Pleases Highly

A real simon-pure old-fashioned New England snowstorm opened the Thanksgiving Week bill at the Brooklyn Mark Strand, Managing Director Edward L. Hyman prefacing his show with this stage presentation which had musical incidental numbers.

The back drop represented a New England countryside with a carpet of light snow. "Prop" snow fell throughout the number.

In this scenic set two men and two women in Puritan garb were seen apparently wending their way to church. The group paused for a few minutes to sing Kreuser's "Hymn of Thanksgiving."

Brooklyn Mark Strand Prologue Takes Cue From Picture

Managing Director Edward L. Hyman, of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre cast operatic stars in the roles of his prologue for "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and the scene used was the interior of a huge English baronial hall, the central object being a huge fireplace with a great yew log blazing. Seated at the hearth with his toys neglected, was "Little Lord Fauntleroy." His head was pillowed in the lap of "Dearest," his mother, while in a dignified court chair at one side sat the austere earl of the tale.

Mary Fabian, soprano, played the role of "Dearest," while Sonia Serova, danseuse, was attired as the tiny lord. Jackson Kinsey appeared as the Earl. Miss Fabian sang "The Sweetest Story Ever Told" during his appropriate introduction to the featured film number.

The fireplace effect was unusually realistic, with smoke curling and flame leaping.

Forty Dollars Sells "Disraeli" to Albanians

With an appropriation of $40 Uly S. Hill, manager of the Mark Strand theatre, Albany, N. Y., put over an exploitation campaign on "Disraeli" that paid a thousand per cent dividends.

The campaign included window displays, special attention to schools, colleges and women's clubs, an interview with a local judge who cited "Disraeli" as an inspiring story of domestic life, and a specially prepared letter mailed three days before the opening performance to 5,000 prominent residents of Albany.

In the matter of window displays, Mr. Hill succeeded in placing 22 x 28 photos of the production with many of the best mercantile establishments in the city. He also secured space at the Albany Capital Library, the Albany Woman's Exchange, the Y. W. C. A. and the Vassar Alumni Club. He also captured a theatre party by the Vassar Alumni, and the enthusiastic praises for the picture by these women proved most beneficial to the box office.

A special letter in which George Arliss was depicted as the "greatest character actor on the international screen," and calling attention to the high lights of the picture, was mailed to 5,000 prominent Albany folk three days before the opening.

Judge Brady, who presides over the Albany Police Court, and has a well established local reputation for bringing together married couples who have disagreed, was specially invited to attend the first showing. Then he was interviewed and gave a statement highly commending "Disraeli" as an inspiring story of domestic life, and a picture that every married person, every young man and every young woman contemplating marriage should see.

The result of this simple but different campaign was more than satisfactory.

Stage setting for a prologue number staged by Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, as described in the accompanying story

Franklin's Stage Setting Wins Patron's Plaudits

In celebration of Marshal Foch's visit to America, Harold B. Franklin put on a patriotic stage setting at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, last week, entitled "Welcome Foch!" It was a picture which evoked much praise and brought loud applause at each performance. It showed General Pershing welcoming the Generalissimo of the Allied forces. In the background rose the Capitol at Washington and a huge American flag.

Universal Exploiteer Interests School Children

R. Fox, Universal exploiteer in Illinois, put over several sucessful publicity stunts in Pekin, Ill., recently for the opening in the Empire theatre of "Winners of the West."

The local high school gave him permission to address the pupils of the school during the recess period. As a result he obtained a large percentage of the boys and girls as members of a "Universal Serial Club," the idea of which is the pledging of children to see the eighteen episodes of the serial.

Each pupil so signed received a ticket entitling him to bring a guest each week, the two being admitted for the price of one. Also, the club members were shown the first two episodes as guests of the theatre. College skull caps were given to the boys of the club and a gift offered to the pupil writing the best 100-word commendation of "thrills-from-history" serials.

Another stunt with which Fox obtained publicity was the losing of a wallet containing heralds and other advertising material on the serial. He posted many notices around town offering a reward for the boy or girl finding the wallet.

Two lobby displays painted on one set which advertised "Nomads of the North" and "The Golden Snare," at the Star theatre, Portland, Ore. The Star is managed by Milton Grostcin.

Meechum Invents Novelty Ballyhoo for Serial

Claire Meechum, manager of the Grand theatre, Rochester, N. Y., is the originator of a novelty exploitation stunt that boosted interest in his current serial, "The Adventures of Tarzan," most materially. A six-sheet of Episode V, showing Elmo Lincoln lying on a dais at which two lions are springing, was transformed into a cut-out. Mounting this cut-out on a platform, an arrangement was contrived whereby the figures of the lions were made to leap upwards and back again at the prostrate figure of Lincoln. These motions were controlled by a motor, the entire arrangement being concealed by a stand placed in front of the lower part of the platform. Through this unique contrivance a perfect illusion of the lions constantly leaping at Tarzan was obtained. The stand placed in front of the platform carried an announcement relative to the high lights of the serial.

Kennedy Borrows Doll House As a Basis for Lobby Display

Manager Kennedy, of the Gala theatre, Birmingham, Ala., stopped the crowds to see "Everything for Sale." He borrowed a little house from a paint firm, mounted it on a box in the centre of lobby and surrounded it with a green lawn with a little lake made of glass and bordered with sand and pebbles. Kewpie dolls were placed in the windows in the act of drawing the shades to hide their shocking lack of clothing. On the lawn were scattered a toy auto, horse, pony, dog, cat and cow, all of which wore tiny "For Sale" cards. Paper was also used lavishly.

"Wedding Car" Advertises "Dangerous Curve"

One of the exploitation stunts for the run of "Dangerous Curve Ahead" used by C. M. Watson, manager of the Diamond theatre, Tuscaloosa, Ala., was to send out a completely decorated "wedding car," with a bridal couple in it. It was driven through the streets and out to a football game and was later parked in the lobby of the theatre for a lobby display.

The "matrimonial road map" idea was also used as a lobby decoration plan and "Dangerous Curve Ahead" stills were cut into hand-lettered mats and placed in local store windows.

Teaser Ads Used to Sell "Bucking the Line"

Manager Ralph de Bruler, of Loew's Grand theatre, Atlanta, concentrated all the advertising for "Bucking the Line" on the star, who, of course, is new to the public.

For a week one-inch ads ran in the daily papers reading "Who is Maurice Flynn?" The tiny ad leapt up at one from the most unexpected pages of the paper, and from red and white placards which had been posted at busy corners of the streets, and from tie-tags that had been tied to automobiles parked down town. Finally, Atlanta, exasperated by the inescapable question, began to talk about it, and on Sunday a quarter-page ad read "Maurice Flynn is Yale University's World-Famous football star, known to the sport writers and readers of America as Lefty. Handsome, daring, athletic, he is the newest of worth-while male stars." Then followed the name of the picture, the theatre and the play date.

Thus "Bucking the Line" drew a much bigger audience than if all the advertising had been centered on the picture itself.

"Ladies Must Live" paper sellers, as told by the accompanying story concerning the exploitation campaign put over by the Colonial theatre, Washington, D. C.

Stutz Puts Over New One

Washington Campaign on "Ladies Must Live" Highly Original and Effective

THE popular exploitation stunt of hiring unemployed persons to advertise a picture was given a novel twist by Manager E. J. Stutz of the Columbia theatre, Washington, in connection with his engagement of "Ladies Must Live."

Stutz tied up with the Washington Times to hire twenty-five unemployed girls to sell papers. The Columbia theatre paid them $2 apiece to wear with a banner announcing "Ladies Must Live." The Times donated the papers and the girls scattered down Pennsylvania and the rest of the avenues and streets, crying their wares in high soprano.

The newsgirls took in $267 the first day, averaging better than $10 a female. The banners and the great publicity in the Times sold the public on the unemployment gag and the girls got rid of their papers easily. The Times' stories carried generous references to the picture and the Columbia theatre.

The girls asked for permission to wear the banners for the rest of the week and agreed to buy their own papers. They proved such good saleswomen that the Times announced: "The 'Ladies Must Live' girls will be given permanent positions on the circulation staff of the Times as long as they are out of permanent employment."

Mr. Stutz also tied up twelve windows on the main streets. His entire exploitation, including the stunt with the girls, cost him $30. His business on the picture was 'way over the last few months' average for a run.

Letter to Prominent Residents Used Effectively

A variation of the open letter to prominent residents was used by Manager C. D. Buss, of the Strand theatre, Easton, Pa., to exploit the showing of "Ace of Hearts."

The first ad was addressed to Mayor Horn, Police Chief Jacoby and Detective Simmers, and asked "Do you think a man can live too long? Signed 'Ace of Spades'."

On the two following days the same question was addressed to other prominent citizens, including two or three women.

On the fourth day a two-column display ad of the showing of the photoplay was run, connected up with the teaser ads by reference to the man who had lived too long.

Manager Buss had very good results from this form of teaser ad, drawing patrons to his theatre through curiosity.

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

"Sherlock Holmes" Star to Visit America

EILLY NORWOOD, well known English stage and screen player, notable recently abroad for his portrayal of the character of Sherlock Holmes on the screen, is due in this country on or about December 30.

William Alexander, of the Alexander Film Corporation, who was due to arrive in London December 5, had for his object in crossing the completion of details to bring the English player here as an adjunct to the introduction of the Sherlock Holmes pictures in America.

The Alexander firm have a diversified program arranged for the introduction of the English player here.

Sunnywest Takes Burr's Novelty Review

Burr's Novelty Review, a series of 12 one reel motion pictures, which have been very popular in different parts of the country, will now be seen in those houses controlled by the Sunnywest Films, Inc., which includes New York City and Westchester county and that part of Northern New Jersey, not including Trenton. Burr's Novelty Reviews have created sort of a vogue. After watching a big feature picture, a nice one-reel review acts as sort of a tonic.

Arista Film to Release "Prejudice"

"Prejudice" a drama in six parts will be released on the state right market within the next two weeks, according to announcement issued by the Arista Film Corp., releasing the feature. A full line of advertising matter and accessories is now being prepared.

Elinor Field and Truman Van Dyke, co-starred in "The Jungle Goddess," Col. Selig's new serial, controlled by Export and Import Film Co.

Joan Offers Ward Picture

Promises "The Hardest Way" to State Rights at Bargain Price

JOAN FILM SALES CO., INC., announces this week that it recently bought at a bargain price the last of the Fannie Ward pictures which carries the unusual title of "The Hardest Way" and offers to resell this picture to independents at the same price it paid for it plus a very small cost for handling.

"Coming as it does at the very time when exhibitors must have pictures that can be booked at living prices," states Joan, "this offer is an unusual one to say the least and State Rights buyers and Independents who are dead serious about getting goods that will sell fast, and on which they can make good profits cannot help but be interested in this new Joan offer. Quoting an exhibitor in a small town in Northern Iowa he states that 'high cost releases and high cost pictures are out of the question with me and this condition brought about by the depression which hasn't lifted as yet, has put me in a hole. I can't buy what I want in up-to-the-minute releases from the large distributors because I can't get by and make a living and I won't use the average Independent pictures at high prices because most of the time there is no star, big enough, and no title that insures me a profit in running them. If I can get a well known star in a picture that carries a good title I can do fairly well—and in answering the questions sent me by Joan regarding Fannie Ward in 'The Hardest Way,' I will say that this sounds good to me in view of the modesty of the booking costs and the good stuff backing up the picture to put it over.'"

Sixteen-page special advertising campaign books have been prepared on this picture. The action in 'The Hardest Way' is of unusually gripping nature and calls for emotional acting on the part of Miss Ward than which she has never surpassed in any of her highly emotional roles, it is said.

National Exchanges Expand

Increase of Board of Directors Is Now Announced by Corporation

EXPANSION of National Exchanges, Inc., of New York City, is indicated by the increase in the Board of Directors just announced by the corporation.

The officers of National Exchanges, Inc., now are Walter L. Johnson, president; Hunter Bennett, vice-president; Dale Hanshaw, secretary, and Daniel A. Kelly, treasurer. Mr. Hanshaw and Mr. Kelly succeed Earl H. Hopkins, who was secretary and treasurer.

The Board of Directors is now increased from three to seven members. It is composed of the four officers and Earl H. Hopkins, W. F. Ashley, Jr., and George D. Proctor.

"The additions to the directorate are made necessary by the growth of National Exchanges, Inc.," says Walter L. Johnson, president of the company. "Since we became an active factor in the distributing end of the motion picture industry in March of this year, our increase in business has been both steady and substantial. We are now distributing three feature productions, one serial, two comedy series and a single reel series.

"Announcement will soon be made of several other meritorious productions which we will distribute. Increase in the volume of business transacted has led us to enlarge the Board of Directors."

Mr. Johnson and Mr. Bennett succeed themselves as president and vice-president. Dale Hanshaw, the incoming secretary, has had a long career as an executive in the producing end of the motion picture industry. He has been associated with several of the large moving picture companies including Metro, Fox, World Film, Universal, Goldwyn and Vitagraph.

Daniel A. Kelly comes to the position of treasurer from that of accountant for National Exchange, Inc. Mr. Kelly was formerly assistant general manager of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company when that firm was the New York City Paramount exchange. W. F. Ashley, Jr., now on the Board of Directors, is a member of the firm of Ashley & Foulds, attorneys and counsellors at law. George D. Proctor, also on the Board of Directors, is well known in the motion picture industry as an advertising and publicity expert and also as a scenario writer.

Arrow Announces Firs Eddie Lyons Comedy

ARROW FILM CORPORATION announces the release of the first Eddie Lyons super-comedy. Announcement is made by W. E. Shallenberger, President of the Arrow Film Corporation of the immediate release of "Peace and Quiet" first of a series of twelve two-reel super-comedies, being made by Eddie Lyons. Mr. Lyons has been quietly working for several months, making these comedies.

"Peace and Quiet" is a story of a young newspaper editor who goes through all the trials and tribulations of the average small town editor, managing to struggle along after a fashion, until one of the force in revenge for a fancied slight, takes occasion to mix up the type just before the paper goes to press.

Bernstein Bringing Ou New Star

Isadore Bernstein, who is credite with having brought out mor screen stars than any other in dividual in the motion picture pro fession, is said to have uncovere another find in Draga, a little fif teen-year-old San Francisco gir Draga is already at work in th principal feminine role opposit Monroe Salisbury in "The Grea Alone," the first of a series of pic tures to be made by the West Coas Films Corporation at the Pacif Studios in San Mateo, California.

It was at a social function i San Francisco that Bernstein fir encountered Draga, and he was s impressed by her personality tha he induced her parents to submi her to a film test. Her engagemen for "The Great Alone" imme diately followed.

New Independent Series

"Partners of the Sunset" First of Lubin's Allene Ray Features

THE distribution arrangements for the new series of six semi-western features in which Allene Ray is being starred has been definitely settled upon. According to an announcement from Bert Lubin, president of the Western Pictures Corporation, producers of these outdoor dramas, the pictures will be sold on the independent market.

Offers from three national distributing organizations for the entire Allene Ray series were turned down because of the professed willingness of several of the independent companies which handled the two previous Allene Ray features, one of which was "Honeymoon Ranch," to pay the higher quotas on the new pictures made necessary by more elaborate productions with better supporting casts.

The Western Picture Corporation, according to Bert Lubin, will immediately commence their active sales campaign on the six pictures. The first of the series, "Partners of the Sunset" is now ready for screening. It is a society-western drama adapted to the screen from story especially written for Allene Ray by Walter Richard Hall. Robin H. Townley directed the production.

The cast included J. W. Johnston, lately playing leads for Famous-Players and prominent in the support of Arliss in the forthcoming special "Idle Hands;" Robert Frazer, who was co-starred with Anna Q. Neillson in "Without Limit;" Mildred Bright and others.

The second of the series, "Lady Luck" will shortly be placed in production. It is planned to release the new Ray pictures one every other month.

Hines Feature Well Liked

Thousands of Fans Commend Star's First Feature, States C. C. Burr

REPORTS are being received by Charles C. Burr, president of the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., praising his first big feature, "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," the comedy drama, with Johnny Hines as the star. What seems to be the opinion of those exhibitors who have run the picture is the cleanness and soundness of the story. There is plenty of comedy to keep every one in good spirits and with a long grin.

What seems to prove the drawing power of this picture is its numerous and thrilling incidents. For the old folks it revives a spirit of youth. For the young it calls for adventure and "pep." There is a real story why the actors do so and so, and not just a lot of incidents without rhyme or reason. Thousands of fans have seen "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," and Charles Burr is receiving letters every day from all parts of the country, requesting that he hurry and make another picture on its order; a picture that calls for the very best sort of a story, filled with good fun, thrilling incidents, a pretty love tale told in a true innocent manner.

Mr. Burr is now anxious to bring "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" into New York city the early part of December. Such a production he realizes should have a Broadway introduction, and that is his intentions. He would like to see "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" blaze along the wide-awake trail fully a fortnight.

"Up in the Air" is New Hallroom Comedy

"Up in the Air" is the title of the newest of the Hallroom Boys Comedies featuring Sid Smith. Herman C. Raymaker directed the comedy, from the scenario by Lex Neal, which tells the story of a man who buys at auction the services of a young chap, insures his life heavily—and then proceeds to try to collect the insurance.

Arrow Closes for Comedies

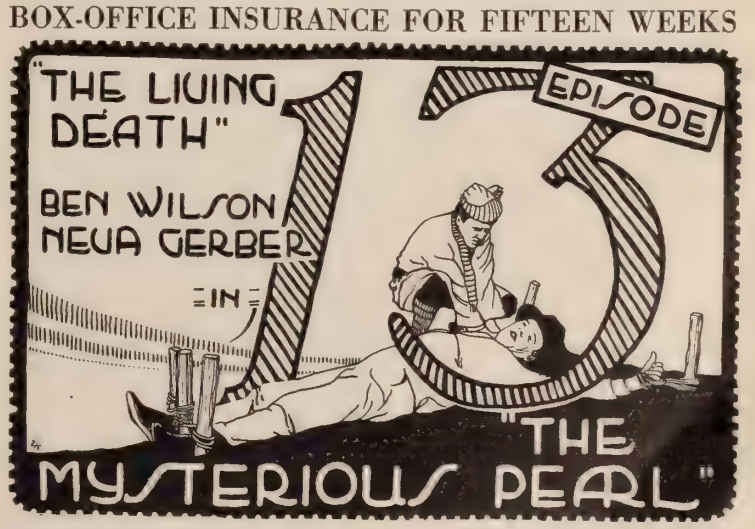
H. O. Lande, of Pittsburgh, Secures Franchises for Three Territories

AST week a contract was signed in the Arrow offices tween Harry O. Lande, of Pittsrgh, and W. E. Shallenberger, esident of Arrow, which is one the biggest Independent short el deals made this year. Under e terms of the contract, Mr. nde secured the Arrow Comedy anchise for his associated comnies for three territories, as fols: For the Quality Film Serv- of Pittsburgh for Western nnsylvania and West Virginia. r the Lande Distributing Corpation of Cleveland for Northern io. For the Lande Distributing rporation of Cincinnati for uthern Ohio and Kentucky.

By the terms of this contract ese three corporations will se- re for their respective territor-, the fourteen Broadway Comies featuring Eddie Barry, Helen rling; the twelve Reggie Morris oductions known as Speed Comies, featuring Charlotte Merriam d Nealy Edwards and J. Belasco d other well known players; the elve Cruelywed Comedies fearing the Cruelyweds, and four- n Mirthquake Comedies featurg Robert L. Conor and Bobby nn and other comedy players.

Mr. Lande in the course of an erview stated that it was his intion to open a special short reel partment with special short reel anagers in charge, as well as rt reel advertising managers o will devote their time to the ploitation and distribution of rt reels.

"The Comedy," declared Mr. nde, "has at last come into its n. The big theatre man of toy pays as great attention to the ection of his comedy as to the ature, realizing that innumerable theatregoers follow the motion picture for amusement and entertainment and can secure as much relaxtation and pleasure from a finished, witty, well produced two-reel comedy as from any feature.



"I feel," concluded Mr. Lande, "that such comedies when properly exploited hold forth as big opportunities for the Independent exchangeman as the most pretentious features afford and it is my intention with the acquisition of the big Arrow Comedy Franchise to make my three affiliated companies the largest short reel distributors in their respective territories."

Irving Lesser Sells Features in South

En route to his desk in Los Angeles from New York City, Irving M. Lesser, general manager for Western Pictures Exploitation Company, stopped off at Charlotte, N. C., where he met R. D. Craver, controlling the Southeastern states which include North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama. Mr. Craver purchased from Lesser film products totalling over $50,000.

These include all of the David Butler series of five-reel comedy dramas, the entire series of Irving Cummings' 12 two-reel Mounted Police stories, the series of "Prairie Productions" starring Dick Hatton, the series of "Cactus Features," starring Maryon Aye and "Bob" Reeves, the series of Philo-Gubb stories, made by Webster Cullison, the series of Edna Schley's "Scattergood" films, the series of Lester Cuneo's five-reel Westerns, the "Missions of California" and many others.

WIRE FOR TERRITORY

PHOTOPLAY SERIALS CORP.
(E. S. Manheimer, Gen. Mgr.)
130 West 46th St., New York

IMMEDIATE DELIVERY

First Episodes of Serial Reach N. Y.

THE first two episodes of "The Jungle Goddess," Col. Wm. N. Selig's new fifteen episode animal-jungle serial now under production for the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., arrived in New York early this week, and were screened at this company's office. Both Mr. Blumenthal and Mr. Auerbach of the Export & Import Company were greatly pleased with Col. Selig's initial episodes.

Episode four is expected in New York by December 1st. Working on the schedule as now arranged, the serial should be completed by February 1st. Releasing arrangements for the U. S. have not been decided upon.

Great Interest Shown in "Oh, Mabel Behave"

Nathan Hirsh, president of Photocraft Productions, stated that during his many year's activity in the film business he never aroused such consuming interest in a picture as is being manifested in "Oh Mabel Behave," the five reel Mack Sennett comedy featuring Mabel Normand, Own Moore, Mack Sennett and Ford Sterling.

"We have received many inquiries from interested buyers for this production from every territory in the United States," said Mr. Hirsh, "and I feel gratified by such an enormous and spontaneous response. Not alone are we beset with offers for territorial rights from state-right exchanges everywhere, but first-run exhibitors in several sections of the country have inquired where they could arrange for playdates on 'Oh Mabel Behave.' This reception of Photocraft Production's initial offering augurs well for my new concern and I am negotiating for a worthy successor to 'Oh Mabel Behave.'"

Mae Murray Preparing for New Feature

Mae Murray and Robert Z. Leonard, after a short vacation at White Sulphur Springs, Va., have returned to New York, and are now busily engaged on the preparatory work of their next picture for Tiffany Productions.

At a conference held immediately upon their return a decision was reached which will change the plans for the next picture of the Mae Murray series.

The original intention was to follow up "Peacock Alley" with "Put and Take," which was specially written for Mae Murray by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. After consideration by Mr. Leonard and Tiffany Productions staff, it was decided to postpone the making of "Put and Take" for the present, and in its place produce a script which was recently acquired for Miss Murray's use.

Abramson Makes Allegory

"Fountain of Youth," an Interpretation of "Faust," to Be Ready Soon

AN allegorical interpretation based on the operatic version of "Faust" has now been transferred to the screen by Ivan Abramson, president of Graphic Film Corporation, and in a short time will be placed on the state-right market under the name of "the Fountain of Youth." This feature is said to be novel, not only because of its being a screen interpretation of one of the most widely known operas, but also because the picture has been directed with the actual music score in mind. This is believed to be new in pictures, since the average production is made without any attention being paid to a specific music score. It has long been the ambition of Abramson, who for years previous to his entrance into the motion picture industry, was an opera impresario, to produce an allegorical interpretation of one of the standard operas on the screen, and to have as a basis of production the actual music. The final result, as in "The Fountain of Youth" is the fact that the whole music score of the opera "Faust" must be played in conjunction with the showing of the picture if the production is to receive it's best possible interpretation.

It is also interesting to note that Abramson has so closely followed the music that no adaptation is necessary. While this production differs from others in its conception, it is also different in the mechanics of movie production, for in order to interpret it's allegory, Abramson had to have recourse to every possible avenue of trick camera methods to obtain the necessarp effects. This was accomplished in good shape, for "The Fountain of Youth" possesses an even continuity that does not fail to bring home the allegory in convincing and simple style.

Abramson believes that the vast army of music lovers and the public in general will take to this new idea in movies, for it presents an opportunity to actually visualize those finer and more subtle sensibilities that predominate when one is under the spell of really beautiful music.

Lester Scott on Tour for Bert Lubin

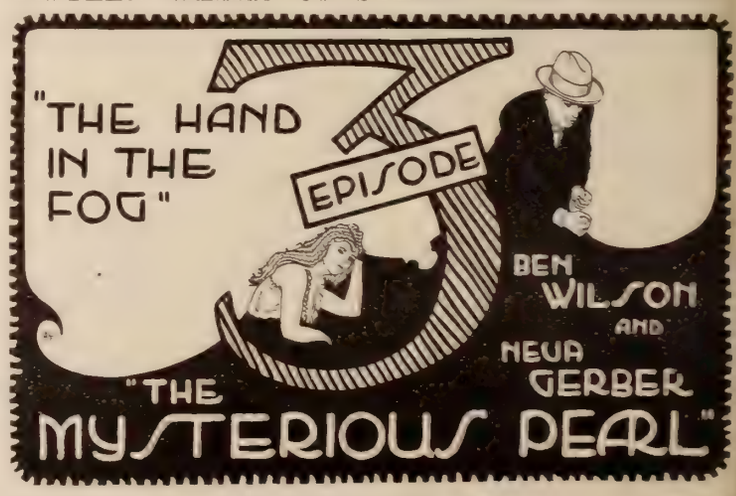
Bert Lubin has announced the appointment of Lester Scott as special sales representative on his new series of six Allene Ray five-reel features.

Mr. Scott will leave immediately on an eight weeks tour of the country, during which he will visit all the principle independent exchange centers and arrange for the distribution of the Ray series.

"Partners of the Sunset," the first of the series, is now ready for distribution. A complete line of accessories including a special "art" lobby display, a sixteen-page, three-color press book and a "star" folder and the usual run of supplies are available on this picture.

Special Effects Will Mark Bible Pictures

IN connection with the preparatory work involving the feature production of the Old Testament, Louis Weiss, Vice President of Artclass Pictures Corporation, sponsor for this film, is responsible for the announcement that many new effects in the matter of tinting, toning, sub title backgrounds and natural colors will embellish this production. Due to the character of the film and the subject with which it deals, special attention will be given to the art backgrounds for the numerous captions. In addition to unusual double and triple exposure camera effects in these backgrounds, a corp of artists are engaged in working out a series of sketches symbolic of the Biblical atmosphere and in keeping with the grandeur and dignity of the entire offering.



Because of the innumerable opportunities presented for the use of natural colors, arrangements are being entered into with one of the leading specialists in this work to evolve a series of color schemes emphasizing the beauty of the unusual points in each episode.

New Brandt-Davis Picture in December

Completed print and negative of "Life's Greatest Question," the new George H. Davis-Joe Brandt special feature production., was received this week in New York, production having been completed on the West Coast at the producing centre of Quality Film Productions, Inc., in San Francisco.

While the picture is, it is announced, practically ready for release at the present time, there is some slight final editing and titling needed, which is now being done under the supervision of Mr. Brandt. The picture will be placed on the States Right Market by the middle of December.

Joan throws bombshell

Joan throws a bombshell into the Independent Market by doing what the majority of independent distributors wouldn't dare to do —what most of them couldn't do and what a great many of them wouldn't have the nerve to do if they could.

Joan had presented to it some time ago the last of the FANNIE WARD productions. The owner of this picture was sweating hard to raise money. He made us a proposition. We came back with a counter proposition. It was accepted. In five minutes time this man had his cash. He was satisfied. We were satisfied and now we're going to make every State Right Buyer and every Independent exchange satisfied and pleased by putting this new FANNIE WARD picture out at the price we paid for it, plus a reasonable percentage. If you know any Independent who is doing this, call us up and tell us who it is. The title of this new picture is "THE HARDEST WAY" a whale of a title for the box office, which plus the drawing power of FANNIE WARD, and the modest prices at which this picture can be booked to theatres makes this the quickest action picture and the best deal by miles that State Rights Buyers and Independents could wish for. In other words, we bought a bargain and we're going to share it with men who want quick sales and small profits. We have complete press books all ready. We have paper of striking character; we have beautiful lobby photos, exploitation, stunts, and material galore with which exhibitors can put this picture across in any territory. We are going to pound on this picture in the trade papers till every exhibitor in America and Canada knows about FANNIE WARD in "THE HARDEST WAY." We're going to advertise this picture broadcast so that getting bookings on it by State Rights Buyers or Independents who buy it will be quick and easy. You'll wait a long time to get another deal on a picture of this character, with such a title and such a star at the terms on which it can now be bought, if you act quickly by communicating by letter or wire with JOAN FILM SALES CO., Inc., 33 West 42nd Street, New York City.

Russell Production to Have N. Y. Premiere

THE firm of Russell Productions, Chicago Film Producers, has filed incorporation papers subject to the state laws of Illinois, and will henceforth be known as Russell Productions, Inc. The stock, all paid in, aggregates $10,000, all of which will be held by the Russell family, making it a closed corporation. The first production to be released by this recently incorporated company is "Shadows of Conscience."

It is claimed by the company that negotiations are now under way for a Broadway premiere of this feature which has been advertised extensively in the trade papers and which has been received favorably by all critics of the press who have reviewed it at various trade showings. B. D. Russell, production manager, is now in New York for the purpose of disposing of the rights to the Eastern States. The first public showing of the picture, it is reported, will be made in New York.

Aywon Animal Picture Well Received

"The Master of Beasts," the first of a series of four five-reel wild animal productions, is now being placed on the state right market by Aywon Film Corporation, and is meeting with gratifying approval, is the report. These pictures are brand new, the second one now undergoing final cutting and editing in the studios of George Martin and John Natteford. Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon Film Corporation, entered into arrangements with Mr. Hagenbeck, proprietor of the famous Hagenbeck Circus, for the enlistment in the pictures of his entire collection of trained wild animals.

Circuit Bookings for Warner Feature

Over twenty of the largest theatres in the country, in addition to a number of big circuits, have booked the latest Warner Brothers production, "Ashamed of Parents," it is announced.

William Fox, who has booked the picture over his entire circuit, has arranged to have it shown for week runs in the Washington theatre, Detroit; Rivoli, Denver; Liberty, St. Louis; Terminal, Newark; Elizabeth, Elizabeth, N. J.; American, Paterson, N. J. and the Academy of Music, New York City. The B. K. Bimberg Circuit and Charles Steiners' Circuit have also booked the production for their respective chain of theatres.

The cast chosen primarily from the standpoint of getting actors and actresses who could best play the various roles, includes Charles Eldridge, Jack Lionel Bohn, Edith Stockton, Walter McEvan and W. J. Gross. The story was written by Charles K. Harris and Adeline Hendricks, and it was edited and titled by Eddie Bonns and Louis Marangella of the Warner staff.

Amalgamated Picture Jan.1

Features to Be Announced One a Month Thereafter, States Backer

IN order to make it possible for their pictures eto be launched in all sections of the country on the same day the Amalgamated Producing Company, the new producing organization which, under the personal supervision of G. M. Anderson is making special features to be handled through East Coast Productions, Inc., in the independent field, has fixed the release date of their first offering so that it will fall on New Years Day. On the first of every month thereafter, one of the series of twelve pictures, three of which are said to be completed, will be available and, according to President Franklyn E. Backer of East Coast Productions, he fully expects to be in a position to announce the complete list of exchanges handling them in a very short time.

Mr. Backer states that the nature of the productions now completed with the new angle given by the novel idea of co-starring several stage and screen notables in each picture and emphasizing the fact that each player must be given equal sized type in the advertising and the same electric light display, has attracted unusual attention and much favorable comment. He says that the all-star cast idea has been applied so often to stars of so many different grades of brilliancy that the producers of the new series were driven to discovering some new method of impression upon the public the fact that such players as William Courtleigh, Robert Edeson, Myrtle Steadman, Tully Marshall and the others are in the casts of the first three pictures.

First of Series Is Now Completed for Wm. Steiner Productions

NEAL HART, known by the fans as "America's Pal," has just completed the first production of the new five-reel series for the Wm. Steiner Productions. The story is entitled "Tangled Trails," a tale of the great Northwest, in which Neal Hart appears as Corporal Jack Borden of the Northwest Mounted Police. He is supported by an excellent cast of well-known screen artists, including Violet Palmer, Edward Roseman, Jules Cowles, Jean Barry and others.

The large company covered thousands of miles to get the locations that the story called for; their longest jump was from the far Northwest, above Calgary, to New York City, for scenes in the financial district.

Neal Hart is at his best in "Tangled Trails," it is said, and the franchise holders are more than pleased with the first of the new series. Among those now holding contracts for the series are: Frank Zambreno, of the Unity Photo Plays Company, of Chicago; M. A. Kahn, of the Federated Film Exchange, of Kansas City, Mo.; Gene Marcus, of the Twentieth Century Film Co., of Philadelphia; E. R. Champion, of Washington, D. C.; Southern States Film Company, of Dallas, Texas; Greater Features, Inc., of Seattle, Wash.; Sam Werner, of the United Film Service, St. Louis, W. B. A. Productions Co., of Boston; Harry Charnas, of the Standard Film Service, of Cleveland, who books the Neal Hart pictures for Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky. Floyd St. John, of the Co-Operative Film Exchange, of San Francisco, Cal., who books California, Nevada, Arizona and the Territory of Hawaii. Other territory is now being arranged for.

Following "Tangled Trails," seven more five reel features will be produced, one every six weeks.

New American Authors Picture at Strand

"Washington Irving" is the next of the "Great American Authors" series which will play in the Strand theatre, New York. The picture which carries the name of the author as its main title, bears a sub-title which says: "A brief review in memory of the Father of American Literature."

"The Sketch Book" furnished most of the material for visualizing Washington Irving's familiar characters.

Arrow Film Announces Important Sales

Arrow Film Corporation announces the closing of a contract with H. G. Till, productions of Merit, for the distribution in Louisiana and Mississippi of "The Golden Trail," an American Lifeograph Production, starring Jane Novak, "Woman's Man," starring Romaine Fielding, Love's Protege, starring Ora Carew, and a series of four Jack Hoxie features.

At the same time Arrow announces that arrangements have been made for the pre-release of the new super-serial "Man of the North," starring Ann Little in three territories on December 15th.

Although this picture will not be ready for general release until the first of the year, the Eltabran Film Company of Charlotte, N. C., Bob Lynch of Metro, Philadelphia, and Messrs. McConville and Patten of Independent Film Company of Boston have made arrangements with W. E. Shallenberger President of Arrow Film Corporation to release this serial beginning the fifteenth of December.

Backer to Name Franchise Holders Soon

Promising to announce the first list of franchise holders who will handle the co-starring features, "Ashes," "Any Night" and the balance of the one-a-month productions of the Amalgamated, next week, Franklyn E. Backer, of East Coast Productions, Inc., reports that contracts with independent exchanges are being closed at a rate which insures the complete covering of the country by December 15, the date set for the beginning of active operations.

Mary Carr and Shirley Mason on Tour

AT the request of H. B. Burner, chairman of the invitation committee of the Southern Motion Picture Exposition, William Fox has sent Miss Shirley Mason and Mrs. Mary Carr—the mother in "Over the Hill"—to attend the annual convention which opened on November 29 at Charlotte, N. C., to continue four days.

The party consisted of Miss Mason, Mrs. Carr, her daughter Louella, who played a prominent role in "Over the Hill," and Vivian M. Moses, director of advertising and publicity for Fox Film Corporation. They left New York Wednesday morning and arrived at Charlotte in time for Miss Mason and Mrs. Carr to put in an appearance at the business session Thursday morning. Both were cordially welcomed by the several hundred exhibitors convened.

A number of women's clubs, chapters of the Red Cross, and civic institutions extended invitations to have the two motion picture actresses attend dinners and receptions in their honor.

Naval Film Rouses Interest

Educational to Show "Battle of Jutland" Before U. S. Navy Bodies

"THE BATTLE OF JUTLAND," Educational's picture of the great sea conflict of the World War, is attracting great interest among the officers and men of the United States Navy, according to a report from Educational home office. High ranking naval officers, among them Rear Admiral W. S. Sims, have expressed a keen desire to see and study the picture. Following its successful week's run at the Rialto theatre in New York, Educational is preparing to give at least two showings of the film for the benefit of navy officers and students.

The office of the Secretary of the Navy has given recognition to the picture by making arrangements for its showing at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, according to Educational. Students at the Academy and officers on duty there will view the picture at this showing, it is reported. Just before or just after this screening Educational will present "The Battle of Jutland" at the Marine Barracks in Washington, at which showing the officers on duty at the Navy Department will have an opportunity to view the picture, it is stated.

A third special presentation of the picture is likely to follow at the Naval War College at Newport, R. I., for the benefit of Rear Admiral Sims and other officers at the college. Admiral Sims, who is a friend of Major General Sir George Aston, whose two years of constant study and work made the filming of the picture possible, has expressed interest in this film study of the world's greatest naval conflict, and it is more than likely that it will provide material for extensive study at the War College as well as at Annapolis, declares Educational.

During the entire week of the showing of "The Battle of Jutland" at the Rialto, naval men, both officers and enlisted men, were very noticeable in every audience. Men from the ships now in New York waters were at the theatre in large numbers every day.

DeHaven Feature Offered

"Marry the Poor Girl" on December Program of Associated Exhibitors

THE announcement that Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven will appear on the Associated Exhibitors' program in the screen version of their stage success, "Marry the Poor Girl," is creating considerable interest among the exhibitors, announces the distributors. While it has been known that they were contemplating a quick release of this production, no intimation had been given of their distribution plans prior to the announcement that they would release through the Associated Exhibitors organization. J. E. Storey, sales manager of the Associated, says that "Marry the Poor Girl," which he has announced for release on December 11, will be greeted by important first run bookings in every exchange center. He states that the branch managers of Associated Exhibitors report much interest on the part of the theatre owners who are anticipating that "Marry the Poor Girl," will duplicate the popularity of "Twin Beds," and the other De Haven comedy dramas.

It is stated that "Marry the Poor Girl" will have big exploitation, and that an elaborate campaign book has been prepared, which is replete with novel advertising ideas, suitable for this kind of a feature. The posters likewise are being selected with an eye to their use as cut-outs in striking lobby exploitation displays.

The story, which is typically a Carter De Haven theme, is based upon the embarrassment caused when two engaged couples are caught in an embarrassing mistake, while a bungling friend who tries to straighten out the error, only adds to the complication of errors. It is described as a delicious comedy-drama of highly humorous moments, sophisticated, not over risque, and is a feature of uproarously funny developments.

The screen version has been adapted from Oliver Morosco's stage play, which was written by Owen Davis. It was prepared for the screen by Rex Taylor and directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

Arvid Gillstrom Will Direct Harry Sweet

Julius Stern, president of Century Film Corporation, has just signed Arvid E. Gillstrom to direct Harry Sweet, Century's young comedian. He will start his duties this week.

Roosevelt Memorial Medal for Laemmle

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, recently received resolutions of gratitude and a silver memorial medal from the Roosevelt Memorial Association. During the last year Mr. Laemmle, through his agent Charles R. King, a former friend of the ex-President, has rendered much assistance to the Roosevelt Memorial Association.

Due to Mr. King's position as Universal agent in Cuba, the Universal president's co-operation with the Roosevelt Memorial Association has been largely in connection with the Cuban branch of the association. Universal's principal first run theatres, the Campoamor, one of the leading cinema houses in Havana, has overlooked no opportunity to help the association in its promulgation of Rooseveltian ideals and in building up the organization by which the former President's memory is being crystalized.

"Bucking the Tiger" Is Printed Serially

Showmen who play Selznick pictures will be interested in the extensive circulation of Achmed Abdullah's story, "Bucking the Tiger,' 'that is now running serially in a great number of newspapers scattered throughout the country. It was the Abdullah story that formed the basis of the stage play of the same title Lewis J. Selznick produced a couple of seasons ago.

May Tully wrote, with Abdullah, the stage vehicle from Abdullah's novel and after Selznick had toured part of one season with the play it was withdrawn for the purpose of conversion into a photoplay. Conway Tearle was cast for the star part in the picture and this Spring "Bucking the Tiger" was released as one of the units in the Tearle star series.

"Outside the Law" Popular in So. America

Senor Ruy Barbosa, Brazil statesman, who occupies the internationally position of the Chief Justice of the League of Nations, recently handed down an opinion on "Outside the Law," Priscilla Dean's popular Universal-Jewel picture.

"Very interesting," was the opinion of the world's famous jurist, concerning Universal's colorful picture of life, romance and adventure in Constantinople. Senor Barbosa's commentary on the Priscilla Dean picture took place in Rio de Janeiro, where a private showing of the film was held by Dan B. Lederman, Universal's Brazilian manager. Leading citizens and political leaders in the South American metropolis as well as representatives of the newspapers were present at the showing which was held at the Universal exchange.

"Anne of Little Smoky" Is Playgoers Release

THE current feature of Playgoers Pictures is "Anne of Little Smoky," a Wistaria Production, which was released November 20. Winifred Westover, Joe King, Frank Sheridan and Dolores Casinelli have the leading roles in the production.

Miss Westover has the title role, while Joe King is a Government ranger, in love with the mountain maiden. Frank Sheridan is her father, a hard fighting mountaineer, opposed to all law which would take from him the right to rule the community known as Little Smoky. Dolores Casinelli has the colorful part of a flaming gipsy beauty, who upsets the pretty romance between the ranger and his sworn enemy's daughter. The picture is declared to be replete with action and physical encounter offered by the influence of a dual romance and heightened by a suspense ending.

"Gunning" Month Interests

Many Play Dates Are Reported from Branch Offices; Plans to Surprise

PLAY dates for Wid Gunning Month, the tribute to their chief which is being put across during January by the exchange and home offices sales staff of Wid Gunning, Inc., are being reported in large numbers from the branches, according to a statement by one of the corporation officials here.

"We find that the exhibitors of the country haven't forgotten the time when Wid Gunning was sales manager of the Eclair Company and Warner's Features," it was said, "and that they are all willing to help the success of his company not only because they remember how fair he was to them in those old days, but because they are sure that any picture on which Wid puts his stamp of approval is going to be a sure fire box office picture. They remember that all his life Wid has laughed at the hokum with which other companies have surrounded their product, and that what he has had to say has been facts, straight from the shoulder.

"Every day we are rising to a higher pitch of enthusiasm about Wid Gunning Month because of the aid exhibitors are giving us in putting it across.

"We don't mean to say that all our sales force has to do it to sit around with its feet on desks shaking contracts out of envelops. The film business isn't quite as easy as that these days, even for Wid Gunning. But we do find that exhibitors are keen about Wid Gunning pictures, and that when they find they can join in the organization's tribute by piling up January play dates, they do so.

"We are making some plans for Wid Gunning Month which will be a surprise to the industry when they are announced in a few days, and which will add further impetus to this sales drive. The managers are coming through 100 per cent, and their enthusiasm is not forced down from the home office sales department, but is spontaneous.

"The welcome which the public gave this week to the opening of Charles Dicken's "Our Mutual Friend" at the Lyric shows that Wid made no mistake when he arranged for the distribution of this 'perfect movie.' Many big first run houses will still be playing 'Our Mutual Friend' in January and practically all of the country's larger second run houses will show it during Wid Gunning Month. An unprecedented demand too is developing for prints of Lois Weber's spectacular picture, 'What Do Men Want?' during January, and it may be necessary for us greatly to increase our original supply of prints. The exploitation possibilities of this picture, together with the compaign which has been out-lined by our Exploitation Department has made an especial appeal to exhibitors."

"His Nibs" Press Book Ready

Unusual Features in Aid Issued by Exceptional on New Feature

THE press book to be issued in connection with the exploitation prepared for "His Nibs" has been carefully compiled at the office of the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, working with "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., the organization which will distribute the picture.

This press book is said to be unique in many of its outstanding features, each of them specially prepared with an idea of helping the exhibitor put the pictures across in the biggest possible way. Opening the book is a strong editorial by Alexander Beyfuss, president of Exceptional Pictures, and addressed to the exhibitors. From there the book swings at once into practical helps. The story on Charles (Chic) Sale is not an exaggerated publicity yarn, but a sincere and interesting feature that can be lifted by exhibitors and used as a newspaper story.

One of the great special articles that will aid toward capacity houses is from the pen of Epes Winthrop Sargent, the exploitation editor of the Motion Picture World, and was prepared by Mr. Sargent through the courtesy of that publication.

For aids on Prologue and Lobby display, Exceptional Pictures invited Mr. Howard B. McLellan, the Exploitation Editor of Exhibitor's Trade Review, to prepare a page, which was done through the courtesy of Mr. McLellan's publication.

After a page of advice on how to best use the newspaper publicity section, and another on what the big showing at the Hotel Astor taught, there is an article on "Putting over 'His Nibs' to Music," by James C. Bradford, who prepared the musical synopsis for the "His Nibs" Press Book, and who personally directed the orchestra when the picture was shown at the Hotel Astor Ballroom.

In addition, there are features on how to program the picture; on the new and special accessories, and a double-spread page on the advantages of advertising with booklets, teasers, and by mail. This spread contains a teaser and follow-up campaign.

Papers Devote Space to "The Four Seasons"

On Sunday, December 4, the motion picture sections of the Philadelphia Record, the Baltimore American, the Syracuse Post-Standard, the Indianapolis Star, the Minneapolis Journal and the Louisville Herald are carrying a beautiful page in rotogravure on "The Four Seasons," the magnificent nature-feature produced by the Kineto Company of America.

The page is illustrated in good taste and carries in addition a story stating that the Urban-Ditmars contribution to motion pictures has been one of the worth while things of the year.

Finis Fox Completes Initial Feature

Finis Fox has made his debut as a producer with a "Man's Law and God's," a five-reel feature which is now in the hands of the Rothacker-Aller Los Angeles plant. Mr. Fox now has finished cutting the picture, and the laboratory is working on the print for a Los Angeles pre-review. "Man's Law and God's" is a gripping story of the Canadian frontier, replete with action and heart interest; and Jack Livingston, who is starred, plays the part of the corporal of the Northwest Mounted Police. Ethel Shannon plays the feminine lead. Anthony Korman was the camera man and Mr. Fox, who wrote the story, was behind the megaphone. Mr. Fox was a scenario writer for Metro for three years. Among later pictures, for which he is responsible, are Charles Ray's "Scrap Iron," and "Isobel."

Critics Commend New Wm. Fox Star

General trade and newspaper comment on "Cinderella of the Hills," the recent Fox release starring Barbara Bedford for the first time in her screen career, has offered material evidence for the justification of the promotion of the actress to a stellar position, claims Fox. Praise for the histrionic efforts of the new star has been universal and predictions of a rosy future have been abundant. Her entrance as a star was made under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell, who will also direct her next vehicle, scheduled for release in January.

Huntly Gordon Lead in Cabanne Special

Huntly Gordon, well known leading man, is playing the principal role in the new Christy Cabanne special for Robertson-Cole, tentatively titled, "Women of Conquest," work upon which is progressing rapidly at the Metro studios in New York.

Gordon, who has been playing leading roles in pictures for the past five years, was selected for the principal role by Director Cabanne after a number of other prominent leading men had been interviewed.

Neilan Pays Tribute to "Hail the Woman"

THE policy of co-operative criticism, adopted on the West Coast by producers whose pictures are distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., brought from Marshall Neilan the declaration that "Hail the Woman," Thomas H. Ince's forthcoming special production "is indeed an achievement for the motion picture world."

Mr. Neilan was among the group of Los Angeles picture notables who attended the recent presentation of "Hail the Woman" at the Beverly Hills Hotel. Mr. Neilan's letter reads in part:

"While I rejoice in the thought that this wonderful photoplay is a great personal accomplishment for you at the same time I cannot help but say that the production represents even more than this to our industry in general, for it is indeed an achievement for the motion picture world.

"It is a photoplay that every woman in the land should see and entertainment that every man and youth will enjoy."

Big Demand for Lloyd's "Sailor Made Man"

Associated Exhibitors declare in a statement issued last week that such interest has been aroused by the announcement of the release of Harold Lloyd's "A Sailor-Made Man" on December 25th, that a hurry call has been issued to the Pathe Laboratory for advance prints. The statement declares that while the home office of Associated Exhibitors realized the heavy demands which would be made by the exhibitors to secure "A Sailor-Made Man" as a Christmas week offering, they hardly anticipated the tremendous number of inquiries which have been received. They state that the great success of Lloyd's "Never Weaken" brought forcefully to the exhibitors the realization that "A Sailor-Made Man," which is in four reels, would provide a record breaking feature attraction for the holidays. They further declare that this production will be sold only as a feature and must be made the main attraction in every theatre where it is shown.

"Silver Sheet" Issued on "Hail the Woman"

"Silver Sheet," the house organ of Thomas H. Ince studios, published in the interest of productions created by Thomas H. Ince for distribution by First National exchanges, has just been issued.

The current edition deals with "Hail the Woman," the forthcoming Ince special, although a part of the book is devoted to "The Cup of Life" and "Mother O' Mine."

"Silver Sheet" consists of twenty pages and art cover, is printed on coated paper and circulates among exhibitors.

Otis Skinner with Exceptional

EXCEPTIONAL PICTURES announces this week that they will present on the screen "Mister Antonio," starring Otis Skinner. Mr. Skinner, who is one of the greatest personalities of the screen, and who has endeared himself to millions of photoplay fans throughout the world through his artistic characterization of "Hadji, the Begger of Bagdad," has been persuaded by Alexander Beyfuss to appear again, this time as "Tony, the Organ-Grinder," in one of his most successful plays, "Mister Antonio."

"Even greater than the value this announcement has in the up-building of Exceptional Pictures," announced that company, "which since its inception scarcely two months ago has made energetic strides toward the fore of producing organizations, is the fact that it will serve as a step forward for the entire industry. It means that motion pictures is about to accomplish another of the really worth-while things which are needed to make solid its foundation as one of the arts.

"'Mister Antonio' means not only a film; it will bring with it the artistry of one who can help to elevate the standard of the screen; one who will call forth patronage to the motion picture theatre that could not be brought otherwise. It will lend dignity, art and accomplishment to the silent drama, and it will add to the roster of those whom the industry must look to for the big things of the future—the name of one of America's greatest authors, Booth Tarkington.

"In making this announcement," Mr. Beyfuss continues, "We feel that it will demonstrate once more that every step we shall make will be a definite advance in the industry for Exceptional Pictures. In bringing Mr. Skinner to the screen again we want to be considered only as the agency in associating him with the art of motion pictures—we need him and others like him for the good of all—that producing may become more creative; that the distributor may give to the exhibitor, for his public, a product of a higher standard, thus assuring the patronage which will not only mean financial success for everyone, but carry motion pictures nearer the goal for which they are striving."

Otis Skinner is more than a personality; he is part of the foundation of the art of the modern theatre. Successful in the highest degree, he is beloved throughout the entire country for himself, and for the type of artist for which he stands. Known in practically every city and hamlet in the country, he has continued to sweep aside precedents established, by appearing in the smallest towns for one, two and three night stands. That is why the public knows him and honors him as America's foremost remantic actor. This popularity, so well-deserved, will lend tremendous appeal to his motion picture of "Mister Antonio."

The sincerity of purpose established in the progress which Exceptional Pictures has accomplished in its each individual step is once more demonstrated in the acquisition of Otis Skinner, and "Mister Antonio."

"The Need of Better Pictures"

By Jesse L. Lasky

IT is now several years since the slogan, "Fewer and better pictures" was adopted among producers and in the main I feel that most of them have tried to live up to the ideal thus expressed.

But I do not believe that any of us have fully succeeded. True, we are making better pictures than we made a few years ago. I may say for example that Paramount Pictures are very fine pictures generally speaking. But they can be better. That is the crux of the matter.

Not only must pictures be better—they must be so much better that there will be no necessity of trying to convince the public of the fact. The pictures must speak for themselves and in terms so emphatic that even the dullest eye and mind will appreciate their quality. This is essential for the simple reason that unless pictures are produced with a positive insistence upon superior quality, they will ultimately find themselves without an audience and the producer will be like Othello, "with occupation gone."

More than ever before are audiences discriminating. This is not just an expression—it is the truth as I happen to know very well indeed. The exhibitor has to present something that is a decided attraction before he can hope to fill his house. Not merely a sensation—it must be good, good in quality, good in story material, cast, direction, production presentation. There is no single element in the art and industry from the start to the finish, from scenario to theatre, which cannot stand some advancement almost daily. And this advancement is imperative if the business is to retain its past popularity.

Motion pictures are made, they are sold, they are witnessed. If they are not good they will not sell. The public must be attracted. This cannot be done by flamboyant advertising, by "booster" methods, by mere promises without fulfillment. There must be truth behind every promise and it must be carried out.

We are living in an optimistic world, despite the many causes for possible pessimism. People are inclined in this country to be optimistic and this very characteristic has carried us through many vicissitudes. I do insist, however, that no amount of optimism will enable producers to continue successfully in business if they do not heed the handwriting on the wall and make better pictures—not merely talk better pictures.

So far as we are concerned, Paramount Pictures are going to be better all the time. They've got to be. It isn't a case of merely hoping for the best—we have to know in advance that we are making better photoplays, that every story is filled with the material that people demand, that the best stars and directors, the finest settings, the most perfect technique are all applied to the end that exhibitor may be able to fill his theatre and send his audiences away satisfied with what they have witnessed.

We believe that every picture produced as a Paramount Picture for future release approximates at least the ideal we have set—but we realize fully that by next month, or next year we shall have advanced that goal post several miles and be striving for something still finer. However, we cannot see further than this and must hope that we are at least a measure or two ahead of even the exacting public's demands.

In every instance in our forthcoming picture the most strenuous effort has been made to secure material that could not be surpassed. Following this, the directors were accorded every facility, fine casts, fine settings. Not every class, perhaps, will like every picture, but I think that in every picture there will be a special appeal to a wide enough audience to insure individual success. No one can please all of the people all of the time.

But we are not pausing here Unless we progress, we stagnate. With stagnation comes dissolution. That must not be. It is up to the producer. He is the man to make the motion pictures better and better and better. If he fails in his task failure is the order all along the line.

And there can be no such word in our lexicon.

Pathe Short Subject Releases for Dec. 11

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces that "Trapping the Weasel," the latest of the series of "Adventures of Bill and Bob," is featured among the five short subject features scheduled for release the week of December 11th. "The Conceited Donkey" is the latest animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables," produced by Fables Pictures, Inc., and created by Cartoonist Paul Terry.

"Red Courage" is the title of the twelfth episode of the new Pathe serial, "Hurricane Hutch," starring Charles Hutchinson. "Look Pleasant, Please" is the current reissue one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. The spectacled comedian is supported by Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard.

"Sink or Swim" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. Pathe Review No. 133 presents an all-star series of subjects of widely diversified nature.

Pathe News, Nos. 100 and 101, give the important current events throughout the world photographed by the Pathe cameraman. Topics of the Day, No. 137, presents bits of wit and humor culled from the world's presses.

Delegates Urged to See "The Four Horsemen"

Recommendation that the delegates to the Disarmament Conference view the picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" as a stimulus to the realization of limitation of war equipment is made in the editorial columns of the Evening Tribune, Albert Lea, Minn. Metro Pictures quotes the editorial in part as follows:

"We only wish that the delegates from the various countries who are to sit in the disarmament conference at Washington, could be induced to see 'The Four Horsemen' before the meeting is called to order."

Stevenson and Bennison with Realart

Confirming what is already popular knowledge oncerning the revival of film production in Los Angeles, not only are the members of the local residing actors' colony busily at work, but their numbers are being augmented by the arrival of many prominent players from the Eastern studios.

Listed among these are Charles A. Stevenson, and Louis Bennison. Mr. Stevenson arrived last week at the Realart studio where he will assume an important character role in the next Wanda Hawley production. Mr. Bennison is due to arrive the latter part of this week to assume the male lead in the same picture.

Carmel Myers, who is co-starred with Wallace MacDonald in the new Vitagraph serial, "Breaking Through"

Conway Tearle Picture to Be Ready Soon

One of the six pictures scheduled to reach the screen with Conway Tearle starring is "A Wide-Open Town," based on a story sold to Myron Selznick by Earl Mitchell, a dramatic actor who devotes some of his leisure to authorship of scenarios and novelettes. During the latter days of Selznick's operations in Fort Lee, N. J., Ralph Ince directed the production and the finished product was shown last week to the Selznick organization in the home-office projection room.

Ralph Ince is declared to have given the story an illuminating presentation. The gambling-house scenes are vividly acted by large delegations in surroundings authentically picturing a "joint" in full operation. Harry Tighe, Claude Brooks, Daniel Hayes and James Seeley are prominent in Mr. Tearle's support.

"Lulu Bett" on Screen Beats Novel and Play

"At more than one point the picture, 'Miss Lulu Bett,' improves upon both book and play. By such work as this Paramount is doing a serivce not only to the screen but to fiction and the drama."

This is the statement made by Zona Gale after seeing William de Mille's production. Miss Gale, it will be recalled, not only wrote the book, which is one of the most widely read works of fiction of recent years, but later dramatized it so perfectly as to win the Pulitzer Prize of $1,000 for the best play of the year.

"Our Mutual Friend" a Xmas Attraction

First run houses are making special arrangements to show Charles Dickens' "Our Mutual Friend" during Christmas week, according to a statement from Wid Gunning, Inc., distributors of this picture.

"Dickens and Christmas are indelibly associated in the public mind and exhibitors know this," says the statement. "For that reason big houses are anxious to get play dates on this film for the holiday week. Their managers are planning to play up the author, and this reproduction of his well-known masterpiece in their holiday advertising."

"Fifty Candles" to Be Released Next Week

"FIFTY CANDLES," the Irvin V. Willat production based on Earl Derr Biggers' story of the same name, which was recently made for W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, was given a final O. K. by Hodkinson officials this week and will be released next week for distribution through the new Hodkinson exchanges.

"Fifty Candles" is a mystery story and is said to be one of the most unusual narrative ever adapted for the screen. The action of "Fifty Candles" takes place in Honolulu, Shanghai and San Francisco.

The cast for "Fifty Candles" includes Marjorie Daw, Bertram Grassby, Dorothy Sibley, Edward Burns, George Webb, William Carroll, Wade Boteler and Ruth King.

"Rip Van Winkle" Wins First-Run Bookings

About twenty-five first-run houses have booked "Rip Van Winkle," a Hodkinson release, for Christmas Week engagements. "Rip Van Winkle" is a Ward Lascelle Production featuring Thomas Jefferson, son of the immortal "Joe" Jefferson.

Universal to Abandon Main Title Line-Up

Universal announces that it will discard its old main title line-up in favor of a more interesting and up-to-date introduction. In the future Mr. Laemmle promises a new kind of opening in its big pictures. Each picture will present its own problem and will be treated by an expert just as the making of a musical score or the designing of a prologue.

Hattrick's Vigilance Saved Delay

R. V. Anderson, news sales manager of the International News Reel Corporation, has been flooded with letters and telegrams from exhibitors during the past week, voicing appreciation of International's speedy service in distributing news reel pictures of the Unknown Soldier ceremonies at Washington on Armistice Day.

It has come to light that the vigilance of E. B. Hatrick, general manager of the International News Reel Corporation, saved all news reel companies a delay of many hours in the trans-continental shipment of the Armistice Day news films. The Government mail plane was forced to land near Harrisburg, Pa., because of a heavy storm and obtained permission to have the news reels transferred from the mail plane to the Pennsylvania express train then nearing Harrisburg. His speed saved the day and the news films reached Chicago Sunday morning.

Joe Farnham to Write Buckeye Titles

A contract has just been entered into between the Buckeye Pictures Corporation, through their director, J. A. Fitzgerald, and Joe Farnham, who is to write the titles for the twenty-six single-reel Sunset Comedies, which are now being produced in Youngstown, Ohio, featuring Billy Gilbert. These films are being state-righted by J. Joseph Sameth, of the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., and the first six should be ready for screening towards the middle of December.

Arthur F. Beck to Film Leah Baird Series

Arrangements have been completed by Arthur F. Beck, president of the Leah Baird Productions, to produce a series of six features starring Miss Baird and to be released by Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

The first of the series, "Don't Doubt Your Wife," which was completed at the Thomas H. Ince Studios last week, is being rushed through the laboratories to meet an early release date which has been arranged by Arthur S. Kane, of Associated Exhibitors. The picture will be accorded a special exploitation and publicity campaign to be inaugurated the first of the year.

"Theodora" Scoring in Six Big Cities

"Theodora," Goldwyn's Italian spectacular film, is in its eighth capacity week at the Astor theatre, New York, where its run will be continued indefinitely. In Chicago it is running at the LaSalle theatre, in Pittsburgh at the Pitt theatre, in Cleveland at the Colonial theatre, in Detroit at the Michigan theatre and in the Shubert theatre in Boston.

Inn each case "Theodora" is showing at the $2 top scale and is doing bigger business than almost any theatrical atraction, the Goldwyn home office declares.

"Fightin' Mad" Scores Hit in New York

"FIGHTIN' MAD," the two-gun romance of the big outdoors which Metro releases for William Desmond Productions scored a hit with Broadway audiences at its premiere at the Rivoli where it is being shown this week. This picture, adapted from the original story of H. H. Van Loan, is a fast action film of love and adventure, and its popularity with the Rivoli audiences proved the appeal that pictures of this kind have for patrons restricted to city life.

William Desmond, as the hard-riding hero is supported by a notable cast which includes Virginia Browne Faire, Rosemary Theby, Doris Pawn, Joseph J. Dowling, William Lawrence, Emmett C. King and Jack Richardson. Joseph J. Franz directed "Fightin' Mad." It was produced under the personal supervision of Robert Brunton, and photographed by Harry A. Gersted.

McGowan Production is Offered by Playgoers

One of the biggest productions among the Playgoers Pictures features is "The Ruse of the Rattler," a Herald production starring J. P. McGowan, which will be released December 4th. Playgoers declare that it is comparable in story and in treatment with William H. Hart's Western features, and that it is one of the best outdoor offerings of the day. The most important female role is entrusted to Lillian Rich.

"The Ruse of the Rattler" was directed by J. P. McGowan. It is in five reels, and was taken from the original story by Anthony Coldewey.

3 First-Runs in Pittsburgh for Goldwyn

Goldwyn pictures are this week showing in first runs in three theatres in Pittsburgh. The Katharine Newlin Burt western melodrama, "The Man from Lost River," directed by Frank Lloyd, is having two simultaneous first run showings at the Blackstone, the regular Goldwyn first run house in that city, and at the Regent theatre of which Rowland Clark is manager.

Goldwyn's Italian spectacle, 'Theodora," is in its third week at the Pitt theatre where it is showing at the $2 top scale of prices.

Pioneer Announces Its Scheduled Releases

The scheduled releases of the Pioneer Film Corporation include "The Crimson Cross" with Vandyke Brooks, "Beyond the Crossroads" with Ora Carew, "The Leech" with Claire Whitney, "A Millionaire for a Day" with Guy Empey, and several other productions now nearing completion.

Perret's Latest Picture Coming Soon

According to a cabled announcement received at the American offices of Leonce Perret, 220 West 42nd Street, the French director, has practically completed his latest screen production, "L'Ecuyere," "The Horsewoman," an adaptation from the novel by Paul Bourget, with an international cast, and will have it ready for presentation here early in January.

Madame Perret, who is now in France with her husband, will personally bring the film over late this month.

Jackie Coogan Starts New Production

Jackie Coogan started his third big production this week. Space has been released in the Brunton studios. The title of the new Coogan production is "Nobody," and Jackie will appear in the same old clothes that he made famous in "The Kid." An excellent supporting cast is being selected, and on the list of players are the names of Wallace Berry, playing an important role opposite Jackie, Gloria Hope, who has just completed an important part in Frank Lloyd's production, "The Grim Comedian," and Eddie Gribbon. Others of equal note will be selected at once.

Like "My Boy," the third Coogan film is an original story and Jerome Storm has complete charge of direction.

Actress Changes Name to Avoid Confusion

"The Sheik" Continues to Break Records

THE breaking of records by George Melford's production, "The Sheik," goes on apace, according to information supplied by the Paramount home office. Among the telegrams received by S. R. Kent is one from George P. Endert, branch manager at Seattle, as follows:

"The following wire received from Spokane: "'The Sheik' a riot. For first time in history of Spokane it was absolutely necessary to call out police to handle crowds. Packed to capacity all day. Signed, R. A. Grombacher, Liberty Theatre." "'The Shiek' opened here at Strand to bigger business than opening day of 'Anatol,' despite pouring rain. Look for this picture to break all house records."

C. C. Wallace, branch manager at Washington, D. C., wired as follows: "'The Sheik' broke all previous box office records at Moore's Rialto Sunday under inclement weather conditions by over one thousand dollars. Monday's record also shattered by a thousand. Public unanimous in praise."

Cleans Up with "Sting of the Lash"

"The Sting of the Lash," an R-C Picture starring Pauline Frederick, made a clean-up for the Glenwood theatre, Brooklyn. Phillip Pfeiffer, Jr., treasurer of the theatre, in a letter to Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for R-C Pictures, writes:

"I wish to commend and congratulate R-C Pictures on the very excellent business Pauline Frederick in 'The Sting of the Lash' has done for me Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, November 13, 14 and 15.

"I stopped selling tickets each day of the showing and it will interest you to know that I played 'The Sting of the Lash' close to 3,000 admissions last Sunday, and the balance of the run was equally as good."

Wallace Reid to Be in New Auto Story

"Across the Continent" is to be Wallace Reid's next Paramount Picture, and Philip E. Rosen, who has just completed "The Champion," in which Mr. Reid stars, will again direct.

In this picture the star returns to his old love—the automobile, and in the transcontinental tale by Byron Morgan, written originally for the purpose and also adapted by the author, Reid will have plenty of fine chances to demonstrate his prowess at the steering wheel, it is stated. All kinds of thrills and unexpected twists and turns will be introduced and of course the love element will be strongly presented.

Record for Matinee Receipts Set on B'way by "The Lotus Eater"

DESPITE the hardship of inclement weather, motion picture fans stormed the Capitol theatre Sunday afternoon in such numbers to see "The Lotus Eater," a John Barrymore production directed personally by Marshall Neilan and released by Associated First National, that a new record for matinee receipts was established in the Broadway cinema palace, according to word from the First National home-office.

The matinee receipts were $6,315, which are said to be the largest by far in the history of the palace; and less inclement weather would have augmented that figure to a considerable degree.

The elements likewise are held accountable for the fact that the records for a single day's receipts did not fall before the onslaught of the house's patrons. However, Sunday's receipts were only $310 below the totals established by "Passion," another First National attraction, which is the holder of the record.

Sunday's total attendance was 17,547, with receipts of $11,473. "Passion" brought in $11,783, during one day of its prosperous run almost a year ago.

Although the weather was not propitious for record breaking, it had no effect on the thousands who could not resist the lure of a John Barrymore picture, directed by Neilan and titled by George Ade. This unprecedented combination of talent was responsible for the long queues of men, women and children who stood in front of the house all afternoon and late in the night, waiting patiently for their turn at the box office.

The general comments of approval current throughout the house, were echoed by the reviewers for New York newspapers the following day. They hailed it as a refreshing departure from the "usual run of pictures" and lauded Director Neilan's daring in ignoring the conventional standards in the production of this unusual story—the work of Albert Payson Terhune.

Censor's Ban Is Criticised

Women Writers See "One Arabian Night" at Cincinnati Screening

A STATEMENT from the First National home-office declares that the action of the Ohio board of censors in banning "One Arabian Night" from the screens of the state was criticized last week by more than a hundred members of the Newspaper Women's Association of Ohio, who were given a private showing of the picture through the courtesy of Roy H. Haines, manager of the First National exchange at Cincinnati.

The occasion was the annual convention of the organization. Following the showing, many of them expressed their appreciation of the picture and declared that they could not understand why it had been barred by the censors. They assured Mr. Haines that if the women writers could be of any assistance in their respective towns to get the picture passed, they would do all in their power to help.

The showing of "One Arabian Night" was effected through the efforts of Miss Myrtle Miles, photoplay editor of the Cincinnati Times-Star and member of the committee arranging the convention. During the discussion of the plans for entertaining the delegates, Mr. Haines offered to show them any picture in the exchange vaults and the committee chose "One Arabian Night," because it had been shown in no other city in the state, and therefore would be welcomed by the visiting newspaperwomen. The censor ban was placed on the picture following a week's showing in Cincinnati, and interest in the attraction was high.

The private screening took place Saturday afternoon, Nov. 12, immediately following the luncheon of the organization, and the picture was exhibited with appropriate music arranged for by the First National exchange.

Ray Short Features Ready

First Three Revivals Are Announced to State Right Buyers

THE first three of the two-reel features starring Charles Ray of the series which has been secured for release to the States Right market, are now ready for release according to an announcement this week from Joe Brandt.

These pictures which are known as "modernized versions" are being re-edited and furnished with special art titles and the first three are now announced as up-to-date and of present-date short feature calibre in every way.

The first release on the series is "African Love," which brings to exhibitors a colorful tale of the African desert, and in addition to the name of Charles Ray, who is starred, that of Louise Glaum, who plays opposite him. "African Love" is a modernized version of "The Renegade" and was directed by Charles Swickard.

It is Mr. Brandt's intention to add all the variety possible to the series and the second release will be of a type differing entirely from the first in that it is a story of a different kind. With this end in view he has chosen for the second release "Saved from the Depths," a modernized version of "Shoal Light," a tale of the sea—in which Ray is supported by the popular character actor, Joe J. Dowling, and Estelle Allen playing the ingenue lead. In this picture Ray plays a young sea captain. Scott Sidney directed this picture.

Third in order for release on the series is "After the Storm," which offers to exhibitors an opportunity to secure a two-reeler with Charles Ray.

Fox Releases "Last Trail"

Is Booked by Leading Theatres; Shows Spectacular Flood Scenes

FOLLOWING closely the story of the pioneer West in the film t adaptation of "The Last Trail," written by Zane Grey and produced as a super-special feature by Fox Film Corporation, the photoplay version of the novel was released November 27 and has already been booked for showings in leading theatres throughout the country.

Zane Grey's "The Last Trail" is the fifth of that author's widely read stories to be produced for the silver screen by Fox, and presents Murice Flynn, the newly named star and former Yale football captain, in the leading male role. The other four Zane Grey stories—"The Rainbow Trail," "Riders of the Purple Sage," "The Last of the Duanes," and "The Lone Star Ranger"—have featured William Farnum. It was because of Flynn's remarkable portrayal of the youthful and courageous engineer in "The Last Trail" that he was created a Fox star. Subsequently he appeared in his first real starring vehicle, "Bucking the Line," which critics have praised universally and which was released to the public some weeks in advance of the special's release.

The closeness with which the story of "The Last Trail" is followed is not strange, in view of the fact that all Zane Grey's stories contain sufficient stirring situations and strongly drawn characters to meet the most exacting demand of picture producers. And according to reviews voicing the opinions of prominent literary critics at the time of the book's publication, "The Last Trail" is a high note in the scale of Zane Grey's fiction efforts.

Numbered among the truly big scenes in this super-production is the flooding of a mountain valley. To create this startling incident, which constitutes the big climax of the Fox special, necessitated the erection of a town in a California valley and the construction of a formidable concrete dam high up in the hills. More than 500,000 gallons of water were pumped from a river below to the reservoir, to produce the flood, it is declared by Fox, and eleven days were consumed in the pumping.

M.P.T.O.'s Official Reel to Be Distributed by Hodkinson

THE "Official Urban Movie Chats" of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will be distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

This announcement was issued during the week from the headquarters of the Hodkinson organization, following a conference between Sydney Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, and W. W. Hodkinson, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

As has been briefly announced before, this weekly one-reel release will deal with miscellaneous subjects of general interest. It will, in a sense, partake somewhat of the character of a film magazine, in which there will be a freedom of editorial comment and discussion never heretofore attempted on the screen. An editorial board consisting of leading editors of the trade press will, in all probability, be strengthened by the early addition of leading educators, publicists and writers of international reputation, insuring a consistently interesting series of releases beginning January 15.

Negotiations leading to the production of these "Movie Chats" have been carried on for some weeks with Mr. Cohen by Harry J. Shepard, general manager of the Kineto Company of America, in behalf of his corporation, and their plans as ultimately developed call for one of the most notable series of short productions ever attempted.

"Our Mutual Friend" Opens

New York Press Is Enthusiastic in Its Greetings

CHARLES DICKENS', "Our Mutual Friend," heralded as "the perfect movie," was given its New York premiere by Wid Gunning at the Lyric theatre Monday evening.

A distinguished audience, made up of practically all the leading figures in the industry as well as city, state and federal officials and prominent people in the city's social and business life, witnessed the opening according to advices from the Gunning offices.

The marked pleasure of the first audiences was reflected in the enthusiasm with which the New York reviewers received the picture.

"It is Dickens transferred from the pages of the book intact to the screen," said Harriette Underhill of the Tribune. "How any actors, without the guidance of the author himself, managed to achieve such perfect portraits of the Dickens characters is more than we can understand. The characterizations were marvellous and the applause attested that they were duly appreciated. Any lover of Dickens need not be afraid to see the picture. We will guarantee satisfaction."

"The film is beautifully done and will give rare pleasure to the lovers of Dickens," said Helen Rockwell in the Telegraph. "The acting is perfection and every character distinctive. The spirited Belle is exquisitely portrayed by Catherine Reese, the daintiest, prettiest little actress we have been permitted to see of late. She is going to have no difficulty in becoming a real favorite in this country. All of the characters are the most realistic lot that have been transferred to celluloid. Each is an individual and each a rarity. To miss the film is doing one's self an injustice. If you glance from the screen for a moment you've missed something of supreme importance. Fine detail, picturesque settings and excellent photography mark the picture. It is all fresh and charming and superior in every way. The acting alone is well worth the price of admission. Many of the subtitles have been taken from the original and are singularly good."

The Evening Telegram said: "The many lovers of Dickens, and in fact anyone who likes a good story of a melodrama with just enough touch of humor to smooth away unpleasant details, should not miss the channce of seeing "Our Mutual Friend" which was presented by Wid Gunning last night at the Lyric theatre to a large and appreciative audience. It was a literary classic and an achievement seldom seen on the screen. It is a mystery story from the beginning to end which grows on one as the details are unfolded. In the picturization the story has lost none of its fascinating features. One would think, after seeing the screen version, that way back in 1860, when moving pictures were not dreamed of, Dickens had in mind the adaptation of his novel to the films, for it fits to the screen as well as, if not better than to the book. Until the very end of the story Mr. Gunning has succeeded in maintaining the mystery so well kept by the author."

The Evening Mail said: :"The Dickens atmosphere has been excellently brought to the silver sheet. The cast is uniformly excellent. In Catherine Reese, American audiences are introduced to an extremely piquant charming young woman who is a delight to the eye," while Peter Walton is an upstanding hero. But the honors of the film must be accorded to Bertram Cross in his delineation of the villainous old Silas Wegg, the one-legged literary man, with Charles Wilkins as Mr. Venus running him a close second. However, all the characters are extremely well-drawn."

"Handle with Care" to Go via Ass'd. Exhibs

Mr. Ray Rockett, president and general-manager of the Rockett Film Corporation of Los Angeles, who has been in New York for the past few days, left for the Coast on Thursday of this week. Before his departure, Mr. Rockett announced that he had completed negotiations for the distribution of his new five-reel comedy drama, "Handle With Care," with Associated Exhibitors, Inc. It is understood that Associated will release it early in the year. The cast includes Grace Darmond, Harry Myers, William Courtleigh, James Morrison, Landers Stevens, Harry Todd, Ruth Miller and Eugenie Ford.

It was directed by Phil Rosen, and reports from the Coast have indicated that "Handle With Care" is an unusually clever comedy-drama founded upon a satire of married life, written by Chas. Belmont Davis.

Selznick to Offer "Conceit"

Second Special to Follow "Man's Home" to Be Sent to Branches

WITH "A Man's Home" booming along to success, the second of the "Selznick Supreme Six" specials to be made during the 1921-22 season is soon to be sent out to the branches. The picture is "Conceit" from the Munsey Magazine story by Michael J. Phillips, and there is every reason to believe that the trade will accept it with enthusiasm equal to that shown for "A Man's Home."

"Conceit" has been made with the same careful attention which the production crew, under the direction of Vice-President Myron Selznick, gave to the earlier Anna Steese Richardson story. There has been no rush in its preparation. Weeks and months have been given to every detail and the final processes of editing, cutting and tilting have been attended to with a care which has given the finished picture the polish and perfection of a diamond of the first water.

With the Selznick field crew working on "A Man's Home," it is inevitable that the question will at once present itself as to just how the second special compares with the one already released—one which is proving its merit in new and more wonderful ways as each day passes. The comparison cannot be carried far for the reason that "A Man's Home" and "Conceit" are entirely different in their subject matter.

Like the "Man's Home" story the idea worked out in "Conceit" strikes very close home to all types of theatregoers. The story has to do with the embarrassments, difficulties, and tragedies in everyday life which are brought about by the "conceit" of a man who has little regard for the viewpoints of others. The chief sufferer is his wife who believes in him despite his many unkindnesses and hopes and prays for his regeneration which is finally brought about in a highly dramatic manner.

The "Conceit" cast includes William Davidson, Hedda Hopper, Maurice Costello, Betty Hilburn, Warren Cook, and Charles Gerard. These names support the statement that the cast will mean a great deal at box offices throughout the country. Mr. Davidson is perhaps best known for his work in support of Elaine Hammerstein in a number of her best pictures.

Bebe Daniels in New Role

Realart Star Plays Orphan Girl Heroine in "Nancy from Nowhere"

IT will be a new Bebe Daniels, announced Realart, who will appear in "Nancy from Nowhere," the latest starring vehicle of this star. In this picture Miss Daniels will appear sans beauty for a short time, the story calling for the role of a grimy heroine.

In the story of the little orphan girl, Bebe Daniels portrays a wistful, shy and pathetic bit of humanity and Realart announces that it is one of the best things which she has ever done, her work ranging from comedy, for which she is particularly noted, to dramatic heights, and all sympathetically and convincingly shown.

Grace Drey and Kathrene Pinkerton in collaboration wrote the story from which Douglas Doty evolved the scenario. Miss Drey was a former soprano of light opera fame and has a keen sense of dramatic value.

In "Nancy from Nowhere," which Realart confidently expects will be one of Miss Daniels' most notable successes, they have surrounded her with an unusually good cast. Supporting her as a leading man is Edward Sutherland.

"Nancy from Nowhere" was directed by Chester M. Franklin, who it will be remembered produced "You Never Can Tell," Miss Daniels' first starring picture. The camera work is that of George Folsey, his first Pacific Coast picture since leaving the former Realart studios on Long Island. Fred Strickley assisted Mr. Franklin.

"The Power Within" Is New Pathe Feature

A FEATURE picture called "The Power Within" and made by Producer-Achievement Films, Inc., has been announced by Pathe for release on December 18th. The picture is said to reveal qualities similar to those which gave "The Miracle Man" its remarkable hold on the emotions of screen patrons. It is explained, however, that the spiritual element which largely actuates the central figure in this photodrama and enables him to win a signal victory over his entirely selfish and subtle enemy, enhances, rather than diminishes, the force of a story of intensely human quality. The picture was produced by Producer-Achievement Films, Inc.

The story of "The Power Within" is by Robert Norwood. Harry C. Carr wrote the scenario, and the production was directed by Lem F. Kennedy. The principals in the cast are: William H. Tooker, Nellie Parker Spaulding, Pauline Garon, Robert Bentley, Robert Kenyon and Dorothy Allen.

Sol Lesser Returns to West Coast

Sol Lesser left New York City for his Los Angeles headquarters this week, after having spent the better part of a month in Manhattan. Mr. Lesser, in addition to having a strong hold on the Jackie Coogan productions and arranging the future distribution plans for the Coogan series, is vice-president of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., a chain of over fifty motion picture houses in Southern California. His associates are Abe and Mike Gore and Adolph Ramish, all three being on the Coast at the present time.

Mr. Lesser spent a good portion of his time in executive meetings of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., but found time enough to obtain many new and novel ideas for presentations in his string of houses in the West.

Many Advance Bookings on "Light in the Clearing"

Based on the favorable reviews accorded the T. Hayes Hunter Production, "The Light in the Clearing," projected last week at the invitation showing in Aeolian Hall, first-runs on this latest Hodkinson release have already been set in many of the key cities, according to an announcement this week from the W. W. Hodkinson offices.

The Princess theatre in Denver, Savoy theatre in Syracuse and Victory theatre in Providence have booked "The Light in the Clearing" by wire. Two of the large western circuits are negotiating for the productions, while arrangements are practically completed, it is declared, with one of the largest circuits in the cast.

"U" Serial in Record Demand

UNIVERSAL reports that its new "thrills-from-history" serial, "Winners of the West," has already been booked in more than 2,800 theatres. This record booking has taken place within thirty days from the release of the first episode. The serial, called a "continued feature" by Universal, is written around the Gold Rush days of '49 and the adventures of Capt. John C. Fremont.

Sales experts of the Universal organization predict that the first of the year will see the Art Acord serial booked in almost all serial-showing theatres, as well as in many houses which heretofore have not used chaptered photo-plays. The number of non-serial houses which already have booked "Winners of the West," is said to reach well into the hundreds.

Letters of commendation have been received by the hundred regarding the new style serial, the Universal home office reports. These not only come from editors, school principals and other educators, but from exhibitors who are crowding their houses with the serial. The following examples of exhibitor-approval are shown by Universal as evidence of the money-getting qualities of the "historical serial."

W. H. Weber, manager of the Echo theatre, in Great Bend, Kan., wrote:

"Just a few lines to let you know that the serial, 'Winners of the West,' is without a doubt the best serial that I have ever run. It is a serial that is far different to anything else that has ever been produced. It is one that pleases the old and the young alike, and I was agreeably surprised to see how our local schools got behind this serial. The photography is excellent, the story consistent. In fact, there is none of the impossible stuff.

"I am now on the fifth episode of this serial and am breaking all records. My only hope is that other serial producers will follow Universal's idea in giving us serials of this type. It is a sure remedy for a sick box office."

Mr. Joe Koehler, manager of the Tompkins Theatre Company of Colorado Spring, Col., wired to Universal for permission to show the opening episode of "Winners of the West" in two theatres instead of one, because his crowd was too large to get into one house. Here is what he wired:

"Owing to limited seating capacity, of our Liberty theatre, moved 'Winners of the West' for Saturday morning matinee to our Americ theatre. We may have done wrong but how in the devil would we have put eight hundred and nineteen kids and two hundred and eleven adults in the Liberty's four hundred and fifty seats. 'Winners of the West' is a winner."

Louis P. Kramer, Universal field man for "Winners of the West" in the Ohio territory, reports that he has yet failed to find a place where the newspapers, the women's clubs and the school authorities will not work with him in boosting the serial. He has obtained unprecedented co-operation in such towns as Akron, Galion, Wooster, Bucyrus, East Liverpool and Warren.

Prompted by the nation-wide response to a clean, censor-proof and historically educational serial, Universal now is about to start production on a new "thrills-from-history" chapter-play.

Due to the fact that 1921 is the fifty-year anniversary of Henry M. Stanley's famous expedition into the heart of Africa, in search for Dr. Livingstone, the new serial will be written around that expedition. Its title will be "With Stanley in Africa." A cast now is being selected, and Universal's corps of experts are busy gathering accurate data on the Stanley expedition, so that it may be reproduced accurately as to costumes, customs, and incidents. Much of this material is being obtained directly from London where access is being had into the archives of the famous explorer, Livingstone. It is expected that George Walsh will play a leading role in this new serial.

That Is Name Given "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford"

OFFICIALS of Cosmopolitan Productions and Famous Players-Lasky Corporation view the volume of bookings of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" as indicating that the exhibitors of the United States are recognizing this comedy drama as "the great American picture." Cosmopolitan Productions feels that "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" is something more than a fine photoplay: "It is an expression of American art and American manners, wit and ingenuity that will ineradicably inscribe itself in the annals of native achievements," is the sentiment of Cosmopolitan.

Hugo Riesenfeld was one of the first of those identified with the screen to recognize this glowing American quality in the production. This, according to Cosmopolitan, induced him to book it for two weeks in two of his theatres simultaneously—the Rialto and Rivoli, in which houses it will be presented Sunday, December 4th. This Broadway booking is considered by the producer and distributor as fine a tribute to the picture as could be accorded it.

The claim is made for "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" that it is essentially and typically American, that it portrays types found only within the confines of the forty-eight states, and that its plot is so bound up wih the national temperament that it is impossible to conceive of the story taking place elsewhere than in an American small town.

Battlesburg, the town in which "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" has its setting, is a typical American town. It is the scene of frenzied finance of the most modern variety. Its people "fall" for J. Rufus Wallingford's grandiose schemes to make them all fabulously wealthy. In this they reveal the national character.

Wallingford himself is the breezy, inimitable and irresistible promoter known to everyone. He, too, is unmistakably American. His schemes flourish beyond his wildest dreams, and here again we have a situation that is of our own soil and traditions. Finally, the promoter's rise from his shady status to the position of the leading citizen of the town that he has transformed into a metropolis is a metamorphosis seen time and again in our cities and towns. Wallingford's birth and breeding cut no figure with Battlesburg. His vision, energy and business acumen have won wealth for him and Battlesburg citizens, and that is enough to establish him as their greatest man.

"Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" has, besides, much to commend itself to the exhibitor. First of all, J. Rufus Wallingford is a familiar and well-beloved character. Again, it is a Cosmopolitan Production, directed by Frank Borzage, who directed "Humoresque." Another point is the extensive advertising and publicity campaign conducted by Cosmopolitan Productions to pave the way for the profitable presentation of the production.

Screen Fans Vote Lloyd Favorite Comedian

Any who doubt the standing of Harold Lloyd as a popular screen comedian of this country, are referred to the contest staged by Motion Picture Magazine, with its circulation of 350,000 fans, in which Lloyd has made a runaway race for the honors of "leading comedian." Lloyd also was selected for a place on the "ideal cast."

Metro Week Proves Success

7300 Houses Take Part in Drive; Substantial Increase Over 1920

SEVENTY-THREE hundred motion picture theatres in the United States and Canada took advantage of the second annual Metro Week to increase their profits, figures compiled by Metro Pictures Corporation reveal. This is a substantial increase over the number of houses which last year exhibited, for a period of seven days only, only Metro productions and releases. This year's Metro Week extended from November 20 to 27.

Metro regards the surpassing of last year's record as of particular moment in the fact of the diminution of business in the motion picture industry during the last several months. A considerable number of theatres have closed, and still more have reduced their schedules, some from two features to one; and others have retrenched in equally radical manner. The astonishing success of the second Metro Week is construed by the Metro officials to be proof of the reliable attraction of Metro pictures.

William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro, declared:

"The exhibitor has come to know that when he picks up a Metro contract he picks up in business. Given opportunity to lay the foundations of the season's success, it is not unexpected that he seize the opportunity of getting financial momentum by turning on the power of Metro plays for a solid week."

The subscription to Metro Week was not localized. New York was as receptive a subject as the smallest village in the country. The feature attraction during the week at the Rivoli Theatre, Forty-ninth Street and Broadway, was "Fightin' Mad," whose booking date had been set ahead from December 5.

The Rex Ingram productions, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "The Conquering Power;" special productions starring Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, and Alice Lake; and the new series of S-L (Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin) Pictures starring Gareth Hughes were quickly picked out of the movie corral and set to work proving their pulling power.

Hodkinson Producers Busy

Several Productions Near Completion; Ballin Starts Feature

DIRECTOR EDWIN L. HOLLYWOOD will finish shooting a number of New York exteriors this week for Irene Castle's forthcoming Hodkinson release, "The Rise of Roscoe Paine," and next week will take Miss Castle and the principals in the cast down to Cape Cod for a few exteriors of cranberry bogs and Cape Cod coastline. The following week the company will return to the Estee Studios to resume work on interiors.

"The Young Painter," third in the series of Triart Great Master productions, another Hodkinson release, will be completed next week at the Jackson studios in the Bronx, New York. The production is being made under the direction of Dramatic Director Herbert Blache and Art Director Lejaren a Hiller. Mary Astor, Pierre Gendron and Walter Petri are the featured players.

Work on "The Luxury Tax," the forthcoming Hugo Ballin Production, was started last week at the Jackson studios in the Bronx, New York, but Director Ballin took advantage of the clear weather in the later half of the week and moved out to Long Island for several exteriors. The entire action of the story takes place in and around New York. Mabel Ballin, wife of the producer, has the leading role.

"Cameron of the Royal Mounted," a story of the Canadian Northwest, which Ernest Shipman will present through Hodkinson, is being cut and titled and will be ready for release in December.

Goldwyn's Coming Releases

"The Sin Flood" and "Doubling for Romeo" on List Due Early in 1922

GOLDWYN'S third group of fifth-year-pictures, to be released early in the new year, will be of extraordinary interest, according to an advance statement of Goldwyn concerning its first pictures for 1922. Just which pictures, and how many, will be included in this group has not been decided upon, but it is more than likely that "The Sin Flood" and "Doubling for Romeo," with Will Rogers in the stellar role, will be the outstanding productions.

Other Goldwyn pictures, now completed or in the editing and titling stages, from which the rest of the third group pictures will be selected include:

Rupert Hughes' new picture, "The Wall Flower," with Colleen Moore, Richard Dix, Gertrude Astor, Tom Gallery and many others.

"Grand Larceny," by Albert Peyson Terhune, directed by Wallace Worsley, with a cast including Elliott Dexter, Claire Windsor, Roy Atwell, Tom Gallery.

"The Glorious Fool," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, directed by E. Mason Hopper, with Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix featured.

"His Back Against the Wall," by John Frederick, with Raymond Hatton in the leading role. Rowland V. Lee directed it. In the cast are Virginia Valli, Shannon Day, Will Walling, Virginia Madison and others.

"The City Feller," by Julien Josephson, directed by William Beaudine, with Cullen Landis and Patsy Ruth Miller in the leading roles.

"What Ho! The Cook!" Gouverneur Morris' Chinese fantasy, with Jack Abbe and Winter Blossom in the leads, directed by Rowland V. Lee.

"Yellow Men and Gold," by Gouverneur Morris, directed by Irvin Willat, with Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix featured.

"Sent for Out," Rupert Hughes new Irish picture, directed by Alfred Green, with Colleen Moore and Ralph Graves in the leads.

"The Blind Bargain," formerly called "The Octave of Claudius," by Barry Pain, directed by Wallace Worsley, with Lon Chaney and Jacqueline Logan in the principal roles.

"Hungry Hearts," from Anzia Yezierska's stories, directed by E. Mason Hopper, with Bryant Washburn and Helen Ferguson.

"Remembrance," the new Rupert Hughes picture, which the author is directing, and in which Claude Gillingwater, Kate Lester, Patsy Ruth Miller and Cullen Landis play the chief roles.

Will Payne Added to Realart Authors

ONE of the latest additions to Supervising Director Elmer Harris' growing staff of authors who have identified themselves with Realart is Will Payne, novelist and short story writer.

Not only has Mr. Payne written many novels which have reached a large circulation, but his short stories have been looked for by the magazine reading public. Realart will soon have an announcement to make regarding his first original story for one of their stars which he has already started, in co-operation with Fred Myton who has been assigned to write the scenario."

First National Submits Reports on Issues of Past Months

THAT the pessimistic predictions, current a few months ago, of impending business paralysis are being proved empty imaginings of calamity howlers is the contention of First National. In a statement issued during the week from the First National home-office, the records of some of the First National attractions, released during the past several months, are recited to demonstrate that business has been generally prosperous wherever "good pictures" have been showing. "The mediocre picture is the backbone of the pessimists' argument," declares the First National statement, which follows in part:

"'The Kid,' Chaplin's sensational six-reeler production, was shown on November 5 at the Gem theatre, Olean, N. Y., for a return engagement, and shattered both the box office and attendance records. 'Shoulder Arms,' one of his older pictures, broke the attendance records to pieces during a third run at the Scenic, of Sioux City, Ia., whose manager, Morris Smith, wrote: 'Chaplin is an A-1 favorite with my patrons.'

"'The Idle Class' was shown October 20-22 at Thielen's Majestic, Bloomington, Ill., and turned the same trick. Manager A. G. Schade eliminated his usual three-act vaudeville bill to star the two-reel comedy. The picture was likewise shown for seven days at the Mary Anderson theatre in Louisville, Ky., resulting in the biggest week of the season for this house. And there was such a demand for it in Scottsbluff, Neb., that W. H. Ostenberg, Jr., manager of the Orpheum, inaugurated a 10 A. M. matinee to accommodate the night shifts of the sugar factory in the town, and was rewarded with a packed house.

"The Kid" pulled big; broke recent box office and attendance records, reported Albert Deutsch, manager of the Standard at Lorain, O. Fine box office receipts characterizes its showing at the National, in Cincinnati, O., Nov. 10 and 11 according to Mrs. Emma Shakespeare, the manager. 'A Day's Pleasure' elicited good attendance; good box office receipts from Manager William Eppstein of the Strand, Laredo, Tex.

"Constance Talmadge's 'Woman's Place,' during October broke attendance records in two theatres, the Luna, at Lafayette, Ind., and Forrest's in Boonville, Ind.

"'Bits of Life,' a Marshall Neilan production, broke the records of the New Alhambra, Canton, O., Nov. 6 to 9; and brought good box office receipts to the Strand, Cincinnati, O.

"The Rialto, of Glens Falls, N. Y. is cherishing some new house records, due to the showing there of 'Scrap Iron,' Charles Ray's epic of the prize ring. This picture likewise set up new records in the Crescent, Pontiac, Ill., Nov. 3 to 5. Anent it W. K. Richards, manager of the New Royal, Findlay, O., remarks 'Business was big.'

"'The Child Thou Gavest Me' is another picture which is meeting with instantaneous success in all parts of the country. Attendance records equaled; box office receipts splendid, epitomizes the results of its showing at the National, Cincinnati, O., while W. L. Newberry, manager of the Alhambra theatre in Los Angeles writes; 'It went over with a bang. Business mounted steadily. A very pleasing picture. Give us some more such pictures and we won't kick.' And the verdict of the Boulevard theatre, also in Cincinnati, was: 'Box office receipts better than usual normal; stood them up in line every night.'

"Good attendance at all shows summarizes the showing of 'Playthings of Destiny' at the Grand, Jonesboro, Ark., and 'good box office receipts' at the Orpheum, Cincinnati, O.

"The gist of reports on other First National attractions follows:

"'Salvation Nell,' Crescent theatre, Pontiac, Ill., 'excellent box office receipts; S. R. O. on second night;' Thielen's Majestic, Bloomington, Ill., 'excellent box office receipts.'

"'The Cup of Life,' Jewel, Fremont, O., 'set new marks for the prevailing period of depression, both as to attendance and box office receipts;' Boulevard, Cincinnati, O., 'fine box office receipts.'

"'One Arabian Night,' Walnut, Cincinnati, O., 'exceptional business, considering business conditions;' Strand, Milwaukee, Wis., 'better than average business.'

"'Two Minutes to Go,' Princess, Sioux City, Ia., 'very nearly broke attendance and box office records; played to capacity from 3 o'clock opening to late close.'

"'The Girl in the Taxi,' Empress, Owensboro, Ky., 'did splendid business.'

"'The Oath,' Empress, Owensboro, Ky., 'good business.'

"'Nomads of the North,' Majestic, Streator, Ill., 'excellent receipts.'"

"Bought and will bring back film nsation of Europe."

The purchase, it is understood, as made in Paris

"What Do Men Want?" Moves to B'way

"WHAT DO MEN WANT?" The Lois Weber picture which Wid Gunning, Inc., has been presenting at the Lyric theatre in New York, was moved to the Broadway theatre on Monday because of the opening of the Gunning release. "Our Mutual Friend," at the Lyric.

"What Do Men Want?" will play the Broadway for a week and will be shown in all the other Keith houses in Greater New York during the next few weeks. The success of the Lyric showing was reflected in the crowds which turned out for the showing at popular prices at the Broadway.

How an Eleven-hundred Seat House Was Renovated at Small Cost

$3,200 Was All It Cost This Manager to Redecorate His Theatre

By Noble Hearne

We are never so perfect that we cannot sometime learn something. That fact was never more emphatically impressed upon me as when I undertook to thoroughly renovate the Frolic theatre, San Francisco. In fact, I must confess that I rather surprised myself in discovering what could be accomplished with a sum less than one-third of the cost I at first thought would be the very lowest necessary to put the house in good condition.

Four months ago I assumed charge of the Frolic, with the view of putting the house in condition, as at that time it was essential that a number of repairs be made. This experience of mine, I am sure, will be interesting to other exhibitors, particularly those who are compelled to watch their expenditures closely.

I was asked by the owners of the theatre to make an approximate estimate on the cost of cleaning up the house and making only the most needed improvements. I went into the matter, as I then thought, very thoroughly and placed the lowest possible figure upon each item. The best I could do was $10,000, and I presented this estimate. The proposition was promptly turned down and I was advised that the owners did not care to make such an outlay, for the time being at least. I was advised to eliminate a number of items and send in another estimate.

Then I asked for $3,000, which was granted. This sum seemed extremely meager for the amount of work absolutely necessary to whip a house seating 1,100 people into proper shape. It must be admitted that this work I had cut out for myself seemed Herculean when it is considered that the theatre was badly in need of new carpets, drapes, repainting, new electric fixtures, an ornamental fountain, new uniforms for ushers and other attendants and hundreds of other small items too numerous to mention.

To cut a long story short, I was able to practically entirely renovate the theatre for an actual cost of $3,200. I accomplished this by eliminating all former bids I had received and, to use a common phrase, "shopped" around until I secured the articles I needed at prices within the range of my "purse." It was trying and hard work, but I feel now that the end justified the means.

Exhibitors, Attention!

When Noble Hearne took charge of the Frolic theatre, San Francisco, he was asked by the owners to make an estimate of what it would cost to put the house in condition. His figure was $10,000. The proposition was turned down, and Mr. Hearne set to work to cut down the cost. In this article which he prepared at the request of this department, he tells just what each item cost him in his renovating the Frolic. All the designing, from the lighting in front of the house to the costumes of the ushers, was done by Mr. Hearne. His experience will be a great help to any manager who has a similiar problem confronting him—Tech. Ed.

View I—Exterior of the newly renovated Frolic theatre, San Francisco. The fountain is of green and red lights, giving the effect of water running over the bowl. The design of the lighting decoration was by Noble Hearne. The blue sign lamp is new and is a main part of the scheme

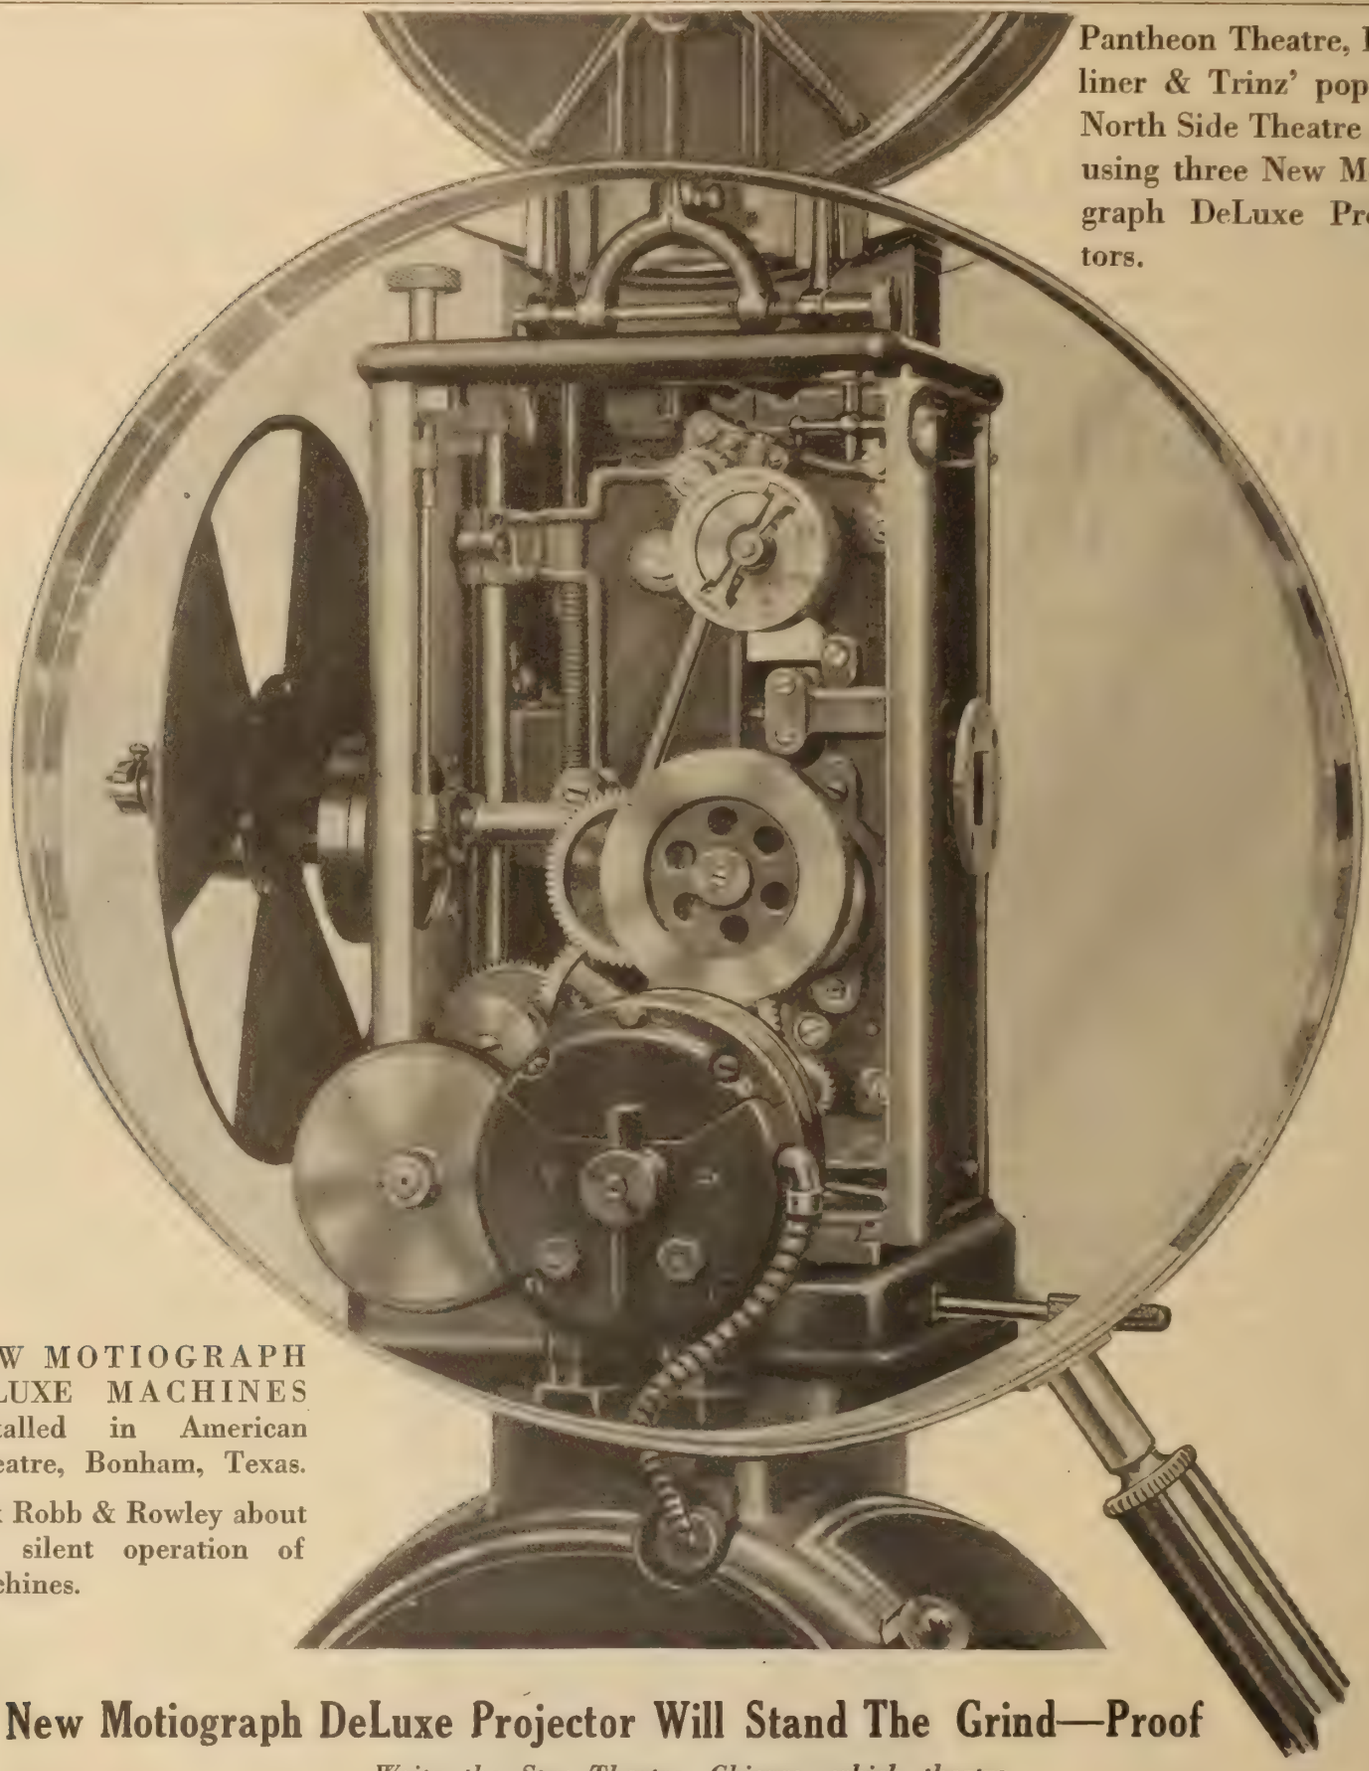
My first interest was for carpets and drapes. I realized that these two items would cost more than anything on my list and I wanted to get them out of the way before taking up all the other necessities.

Accordingly I visited the large stores as well as the small ones. Finally I sold a small concern, in the office equipment business, the idea of branching out into the theatre-furnishing business. I pointed out to this firm the fact that they could not secure a better "show window" for their business than the theatre. My argument was that their first effort should be made in a theatre prominently situated as the Frolic and that the house would look so much better than it has for years, their contribution to the general effect would be bound to sell goods for them. The idea went over in great shape.

For the drapes I used plain heavy monks cloth with a six-inch black fringe at the bottom.

I paneled the inside foyer behind the rear row of seats and allowed plenty of fold which set the panel off much better than would have been the case had the drapes been used sparingly.

The work accomplished can be more intelligently understood by describing the costs of the various sections of the house from the photographs. The illustrations show some of the sections of the house before the work of renovating had been completed.



The Main Auditorium: (See View II.) This auditorium is in stone effect, secured by using heavy plaster squared off in stone effect and tinted. Cost: $210.

Drapes on stage: Ordinary scenic cloth, worked with gold paint. Cost: $62.

Flowers in boxes are artificial, with small white lights concealed in handles: Cost of two: $15.

Note parchment screen about walls. Cost: $2.50 each or total $10.

New Theatre for Rochester

Interests representing Harold P. Dygert, of East Rochester, have purchased a building on East Main street, Rochester, N. Y., and will enlarge the edifice into a motion picture theatre. The auditorium of the house will be reached by means of a glass arcade twelve feet in width extending through the center of the building for a distance of sixty feet, entering into the theatre lobby. Stores on either side of the arcade will have entrances opening directly to it. The house will have a width of forty feet and will be one hundred and thirty feet deep. It will contain all modern equipment.

Balcony Landing: (See View VI.) Note plain fixture and stone effect.

Another view of Inside Foyer, looking toward balcony stairs: (See View VII.) The drapes shown are the style used throughout the theatre. A splendid idea can be gained of the high grade of Wilton velvet carpet of gray color. This carpet was the most expensive item and was used throughout the theatre. Cost of carpet: $950.

Inside Foyer: (See View IX.) I wish to call attention to the simple but effective drapes of ordinary monks cloth, with heavy black braiding, used on the long panels. The ceiling is of striped plaster with gold tints. All woodwork around mirrors painted in imitation of walnut. Cost: $450. Note stone effect carried out by painting. Cost of painting: $150.

Outside Foyer or Court: (See View XI.) The fountain is of cement, but has marble effect. Cost installed: $75. Artificial flowers on wall are imitation climbing roses. Cost: $60. Ferns about fountain are natural. The two benches shown were made to order. There are two electric fixtures, one of which is shown; both are of heavy brass casting and very attractive. They were purchased from a second hand dealer. Cost: $80. Note the Wilton carpet, the cost of which was included above. The walls of plaster in stone effect. Cost: $125.

The Power's equipped projection room of the California

California Theatre, Los Angeles, Possesses a Model Projecting Room

The California theatre, located at Main and Eighth street, Los Angeles, is a house that boasts of its projection equipment. The projection room, which is in charge of Chief Projectionist Frank Hardhill, is located on the main floor of the theatre. It measures nine by eighteen feet and has a twelve-foot ceiling. It is constructed of tile and plaster with a crete floor.

The equipment consists of two Powers' six projectors, a Powers' double stereopticon, two Crescent spot lamps, Enterprise arc controls, Moon magnetic speed indicators, Weaver auto-dowsers, and a Hooker enclosed rewind with automatic cut-out switch.

The booth is kept cool at all times by fresh air intakes in the floor and hot air exhausts in the ceiling. The projection is connected with all parts of the house by the Western Electric system of intercommunicating phones. A signal system is used to connect with the stage and orchestra pit, low voltage lamps being used to eliminate all buzzers.

A picture fourteen feet six inches by nineteen feet six inches is projected on an Argus crystal bead screen through Snaplite lenses. All resistance is kept in a small room built in one corner of the projection room. This room has its own system of ventilation. On one side of this room is built the panel switchboard, installed so that the back of the board is accessible.

Canadian Chain Opens Another House

Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen of Toronto, operating one of the greatest chains of moving picture theatres in the world, extended their interests recently by the opening of the new Allen's Palace theatre, Calgary, Alberta, a city in which they had made their real start as substantial theatre magnates more than 12 years ago, with the building of picture houses in the Canadian West until the opening of the Calgary Allen theatre in 1913. Their Western activities had been preceded by the operation of a number of store shows in Ontario, starting with the "Theatorium" in Brantford in 1906.

The Allens have virtually returned to Calgary for the construction of the Palace theatre after placing new and beautiful moving picture theatres in 21 different cities, the chain comprising upwards of 50 houses at present. The new Palace seats 1,968 people on two floors and occupies a site measuring 100 by 130 feet. The contractor was Mr. A. McDonald, who had already built six large theatres in Canada for important theatre interests. The architect was Howard Crane of Detroit who, too, has designed many houses.

The manager of the Palace is Joe Price who, for three years was manager of the Calgary Allen theatre and who was a newspaperman and athlete in Calgary and Edmonton previously. The assistant manager is Major Ed. Malhiot, former newspaperman and soldier with lengthy record of service. Before the war, Malhiot was the manager of the Hippodrome of Edmonton, Alta. The musical director of the Palace is Herbert G. Copley who had been in charge of music at the Allen, Calgary, for seven years. Messrs. A. C. Foster and Phil Barbour, holders of first class Provincial licenses, are the projection machine operators of the fine new theatre.

The Palace, which is equipped with a Hillgren & Lane pipe organ, was formally opened by the presentation of "Dangerous Curve Ahead" and the comedy, "She Sighed by the Sea Side," by Mack Sennett. Orchestral features included the playing of the Overture from "William Tell" with a screen depiction of the storm and special electrical effects, and a musical prelude to the film attraction. The house was formally dedicated by local civic officials and the management was showered with messages of good will.

The latest of the Allen houses was practically made in Canada, much of the material and equipment as well as practically all labor going into the structure being Canadian. The structural steel was made in Winnipeg by the Dominion Bridge Company; the Sirocco fans were supplied by the Canadian Sirocco Company, Limited, Calgary and Windsor, Ontario; the reinforcing steel and lath were provided by the Trussed Concrete Steel Company, Calgary, and the 1,350 barrels of cement were supplied by the Canada Cement Company, Limited, Montreal.

Other maetrials and fittings were supplied or installed as follows: Marble and tile, by Flesher Tile and Marble Co., Calgary; ventilators installed by S. S. Clarke of Calgary; grand piano by Heintzman & Company, Calgary; furniture, carpets, drapes, paintings, etc., provided and installed by the Hudson's Bay Company; interior decoration by T. Jagmin of Detroit; plumbing by F. H. Lepper & Company, Calgary; ornamental and plain plastering by J. Davidson, Calgary; fireproof doors, metal ducts and entrance marquee built by Western Steel Products, Limited, Calgary; ornamental iron work and fire escapes were constructed by the Union Iron & Foundry, Limited, Calgary; interior woodwork was done by Cushing Bros., Calgary; small hardware was supplied by Marshall-Bevers, Limited, Calgary; the lumber was provided by the Revelstoke Sawmill Company, Limited, Revelstoke, British Columbia; artificial flower decorating was done by the Floral Decorations Company, Calgary, while the plaster material was shipped form Manitoba by the Manitoba Gypsum Company, Limited, Winnipeg.—Gladish.

Kansas Changes

The following new houses, proposed new houses and changes in management have been announced in the Kansas City territory recently:

Home theatre, Hutchinson, Kas., purchased by Fred Savage; Crystal theatre, Ottawa, Kas., owned by W. Millington, is being enlarged and extensively improved; New Star theatre, Wichita, Kas., now under management of J. H. Cooper, being enlarged and will be re-named the New Kansas; new theatre, Bentonville, Ark., being constructed by Hammond Bros.; Royal theatre, Bentonville, Ark., is being constructed by M. J. Kilbourn; Grand theatre, Greenfield, Mo., sold by Mrs. H. Howard to C. B. Hudson; new theatre, Osawatomie, Kas., being constructed by H. Carson; new theatre, Siloam Springs, Ark., being constructed by E. C. Robertson.—True.

How an 1,100 Seat House was Renovated

I designed Spanish costumes for the girl ushers. These were of black velvet with black satin sashes and red bandannas. These costumes stand out in striking contrast to the general treatment of the theatre, and add color to the decorative scheme. The cost of the costumes was but twenty dollars each.

The itemized costs I have presented here cover within $650 of my entire expenditure. The balance of the money was spent in arranging the lobby and box office, all of which is most effective. The ceiling of the lobby is of the stone effect and carries out the effect of the decorative scheme. The ceiling is arched and studded with electric lights, giving a brilliant and even lighting effect.

The general effect of the lobby is changed with each picture and its scenic effect is suggestive of the theme of the feature.

The above is not, of course, included in the cost of the remodeling or renovating the theatre. The balance of the money not itemized was used for various items, such as touching up various parts of the house, installing a number of canary birds and cages and the hundred and one things always found necessary in completing a house of amusement.

I am mighty pleased with the results I have secured for the money I have spent and I truly hope my experience will assist some other manager who is confronting a problem such as I was compelled to tackle.

Loew Opens Buffalo House

The new Loew State theatre at Buffalo opened recently. Al Beckerich, former manager of the Olympic theatre on Lafayette Square, and now manager at the Cataract theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., was at the head of the State. The house, which has a seating capacity of three thousand, is one of the most elaborate in the Loew chain. Marcus Loew presided at the opening ceremonies. He brought a carload of stage and screen celebrities with him. Mayor Buck turned the key of the city over to Mr. Loew and a parade, in which local clubs participated was held. Terry Turner, of the Loew publicity forces, is in Buffalo, arranged the opening ceremonies.

The new State has entrances on both Main and Mohawk streets and has an elaborate electric display over each marque. Every modern bit of equipment has been installed. The interior was dazzling in its brilliance. The dome was in the form of a sunburst of lights, over 1,800 bulbs being used in this one feature of the decorative scheme.

The balancy is mammoth in size and the stage is also unusually large. The policy of the house will be week run pictures and vaudeville.—Taylor.

Many New England Houses Have Installed Mazda Projection

Mazda projection!

The mere statement "Mazda Projection" causes many exhibitors to throw up their hands. They condemn on hearsay. Probably they are justified, judging from the early experiments of three to five years back.

How many theatres are now using Mazda projection? Probably you will estimate about 300 and believe that you are stretching it at that, yet there are over 1400 General Electric Mazda Adapter Units in use today. In New England alone, there are more than 400 installations. Yes, and some of them over two years old. Many others are one year old.

I visited twenty-five such houses picked at random with R. L. Hosmer, Mgr., Eastern Theatre Equipment Co., Boston, Mass., and the managers and operators in every case said they were satisfied.

For several months past the News has been receiving inquiries regarding Mazda projection. To be frank most of the letters on Mazda were written with the assumption that it was a failure and had been dropped.

At the present writing there have been installed in New England over 400 G-E Mazda projection outfits. They are seemingly an unqualified success.

The Mazda lamp house we are acquainted with. The secret of the success of this new Mazda projection on the part of the General Electric Company is their new adapter, wonderful control apparatus, their condenser lens and lamp setter. Without these Mazda projection is not a bit better off than it was three years ago.

Wonderful things have been accomplished in this direction. The control end has been developed to a point that appears to be perfect. The outfits have been working under nearly every conceivable condition. But all depends on this new adapter, the control apparatus, the condenser lens and lamp setter.

Many will agree with me that Mazda projection works fine in some places, say where you have a short throw and a small angle and only under these conditions. I witnessed beautiful Mazda projection where the throw was 146 feet and the angle was 26 degrees.

Last month, with Mr. Hosmer, I spent two afternoons and evenings visiting theatres in Massachusetts that were equipped with G-E Mazda adapters. I am going to tell you as near as I can remember exactly what I saw and give the name of the theatre and the town.

In Lynn, Mass., I stopped at the Comique, a 750 seat house. They were using the standard 900 watt Mazda outfit with the G-E Mazda adapter and control apparatus. The screen was a 12 foot Mazda-lite screen. The throw was 60 feet and the angle 5 degrees. The picture was excellent. When we glanced at the ammeter it read 29. The projectionist was not even using 30 amperes, he not finding it necessary.

The Dreamland theatre in Lynn was the next stop. This was also a 750 seat house. The picture was fine. The manager was loud in his praise of his equipment. Visiting the projection booth I found they were only using a 600 watt Mazda lamp with the new Mazda adapter and control apparatus. The ammeter registered 20 amperes. The screen was a 12 foot 5 inch Gold Fibre. The throw was 53 feet and the angle 8 degrees.

We motored from Lynn to Malden, Mass., there visiting the Orpheum theatre. The picture was surprisingly good and it was projected on a plain white cloth. He had a 12 foot picture; 65 foot throw with a 12 degree angle. The manager of this house said he had been boasting to all his exhibitor friends that he got a better picture using only thirty amperes than some of them obtained using 75 to a hundred amperes.

The Medford theatre in Medford was our next stop. Here the Mazda adapter and control apparatus was responsible for a most excellent picture projected upon a white cloth at 110 feet and also upon a Crystal Bead screen at 117 feet. This was a combination vaudeville and movie house and the white cloth screen was dropped from the flies whereas the Crystal Bead screen was mounted upon the rear wall of the house. The angle was 13 degrees and the size was 15 feet. The Medford seats 1200.

In Cambridge, Mass., I visited the Harvard, a 1000 seat house. They projected with Mazda equipment a 14 foot picture, 90 feet to a plaster wall. Even with this poor screen surface they were obtaining a surprisingly clear picture from their Mazda equipment.

A picture 16 feet 3 inches with a throw of 115 feet was witnessed in the Allston theatre, Allston, Mass. This is a 1200 seat house. The angle was 13 degrees and a Gold Fibre screen was in use. The picture here was excellent. The manager and operator were very loud in their praise of the results accomplished and reported that there was considerable saving since they had used the new G-E Mazda adapter and control apparatus.

In Boston I witnessed the projection of some Prizma color films at the Park theatre, a first run house. These pictures projected on a Gold Fibre screen 14 feet by 6 inches with an 86 foot throw and a 23 degree angle, left nothing to be desired. There was a soft pleasing effect to the picture. Every detail was clearly defined and in the front seats one could enjoy the presentation without the eye strain that so often results from close proximity to the screen.

The Modern theatre, another first run house in the same city, gave me an opportunity to test the picture both from a position close to the screen and from the back of the balcony, 123 feet away from the picture. In either position the movie fan could enjoy the picture, obtaining all the details without any strain whatsoever upon the eyes. The picture was 13 feet 6 inches and was projected 98 feet to a Gold Fibre screen. The angle of projection was 22 degrees.

The Criterion at Roxbury, Mass., demonstrated how bright it was possible to keep a theatre using Mazda projection. In this house it was possible to read a program during the presentation of a picture. The walls were decorated with a deep red which with the many lights that were burning gave a tinted effect to the general lighting scheme. They were projecting a picture 93 feet to a 13 feet 6 inch Mazdalite screen. The manager was greatly pleased with the wonderful results he was obtaining since installing the new G-E Mazda adapter.

I again witnessed excellent results with Mazda projection on a plaster wall in the Magnet theatre at Dorchester, Mass., where they had a throw of 96 feet and an angle of 6 degrees.

The Codman Square theatre in Dorchester was the best example of what is possible to accomplish with G-E Mazda adapters. This is a 2200 seat house. They were presenting "The Old Nest" at the time I visited the theatre. The projection booth is located in the top and back of the balcony, 146 feet from the screen. The angle of projection is 26 degrees and the picture 17 feet 7 inches in width. I do not believe that if another exhibitor witnessed the projection he would note that Mazda was being used. The picture was all that was to be desired, the detail being clear and distinct from all parts of the house. The screen in this case happened to b a Gold Fibre. In talking to Mr. J. Francke, mar

Judging from what I saw in Massachusett with Mr. Hosmer and from what I have hear from other theatres in other parts of the coun try and in the vicinity of New York, I predic that G-E Mazda adapters will take a prominer place among projection apparatus.

Complete Rialto, Hood River, Ore.

The Rialto, a theatre building erected at a cost of $25,000 by George W. Thompson and M. E. McCarty, pioneer merchants, will soon be ready in Hood River Ore., for occupancy. The structure wil be occupied by A. S. Kolstad who has been in the Hood River theatre business for a number of years and who will continue operation of his Liberty Theatre. Furniture and equipment of the house, it is stated, will cost approximately $15,000. While the new theatre will be equipped primarily for motion picture shows, its capacious stage will enable it to present traveling road shows.—Allen.

The announcement of the opening of the new branch of the Independent Movie Supply Company, Inc., at 42 Orange street, Albany, N. Y., is made by W. H. Rabell, president of the company. The branch will be under the management of George J. Hallett.

Dixie Theatres Keep Lucas Busy

Many orders for the installation of complete equipments have been placed within the past few weeks with the Lucas Theatre Supply Company of Atlanta, Ga., the distributor of Simplex projectors and other well known products throughout Dixie.

Foremost among these is the new $250,000 Lucas theatre, Savannah, Ga., a theatre representing a real advance, not only in mere seating capacity, but in its architecture, decorations, in distinctive elegance and the luxury of its apppointments. A battery of Simplex projectors have been installed in the projection room.

Contract has also been secured for two Type "S" Simplex projectors, opera chairs and other equipment to be installed in the new theatre being erected by Lightner and Bro., at Raleigh, N. C. According to reports, this theatre will be of the most modern type and will be devoted to the colored population of Raleigh and vicinity.

Simplex projectors, opera chairs, scenery, lighting fixtures, lobby display and other equipment have been installed by Lucas in the theatre at Deland, Fla., owned by the Deland Amusement Company, as well as the new Anderson theatre at Gulfport, Miss.

Keith to Erect House in Cincinnati

Rumors that a fine new motion picture house is to be built in Cincinnati were verified this week by Ben L. Heidingsfeld, Cincinnati attorney, representing the Keith interests. According to a statement made by Mr. Heidingsfeld the Keith interests have had under consideration for some time the erection of such a theatre, with an approximate seating capacity of 3,600.

"We have secured an option on the property owned by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which is an L-shape proposition surrounding the Wiggins Block, at Fifth and Vine streets," Mr. Heidingsfeld stated. "We hope to conclude all of the preliminary negotiations very shortly."

It is stated that the new property will have involved an investment of approximately $2,000,000 when the theatre is completed. George L. Rapp, of the firm of Rapp & Rapp, architects, Chicago, was in the city a few days ago, at which time plans for the new theatre were submitted and carefully gone over.

There will be an office building in connection with the theatre, having a frontage of 120 feet on Vine street and of 60 feet on Fountain Square. The main entrance to the theatre will be from Fountain Square.

The firm of Rapp & Rapp designed the Palace theatre and building in Cincinnati and the new Keith theatre in Dayton, Ohio.—Beutel.

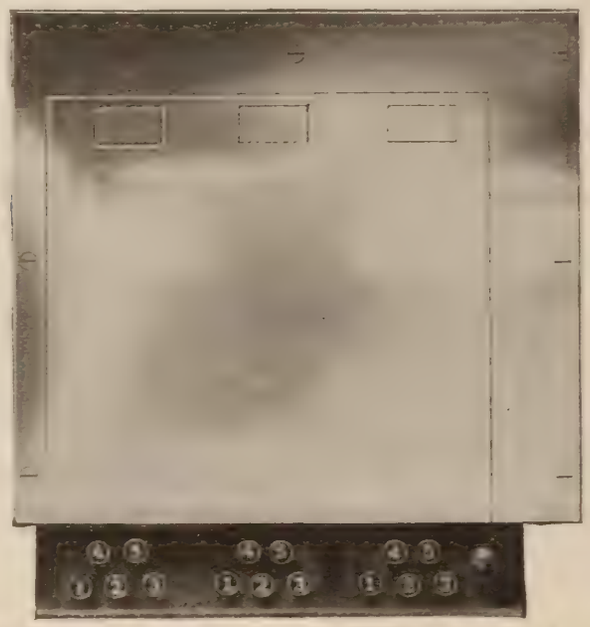
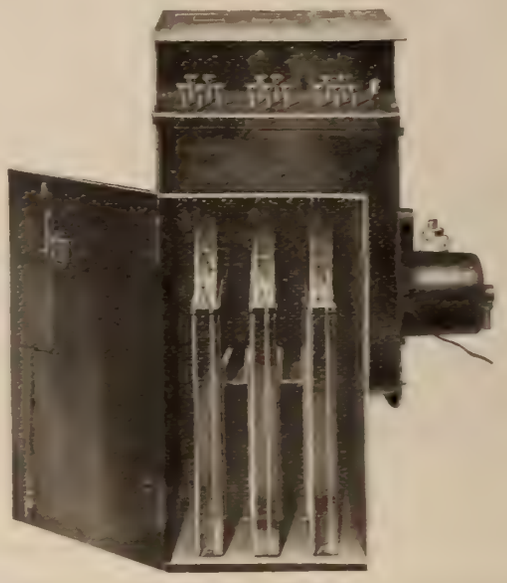
New Automatic Ticket Machine Has Many New Improvements

Some twelve years ago the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, now the Automatic Ticket Register Corporation, first started to market a ticket selling device. The machine at that time was operated by foot power, it being necessary for the cashier to press a foot lever in order to issue from 1 to 5 tickets.



Despite the labor required in using this machine, there was quite a demand for it, due to the desire of theatre owners for protection for their cash receipts and more speed in taking care of their patrons.

Users, however, were anxious to obtain an automatic machine which would require no labor, and some three years later the first motor-driven ticket selling machine was placed on the market by the Automatic Ticket Register Corporation.



Since that time thousands of these machines have been installed throughout the world and have been installed in theatres, large and small, everywhere, and today, most every up-to-date theatre is equipped with some kind of ticket selling device.

Due to the small amount of space in the average box office, it has been necessary always to build ticket selling machines compactly, and for that reason, they have heretofore been of light construction. Many years of experience developed the fact that ticket selling machines were put to much harder use than the average mechanical device, and with this idea in mind, the Automatic Ticket Register Corporation took steps to design a ticket machine which would be compact in the amount of space occupied, but of much heavier construction.

In order to do this, instead of using a separate mechanism for each unit, they have built a machine which operates any number of units or different price tickets with one mechanism only, and as a result, they have produced a new type ticket machine radically different from anything heretofore obtainable.

The new type 1922 model ticket selling machine has one master mechanism with parts built strong enough to stand a heavy strain for many years, and for the various units required, there is a selecting device connected with the keyboard, which permits tickets for various prices to be issued from separate slots as heretofore.

In designing the new type machine, they have also eliminated all keys from the change counter, so that the cashier now has unobstructed use of it for making change—the keys used in issuing from 1 to 5 tickets, instead of being on the counter are now in the back of it and slightly below the surface.

All of the new type machines are supplied completely equipped with Robbins & Myers motors specially built. The Automatic Ticket Register Corporation has received compliments from far and wide on its latest achievement.

During the past six months, the company has largely expanded its ticket plant.

Music and the Picture

Broadway's Score for "Peter Ibbetson"

Inspired by an Interview With Hugo Riesenfeld

THE musical score to "Peter Ibbetson," which Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld has prepared for his Criterion Theatre program is a standard for film presentation.

The music casts the desired atmosphere and at the same time achieves the goal of all carefully arranged accompaniments—rarity.

According to Dr. Riesenfeld this quality cannot be underestimated. If the film shows a Spanish dancer, it is the orchestra's cue to break out with the Habenera from "Carmen," in a casually prepared score. This is not one hundred per cent effective. The Habanera is familiar to all. It calls up memories of Geraldine Farrar, Calve, and The Victor Talking Machine. A hundred irrelevant ideas obtrude, and the spell of the picture is seriously threatened.

In "Peter Ibbetson," Dolores the Spanish dancer, comes into the hall. What is the musical accompaniment? Not the Habanera. Not a familiar gypsy song that everybody sang in school, but the comparatively unknown Havanaise of Saint-Saens. It does not take a musician or connoisseur to recognize the Spanish suggestiveness of the air. It is unmistakeable. Yet not one out of a hundred in the audience will associate it with some past experience.

This policy was carefully and painstakingly maintained in preparing the "Ibbetson" score. To suggest Eighteenth or early Nineteenth Century France, excerpts from the Cours La Reine scene from Massenet's "Manon" were used at the opening of the picture.

The central theme of the story is "dreaming true." There are thousands of songs in every family song-book about dreams. But Mr. Riesenfeld used a Reverie by Claude Achille Debussy, a classic in its way, for creating an atmosphere of ethereal loveliness. This work is unknown to nearly all except the musical congnoscenti, and then not to half of them. Yet the effect of the phrase was as sure as William Tell's shot at the apple. Every human fibre responds to soft flute tones and wide, open, harmonies.

One air that has excited comment, is the motiv of the old Colonel Duquenois, played by George Fawcett, Jacques-Dalcroze, originator of a system of bodily culture, found this old Napoleonic air which he calls "La Vosgienne." It has probably never been heard in America before. The theme is played whenever the Colonel appears.

How many Irish airs do the public know? Everybody knows at least a dozen. Yet Percy Grainger's unmistakably Irish "Molly on the Shore" is a novelty outside of the concert halls. This rollicking air accompanied the London prize-fight episode.

When Peter returns meditatively to his room such a forgotten air as the largo from Rossini's "Otello" was revived.

Mid-way between title and finish the love theme is introduced. Peter encounters Mimsi at the opera. The orchestra plays the haunting "Vision Fugitive" from Massenet's "Herodiade." The theme is re-introduced whenever Mimsi and Gogo meet again.

It was necessary to break the sustained action of the last episode with relief scenes in an orphanage. Karl Komzak's "Marschen"—light kindergarten fairy tale stuff—was used.

The string of themes is aided by certain stock pieces of orchestral-writing, such as a specially written agitato to denote excitement, a few bars of rumbling dissonances to indicate suspense, or a few measures of bells to cast a ghostly spell. These are procured from music publishers.

The manipulation of the themes gives "Peter Ibbetson" the effect of a well constructed opera. The use of theme per person or a theme for every mood is sound musicianship. It is the principle upon which that master of operas Richard Wagner worked.

At the end of the picture, when events move in rapid succession certain measures from the phrases are re-heard. This arrangement has the effect of a swift summary. The action ascends rapidly. A dream of Mimsi flashes through Peter's mind. The orchestra returns to the "Vision Fugitive," only to blend with Shubert's Misterioso, the theme of Peter's exile, and then into the kindergarten music as the picture dissolves into the orphanage. Soon every mood in the picture is brought to a focal point at the peak of the action which culminates in Peter's death.

This cut shows the newly organized ensemble, whose first presentation at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, was titled "Landing of the Pilgrims"

Leide Renews Contract

Enrico Leide, conductor of the forty-piece concert orchestra of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, has renewed his contract for the year of 1922, much to the delight of the musically inclined, of the city.

Mr. Leide came South in December, 1920, as Musical Director and Producing Manager at the Howard. In July, 1920, when the theatre did not show the pleasant profit which the owners felt they had a right to expect, Director Leide was advanced to full charge of the entire theatre, on a sort of probationary management. The fact that he has signed a new contract for the coming year is ample proof of his success as Managing Director.

He has inaugurated a number of new ideas which have made a hit, among them three-minute prologues, or, as he calls them "atmospheric preludes." The people of the South are unaccustomed to prologues, and Director Leide feels that more than three minutes gives the audience time to become restive.

Another innovation which has proved successful is that of Grand Opera overtures. Manager Leide believed in them, and has persisted in offering them, until he has won the unqualified support of the civic organization, the Woman's Club, the Atlanta Music Club, and other organizations whose good-will means so much to a theatre like the Howard.

Circle of Indianapolis Organizes Stock Ensemble

During Thanksgiving Week, the newly organized Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, ensemble, a company of fifty voices, presented its first number, a symbolic portrayal of the landing of the Pilgrims, staged under the title of "Landing of the Pilgrims."

W. Hurley Ashby, art director of the Circle, designed an elaborate stage setting for the initial presentation of the Ensemble, with spectacular lighting effects, which resulted in much commendation from the local press as well as from the patrons of the theatre.

Arnold Spencer, choral director of the Indiana College of Music, has been appointed instructor of the Circle Ensemble. The Ensemble will be presented regularly on the Circle program.

Silvers to Specialize on Picture Scores

Louis Silvers who has gained a reputation as a talented composer of musical scores by the orchestrations he has compiled for such pictures as "Way Down East," "Dream Street," "Peacock Alley" and "Silas Marner" has associated himself with the Jesse Smith Enterprises where he will devote himself exclusively to writing scores for motion pictures.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"The Battle of Jutland"
(Educational—Two Reels)

IN "The Battle of Jutland," Educational has an ingenious offering which because of its historical value, its authentic revelation of the greatest sea battle in the history of the world, and the fact that it is painstakingly presented after three years of research is certain to find a response everywhere. There is no doubt that it is entitled to share a feature position on any exhibitor's program because of its many qualities. With flashes of the huge warships, belching their smoke, driving through the churning waters and sending tons of powder into the enemy—with these flashes supplemented by a bird's-eye view of an ingenious map whereby the spectator is afforded an authentic account of the maneuvering of the ships—it stimulates one to the keenest suspense.

Really one feels like crying out—"Bravo!" You catch the thrill of being an actual observer without the danger of being an actual participant. This map is presented with the ships apparently controlled by some magnetic or electric process. And the sponsors have taken the trouble to verify this battle. They have pieced together the logs of the various commanders and the other evidence of the participants. The very fact that it is genuine enhances its value as a record which will enter historical data. Educational has not played the British side nor the German side. It has simply exposed facts.

The German ships are depicted in white, the English in black. There is no confusion. You watch Schneer and Hipper enter the trap set by Beatty and Jellicoe and Hood. You watch this huge chess game of war with a background of water. And ships go down. The Germans are out-maneuvered but make the sanctuary of their mined harbors owing to the blackness of night and the low visibility of early dawn. And one point which this picture will encourage is that it will stimulate every keen spectator to become an amateur strategist. It is an inspiring number, make no mistake about it. It demands feature position, and if not given it is liable to walk away with the honors after all.—LAURENCE REID.

"Stolen Glory"
(Campbell Comedy-Educational—Two Reels)

TWO dogs, a monkey, a precocious youngster identified as Coy Watson, Jr., an equally precocious little girl who acts as foil, a couple of grown-ups for the sake of atmosphere, provide the "props" for "Stolen Glory," a Campbell animal comedy being released by Educational. The director, Frank Griffin, has employed a deal of ingenuity in thinking out the various details. It has shown much study on his part. The youngster in the opening scene has employed the canines to help him catch a fish. One dog acts as the official hammock pusher while the boy shouts his orders, the other plays the nimrod. There is some good comedy here. But the real appeal comes in the rescue of the little girl whose pony has run away.

The youngster follows in pursuit and it happens that a news cameraman has snapped the rescue. The boy is rewarded by the girl's parents and taken to the picture house to see the offering. He feels himself pretty much a hero until a subtitle informs that the real rescue will now be presented. And the monkey and dog have entered the theatre for the purpose of showing up the boy. The animals performed the real rescue, although the boy assumed the credit. "Stolen Glory" will make a lot of friends. The Watson youngster is a likeable lad and the animals seem almost human.—LAURENCE REID.

"Love and Doughnuts"
(Mack Sennett Comedy-First National)

THERE is a deal of comic ingenuity expressed in this Mack Sennett opus which introduces the trick-eyed Ben Turpin carrying on in a bakery. It is slapstick but of a new, surprising kind. One would think that the ever faithful pie would come in for considerable bombardment, but Sennett has used other tricks. Ben is grinding out doughnuts much after the inventive scheme employed by Rube Goldberg. To test the "sinkers" he puts them on a bar above his head and uses them as flying rings. There is a deal of dough used in carrying the plot along. And Phyllis Haver enters the picture to play a real character part. Is Sennett going to make a Louise Fazenda out of her? Anyway it is rich fun to watch Turpin and his company putting over the high jinks in the bakery, delicatessen and finally in the fashionable restaurant. There are any number of new gags and stunts and the comedy had a Sunday audience at the Rivoli laughing continuously from the moment that the cross-eyed comedian appeared. Length 2 Reels. — LAURENCE REID.

"The City"
(Post Nature—Scenic—Wid Gunning, Inc.)

A SERIES of tinted views—long shots, medium shots, close-ups—have been collected around New York which presents it as something else than a money mart, a theatrical center, a hustling, bustling commercial city. The cameraman has sought out the beauty spots and found them. He has placed his camera to catch silhouettes against a darkened sky. The Woolworth tower, the sky-line from the Jersey shore, the pinnacle of the Municipal Building,—these are caught in shadow effects and from various angles and the result is highly picturesque. A winter scene in Van Cortlandt park or Central park is exceptionally rich and gives to the spectator the idea that the charm of the country is right here in the midst of a throbbing metropolis if he would look for it. The majesty of the Hudson, the awe-inspiring views of the mighty bridges which span the East river and connect New York with Brooklyn—these are a part of this interesting canvas. It shows the city beautiful—with a different kind of beauty—a massive, rugged, unique, original beauty. "The City" is a fascinating number.—One Reel.—Lawrence Reid.

Two Aesop's Fables
(Pathe—2/3 Reel Each)

PAUL TERRY has animated two of the venerable Aesop's wheezes for the entertainment of the public. One is entitled "The Cat and the Monkey," the other is known as "The Fox and the Goat." The cat and monkey story features a tabby encouraging the chatterer of the forest and zoo to do his bidding. This influence for good or evil precipitates a line of adventure which is amusing to say the least. One of the funny flashes presents them hanging on a fast moving train. The moral brought down from the archaic period is "Don't be a catspaw."

The "Fox and the Goat" takes up the character of the two animals, the former being revealed in all its craftiness, the other showing itself as exceedingly simple. The fox chases a duck and falls into a well from which there is no escape until he urges the goat to jump in and thus making a getaway by standing upon the animal's back and leaping out. It is a clever cartoon filled with snappy touches. The moral? Well, it is one of the favorite bromides of all time. It is "Look before you leap."—LAURENCE REID.

"A Rural Cinderella"
(Punch Comedy—Two Reels—Released Through Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

THIS comedy has a high sounding cast, including such names as Louise Fazenda, Jack Duffy, John Henry, Jr., and Chester Conklin. These manage to use their comedy tricks in a familiar story of a country slavey who has two lovers (both burlesque types) and a mischevious baby brother. The latter, of course, is John Henry, who shows up well and is allowed some gags that will win him sure-enough laughs. The action shifts to a rural masquerade ball, and the Cinderalla theme is burlesqued, with a number of varied gags added.

It should be sufficiently entertaining for any program, which does not demand a straight situation comedy. While nothing daring or spectacular is attempted, the action keeps up a good pace.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Old and New England"
(Bruce European Scenic—Released by Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

ROBERT BRUCE goes in for comparisons in this scenic. English pastures and pastoral scenes vie with the beauties of Massachusetts. British architecture is contrasted with American, and a New England village, with its broad Main street, its high-steepled meeting house, and its wide-verandaed houses, follows on the screen a scene of a typical English village. The fact that in many instances the titles are omitted adds to the interest. The audience will endeavor to guess which scene is of England and which of New England.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Let's Go to the South Seas"
(World Wanderings Series—Released Through Educational Exchanges—One Reel)

HERE is a colorful scenic picturing a portion of the globe that is never lacking in romantic appeal to the American public. The audience is taken to Samoa, a land of green forests bone white beaches, and the turquoise blue Pacific. They are shown the intricacies of the building of Samoa houses. Bamboo and cocoanut trees supply the material and grass is used for roofing. Natives are shown at their native dances. It is more of a travelogue than a scenic although the ending shows a shot of the native village and the beach which would be difficult to equal for pictorial beauty.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"OUR MUTUAL FRIEND"
(Wid Gunning, Inc.)

Highly Interesting Picture Made From Dickens' Classic

ADAPTING Dickens to the screen is not the easiest task in the world. The great fiction writer wrote in terms of plots and counterplots and a rich assortment of characters, and in his more elaborate stories he invariably wove a mass of detail—all of which was relevant to some point of action or characterization. So the adaptor of a Dickens story is confronted with exceptional difficulties to make the script faithful to the original.

Whoever is responsible for "Our Mutual Friend" deserves praise of the highest order. He has taken the salient episodes, the moving incidents and fashioned them into a highly interesting picture—a picture which reveals clearly defined characterization, some samples of quaint humor, and bits of incident—which flow along through a plot and several counterplots, releasing a fine breath of sentiment, captivating charm, suspensive melodrama, eloquent atmosphere and what must be regarded as exceptional photography. Truly this last mentioned quality must command special attention by itself. The lighting is soft, yet the most insignificant article in the farthest space of the background is brought out in bold relief. And this photography is consistently fine throughout.

The lovers of Dickens are not going to be disappointed. All of those who have loved the little "spitfire," Bella Wilfer, her patient, uncomplaining father, John Harmon, who masqueraded as Handford and Rokesmith, the lawyers, Wrayburn and Lightwood, Peg-leg Wegg, that quaint old bounder, the picturesque Rogue Riderhood, Gaffer Hexam, Gaffer's daughter, Pa and Ma Boffin, and the sly and cunning old skin-stuffer and bone-setter, Mr. Venus—all those who have loved these truly Dickensesque group of characters will realize that the picture has kept faith. They are all here wonderfully humanized. They plot and counterplot—strut through their destinies with the breath of life. So much for the direction and interpretation. The picture unfolds a bit of atmosphere, then a flash of unique melodrama, then a touch of romance is added, to be followed by some quaint humor—all these Dickens characteristics are caught and faithfully presented. The backgrounds are rich and always appropriate. Indeed there is not a slip anywhere.

It's our opinion that the picture is the best that has ever been made from a Dickens story. Those who have never read him are certain to become enthusiastic disciples. The Dickens atmosphere, so important in all his works, saturates this feature and the quaint figures stand out like cameos, so well are they invested with color and imagination. The girl, Bella, is finely played by Catherine Reese, whose Dresden China loveliness suggests eternal youth and romance. The cast has entered into the spirit of the story so that each character is interpreted as Dickens would have it. So book this picture. It is fragrant with romance, unique in characterization, and quaint and colorful in costume and setting. And the photography is exquisite.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Charles Dickens' celebrated novel—what is considered by many his greatest contribution to literature, "Our Mutual Friend," is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— as a motion picture. It is a wonderfully fine adaptation that has been made from this classic. All the lovable characters—the quaint figures which Dickens knew so well how to paint—all these people are here moving with life. They find their several niches and proceed to fill them. One may be bent on murder, another may follow the path of intrigue, another may be trustful and search for love, another may attempt to prosper at the benefit of some one less fortunate—but whatever their desires and inclinations—these colorful and quaint people are here. It is a picture which releases a wealth of atmosphere and quaint plot and counterplotting. The photography is exceptional and the cast is splendid. Catherine Reese as Bella is a study in youthful loveliness. She might have stepped out from some old miniature.

PROGRAM READER

Dickens—the greatest fiction writer that ever lived. Dickens—the author of highly colorful plots and atmosphere. Dickens—the creator of David Copperfield, Little Nell, Sydney Carton, Old Scrooge, Fagin, and Bella Wilfer and Rogue Riderhood, lives again on the screen. His greatest story, "Our Mutual Friend," is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— as a photoplay. In this picture are Bella Wilfer and dozens of others—just as lovable or perhaps more quaint or perhaps not so lovely. But they are all there. It is a highly interesting picture. See it.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is your chance to link up with your book-dealer for a Dickens sale. Spread teasers and get out a mail campaign to reach everybody. Get in the readers of Dickens. Stage a prologue with characters grouped in an ensemble wearing the costumes of 1850—crinolines, high beaver hats, etc.

"THE HOLE IN THE WALL"
(Metro)

Atmosphere Is Strong; Melodrama Is Weak

THE fake spiritualists have been exposed before on the screen, and so any indictment of their profession has lost its timeliness. It is not so much the depiction of their nefarious means of livelihood which appeals as it is the gew-gaws and trimmings which provide the atmosphere. The dancing table, the codes and messages, the hidden medium who supplies the seeress with the important facts of the deceased—these are the interesting features of this type of story. "The Hole in the Wall" by the widest stretch of imagination cannot be called convincing. The author has dwelled upon feminine revenge which does not seem genuine in view of the characteristics of the sex.

In introducing the heroine as seeking revenge upon a woman for branding her a thief it strikes us that he has enlarged upon an idea that does not need such extensive treatment. She is railroaded to prison and when at liberty takes up the profession of a fake medium. Her scheme of revenge is to kidnap the child of the wealthy dowager and hold him for ransom or until the woman shows signs of an awakened conscience. The story is bald melodrama and its most unconvincing feature is the attitude of the police. The director has not shown much appreciation for the idea that a police officer will stand for no interference from the press. Yet a reporter takes up the case of running down the spiritualists and discredits the police time and again. The youth is identified as the heroine's long lost sweetheart, and he has come to the temple for the necessary evidence. He is surprised to discover this girl there and is shocked to learn that her psychic powers are unduly keen even when there is no cooperation from an outside source.

The conclusion is hastily constructed and gives very little semblance of truth. The child is restored through the girl compelling the reporter and police to give up the other crooks, and with everybody showing a toleration and forgiving spirit. The story and characterization are highly improbable. The appeal lies in the exposé of the medium. In all fairness there is enough atmosphere and action to discount many of the illogical flaws. But as entertainment it serves no real purpose other than to permit the star to show some emotional talent, Frank Brownlee to do a Lon Chaney portrayal, and the others to act accordingly. May Allison once appeared in a type of story similar to this and it registered as much more genuine, because there was presented a redemption of the seeress who through an awakened conscience stopped trafficking in a beastly enterprise. "The Hole in the Wall" carries some thrills and is well staged.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A vivid story of the weird world which revolves around a clairvoyant's profession—that eerie world which has been exposed as a means of reaching prosperity through using the gullibility of those in search of spiritual communion—that is, "The Hole in the Wall," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Alice Lake as the star. This is a story by Fred Jackson, the well-known author and playwright, and it gives the star ample oppportunity to flash her talent and personality.

It happens that Jean Oliver is revengeful toward a wealthy dowager and when circumstances permit her to square the account she takes up the profession of a clairvoyant. A newspaper man gifted in running down crime is determined to expose the spiritualists imposing on the gullible pepople endeavoring to get into communication with departed friends and relatives. The girl, Jean, is caught in the trap, but she shows real psychic powers and in the end realizes that her scheme of revenge is entirely wrong. The story is dramatically told and acted with power and persuasion. June Mathis, who adapted "The Four Horsemen," is responsible for the adaptation.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever have occasion to consult one of the occult individuals who puts you into communication with the dear friends and relatives who have passed over into the other world? Suppose you found that the clairvoyant was a fraud and then suddenly discovered that the spiritualist possessed real psychic power. Would you prosecute? When you come to the ———— theatre next ———— to see "The Hole in the Wall," you will find Alice Lake in a picture which unfolds a deal of real insight into the fake mediums who impose on the gullible people in search of communion. It is a fascinating picture, with Miss Lake contributing an appealing performance. Remember the date—next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

This is one of the medium stories of certain spiritualists who impose on the publi. to gratify their own ambitions to get rich at little expense. Play up that the fake mediums are exposed. Make a play about the story which exposes these mediums and inform your public that the chance is theirs to see how these fakers ply their trade. Make mention that the story unfolds a good plot which builds much action and suspense, and that the picture is interesting from start to finish.

CATCH LINES

She became a fake medium to seek revenge upon another. Then she discovered that she possessed real psychic power. See Alice Lake in "The Hole in the Wall."

"POVERTY OF RICHES"
(Goldwyn)

A Serious Picture, Well Made, With Entertainment Possibilities

"POVERTY OF RICHES" is always entertaining. It is a picture with a theme, developed by a study in contrasts. The theme is a discussion of the childless marriage as compared with the young couple who welcome children even at the sacrifice of financial success. Two families are used to supply the contrasts.

There is little doubt but that the picture is rich in entertainment values despite the fact that its material is so deadly moral that it might have been made into an unconvincing piece of screen preachment. But because it has been developed with remarkable care, the story holds the interest. An attempt to introduce the eternal triangle idea in the end seems a bit incongruous and heightens the suspense only a little. An audience never believes that the wife will be untrue to her husband, although he has crushed her maternal instincts in order to forge ahead to business success.

Following a few introductory incidents the story traces the careers of two newly married couples. Both husbands work in the same industrial plant. One husband adopts as his business creed the doctrine that a successful front makes for real success. So the children never come—they would hinder him—and his wife aids him socially. Power and wealth are his aims. When these are achieved he will welcome a family. The other couple has two children. The husband is tied close to his hearth; he cannot entertain his business associates; his expenses will not permit him to bluff success, which, according to the picture, is necessary to climb to the top of the business ladder. Gradually the childless husband strengthens his hold on success. His life's ambition is almost realized. Then comes the climax—an auto accident, and we are given to understand that his wife can never hope for children. Here is the most dramatic moment—the tragic prospect of a lonely middle and old age for the couple is brought pathetically home. Its lesson is somewhat cloudy, as can be seen, because had it not been for the auto collison, entirely accidently, the family would have had both wealth and children. It is remarkable how cleverly this subject has been treated, both in scenes and in titles. Those who believe that the manner of treatment rather than the subject matter is the criterion of morality will give it the highest moral credentials. There is absolutely no hint of the salacious in the picture.

The four principals are Richard Dix, Leatrice Joy, John Bowers and Louise Lovely, all of whom aid the picture immeasurably by their excellent work. Reginald Barker's direction is perfect in detail and always effective.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

For its feature production on ———— the ———— theatre announces "The Poverty of Riches," a modern drama of modern America, which has already won its reputation as being one of the most powerful and vigorous photoplays to reach the screen in many a month. Adapted to the screen from the story by LeRoy Scott, "The Poverty of Riches" conveys a message—a message sound and clear, human, appealing and puissant.

It is a story of two families—two couples who start their careers on the sea of matrimony at the same time. One amasses wealth; achieves success. To do this meant sacrifice of home, sacrifice of children. It was necessary that they be prominent socially, with no children to hinder their advance to success. Their lot was riches—but riches meant only poverty. The other family never made money—but they had children. Theirs was the riches of poverty. No more stirring or real human picture could have been chosen as a successor to "The Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead," previous Goldwyn successes.

The cast is an admirable one, including such players as Richard Dix, Leatrice Joy, Louise Lovely, Irene Rich, John Bowers and DeWitt Jennings. Reginald Barker, a master of his art, directed the picture.

PROGRAM READER

One picture in a hundred. A photoplay which stimulates thought. A production which entertains every minute it is on the screen. Such is "The Poverty of Riches," the Goldwyn production, which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. The story is a simple one, simply told. Two married couples start together along the highway of matrimony. The two husbands are of different characters. One places business success above everything else; the other—children. One achieves success, the other has his children. Which is the richer? Is there poverty in riches? And are there riches in poverty? Which is the happier, the man who denied himself children who would hinder him on the way to business success, or the man who tied himself down to his hearth, letting success slide from his grasp?

"The Poverty of Riches" is a worthy successor to the previous Goldwyn pictures. "The Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead." It is a picture you would not want to miss.

"THE LOTUS EATERS"
(Neilan-First National)

Great Vehicle for Star and Excellent Entertainment Too

THE personality of Jack Barrymore, a story that certainly is well out of the ordinary in dramatic ingredients and direction that never misses an opportunity, all contribute in making "The Lotus Eaters" one of the most unusual and entertaining pictures of the season.

It has all the sure-fire audience qualifications: thrills, comedy, suspense, love interest, beautiful scenic locations, plot and numberless likable characters played by a company of carefully selected types.

In the leading role Jack Barrymore is an ideal selection. He acts the part of the esthetic and unsophisticated "Jacques" to perfection, displaying a talent for light comedy, as well as drama, that those who do not remember his first vehicles in the photoplay such as "The Man from Mexico" would scarcely believe possible.

"The Lotus Eaters" is a rather curious combination. It begins with scenes that are orthodox drama, jumps to melodrama and then presents some delightful farce comedy, before becoming a satirical thesis on the faults of modern city dwelling, compared to the simple life on a South Sea island, where money, ambition, power, discontent, jealousy and all the other troublesome things of modern existence were unknown and undesired.

The picture becomes quite fantastic at times in its Utopian idea of an island where various shipwrecked persons find an opportunity for the following of their particular hobbies. There is the European nobleman who always wanted to run a restaurant and couldn't because he was a Count. A former New York Wall street buzzard specializes in salads and is completely absorbed in his new calling. A Broadway bar-keep mixes 'em according to artistic and not financial standards for the castaways, and is happy as a clam because he doesn't have to bother with a cash register.

"Jacques" doesn't indulge any of his own particular hobbies while on the island but he does like the idea, also pretty Colleen Moore so well that after having been able to return to New York and a heartless wife who has transferred her affections twice during his absence, he makes up his mind to make his permanent residence on "Utopia" island.

All in all it is a clever and most pleasing picture, a perfect vehicle for the star and a directorial triumph for Marshall Neilan. Length, 7 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Jacques Lenoi.....John Barrymore
Mavis.....Colleen Moore
Madge Vance.....Anna Q. Nilsson
Mrs. Hastings Vance.....Ida Waterman
The Dean.....Frank Currier
John Carson.....J. Barney Sherry
Jocko.....Wesley Barry

Adapted from Albert Payson Terhune's story of the same name and personally directed by Marshall Neilan.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Lotus Eaters," an adaptation of Albert Payson Terhune's story of the same name is the feature photoplay billed for showing at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

In the cast, besides the star, John Barrymore, are such players as Colleen Moore, Anna Q. Nilsson, J. Barney Sherry and Wesley Barry. The feature was personally directed by Marshall Neilan and is a fantastic but highly entertaining story of an esthetic young man who becomes a resident of a South Sea island where money, strife, ambitions of a worldly nature, jealousy, etc., are unknown to the inhabitants, all of whom are shipwreck survivors.

The feature has all the sure fire audience ingredients. There are thrills, comedy, heart interest, a pretty love story, suspense and a likeable list of characters, all played by wonderfully selected types. Beautiful scenic locations, fine titles that offer a laugh now and then also add to the picture's entertainment values.

The feature was personally directed by Marshall Neilan and presents Mr. Barrymore in his best role on the silver sheet. The offering screens in seven reels and is recommended as one of the most unusual productions of the year.

PROGRAM READER

A picture that has been hailed as one of the hits of the season, "The Lotus Eaters is scheduled for showing at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

John Barrymore has the star role in "The Lotus Eaters" that of an esthetic young dreamer who finds a Utopia on a South Sea Island where he is wrecked when a trans-Pacific airship fails to operate as its inventors had expected.

In support of Mr. Barrymore is a strong cast of screen favorites, among whom is Anna Q. Nilsson, Barney Sherry, Colleen Moore and Wesley Barry. The picture was directed by Marshall Neilan and the scenario is an adaptation of Albert Payson Terhune's serial story of the same name.

The feature screens in seven reels and is announced as one of the most unusual combinations of thrills, romance and comedy produced this year.

SUGGESTIONS

Where John Barrymore is popular bill him strong as the star, otherwise give what is certainly an all-star cast equal attention. Anna Q. Nilsson, Wesley Barry, and Colleen Moore certainly have a strong following with your patrons. Make much of the story of "The Lotus Eaters," both from the fame of the author and the dramatic content. You can recommend the picture highly without fear of getting in dutch. In your selling talk stress the comedy angles to be found in the whimsical idea of the inhabitants of the island who are having great times with their hobbies. Promise Barrymore in his most delightful role and mention that Neilan personally directed the production. Lobby displays and prologue numbers should be of the "South Sea" variety.

CATCH LINES

A whimsical, sometimes satirical picture play about a young man who found a Utopia where money, social position, worldly ambitions and strife did not exist and where people lived only happily.

"TOL'ABLE DAVID"
(Inspiration Pictures-First National)

A Favorite Star in a Simple, Yet Powerful Story

RICHARD BARTHELMESS might have started his career as an independent star in a role of super-heroism. He might have shone forth in a society drama, or he might have conquered the world in a "Way Down East" costume, but he preferred to enact a simple, heart-interest drama depicting life among the hardy mountain folk of West Virginia, which for sheer interest and pure entertainment will be hard to equal.

"Tol'able David" was taken from a short story, hence its simplicity of plot. But, while the story is simple and compact, it is strong drama. Joseph Hergesheimer's story characters are faithfully depicted. To supply romance a girl has been written into the story, but there is no essential change in the drama. The producers have been willing to take Mr. Hergesheimer's one idea—the young mountain lad fighting under the sudden responsibility of protecting the living and revenging the dead, and telling it on the screen simply, yet with tremendous power. It is an example of what fine pictures can be made from single-impression short stories, as well as from more complex novels.

"David" is the younger son in the simple living family. He longs to grow up and drive the stage like his older brother. His life is content—he is filled with tense love of everything that constitutes his home. Then the world topples. New neighbors, cruel, fierce characters, lovers of destruction, cripple his brother. His father, about to revenge the blow, dies suddenly. "David's" instinct for revenge is overpowering. The Hatburns ruined his home—his home was the most precious thing in the world. But his mother drags herself through the mud to stop him from his attack. So the unhappy family moves to town. Then David has the opportunity to serve as a substitute driver for the stage. On his way home he loses the mail. A Hatburn has picked it up from the road. He enters into the presence of men who ruined his happiness. To protect the government mail he fires and kills two. The third gives him a terrific beating and the scene is cut just as both hands are reaching for the one revolver. The picture ends as "David," wounded and almost helpless, drives the stage with the mail, into the village.

There are a number of character touches all the way through, and with the West Virginia mountains for a background, naturally the atmosphere is perfect. Excellent performances are given by Marion Abbott, Ernest Torrence and Warner Richmond. Gladys Hulette is the heroine.

Hergesheimer's story works up with sweeping suspense and Director Henry King has made the most of it. There will be few who will not feel the power of it.—Length, 7 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The ———— theatre announces as the feature for ———— , "Tol'able David," Richard Barthelmess' first appearance as an independent star. Mr. Barthelmess has been seen in "The Love Flower," and "Way Down East" under the direction of Mr. Griffith, and in "Tol'able David" he has made a production with himself as a star. There is no doubt but that Mr. Barthelmess, one of the most likable screen personalities of today, will continue to grow in popularity with this, the first of his new series of features.

"Tol'able David" is a simple story of West Virginia mountaineers, from the pen of Joseph Hergesheimer. It first appeared in the "Saturday Evening Post," and has since been published in book form and conceded to be one of the best of this gifted author's works. Barthelmess plays the part of a young mountain lad upon whose shoulders is suddenly cast new and heavy responsibilities. It is a picture of profound interest, of sweeping suspense and powerful dramatic scenes. Seldom has a picture so filled with genuine heart interest and true human characters reached the screen. For those who look for the evolution of the motion picture to the plane where it will have all the charm and yet all the simplicity of the world's foremost short stories, "Tol'able David" will be a delight. The picture will be shown for ———— days beginning ———— .

PROGRAM READER

A story of the Virginia hills—of a boy of the mountains who longed to grasp the manhood that was still years ahead of him; who ambitioned only to carry the government mail on stage across the rugged hills. A tale of the most vivid reality and sweeping dramatic power, rich in human characterizations, irresistible in the sweetness of its appeal. Such is "Tol'able David," Richard Barthelmess' starring picture which will be seen at the ————. The star of "Way Down East" and other Griffith productions now comes forth in this picture, adaptped from the "Saturday Evening Post" story from the pen of Joseph Hergesheimer. Few pictures which have reached the screen this year that have its force and its power. Richard Barthelmess has a new sort of role and a better role than ever before in his screen career. The attractive young star—typifying the manly American youth—plays the part of a simple-living American mountain lad. In the supporting cast are a number of capable players. The picture was directed by Henry King.

"Tol'able David" will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ———— . We call it, we really believe it, one of the greatest dramas to reach the screen during the year.

"THE CALL OF THE NORTH"
(Paramount)

Jack Holt Stars in Entirely Satisfactory "Outdoor" Picture

GOOD judgment has been shown in selecting this Steward Edward White novel for the screen, but the choice of Jack Holt for the lead is not so certain to win commendation. He does not quite ring true in his characterization of the Canadian trapper. He is a bit debonair and conventional. But the minority who will notice this in regard to Mr. Holt will pass it by and thoroughly enjoy this "outdoor" production. There is romance in the locale, a lonely trading post of the Hudson Bay Company in the wilds of Canada. There is a fascination to picture audiences when they see the simple rugged life of the traders and trappers. And this story contains interest and well sustained suspense.

The story develops in an interesting fashion, with not a few excellent exterior shots to beautify the production. The plot material concerns the tyranny of the Factors of the Hudson Bay Company, who were originally invested with supreme authority in their territory and who even to-day, in the more remote sections, are practically absolute. Into this country comes a "free trader"—one who dares to compete with the Company. The Factor captures him, fires his post, and demands that he cease to buy and sell furs independently. The alternative is "the long traverse." This is a trick of the Factors when they seek to do away with a man. He is denied food and arms at the trading post and sent alone into the snows. Perhaps Holt here shows an unconvincing amount of sang froid in the face of all this threatened danger. It is the girl—the daughter of the iron-hearted Factor, who gives him the rifle to save him on his long "journey of death." But he is re-captured before he has obtained his start. Then follows the climax. The Factor is for immediate punishment, despite the fact that his daughter loves the victim, when he discovers that the hero is the son of a man he wronged years ago. Repentance of the villain is never a very satisfactory solution for a drama, but in this case it fits in logically and satisfactorily.

The final shot shows a "brigade" of canoes, floating down the river. Hero and heroine are going to the Southland. The scene, which is the duplication of one earlier in the picture, is pictorially exquisite. The canoes are against a primitive background and a rugged settlement. Holt's first starring vehicle should be well received. It has all the fascination of an "outdoor" picture, and besides a neat, novel and well-sustanied plot.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Call of the North," the feature picture which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, is the latest Paramount picture starring Jack Holt. This popular screen star is seen as a Canadian trapper in the north country, in a story that is virile and fast-moving and powerful in its drama. It is adapted from the novel by Stewart Edward White and the play by George Broadhurst.

The picture takes the audience to the fur country where the Hudson Bay Company, the great fur-trading organization, rules supreme. "Free traders," men who dare to compete with the company, are routed out by fair means or foul. But there is one "free trader" who dares to buy and sell his own pelts in open defiance to the tyrannical Factor, the local leader of the Hudson Bay Company. The clash between them is inevitable. "The Call of the North" is one of those pictures which carry the imagination of the spectator into the very heart of the country it is picturing. This feature was filmed against a rugged mountain background which adds greatly to its artistic beauty.

PROGRAM READER

The ———— theatre on ———— will offer a new picture starring the popular Paramount star, Jack Holt. It is entitled "The Call of the North." Mr. Holt has been seen in the past in a number of Paramount pictures, always playing a leading role. As a result of his work and the popularity which he has won, he is now a star in his own right. "The Call of the North" gives him an auspicious start. It is a vigorous, virile screen story adapted from the novel by Stewart Edward White and the play by George Broadhurst. It is a story of the trappers in Canada, and the powerful Hudson Bay Company which endeavors to stifle all its competitors by fair means or foul. There is adventure, vivid realism and beautiful romance in the story, and a background of beautiful rugged mountain scenes which greatly enhance the picture. Mr. Holt is supported by a cast including Noah Beery, Madge Bellamy, Francis McDonald and Helen Ferguson.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a new star who already has a large following because of his work as a lead in many past features. He is by no means unknown, however, and has a goodly following. A tie-up with a local furrier seems possible, either a window display or a street character being practical. The original pelts are necessary of course. The window display should represent a trapper's cabin surrounded by snow, with the furs hung around, and the trapper sitting near the dying fire. A similar prologue might be arranged with apprpopriate music. The story has

"DUKE OF CHIMNEY BUTTE"
(Andrew J. Callaghan-R-C Pictures)

Conventional Western With Fred Stone in a Breezy Role

LOOKING at this picture for any signs of originality or any characteristic punches one is apt to be disappointed. Looking at it for its comedy values, its breezy characterization and one is apt to be entirely satisfied. It carries a star who made his debut a few years ago as a stunt actor. At that time Fred Stone did not register with the ability he displayed upon the stage. It is said that this picture was made some time ago, but the star has profited by the experience of his first vehicle.

One may be safe in calling "The Duke of Chimney Butte" a vehicle for the display of the star's versatility. His gift for humor so richly expressed through his voice and facial expressions on the stage are eliminated here. What he relies upon is his horsemanship, his skill at roping and lariat throwing and with the trusty Colt. And let it be said that he is as proficient in stunts as Tom Mix, Bill Hart and Will Rogers. He has long been recognized as an actor who is ever learning some new accomplishment. And he bobs up here as skillful a rider as any real cowboy. And maybe he can't dance through a whirling lariat!

Stone is introduced as a highway salesman with a bicycle for a steed. He is selling some invention which serves as potato peeler, razor, etc., and wins a horse through some good-natured banter. The scene suddenly switches to the rustler pattern, and its outcome is guessed immediately. There is a girl whose handkerchief is picked up as she rides by on the limited. He would learn her identity. He engages a job along with a trusty cook on a ranch and the plot has to do with some open range argument with some neighboring ranchers presenting the idea that they have the right to cut the fences and ride over the range. The heroine of the handkerchief turns out to be the daughter of the free ranger, and he catches her cutting the barbed wire.

Through all this there is developing a romance, which supplemented by Stone's stunts in and out of the saddle, gives the picture an appeal which is certain to get it over with the majority of patrons. To get the fair-haired heroine out of the way the author has her shot in some gun-play episode, and the hero decides to remain. One of the best points of the feature is the wealth of humorous and breezy sub-titles which speak the vernacular of the country in an original fashion. The company is highly capable. Mention should be made of Buck Connors, who, as the hero's pal, presents a colorful figure. Frank Borzage's direction is commendable because he has made a great deal out of very little material.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bristling with dramatic incident, sparkling with delightful humor and rich in romance and adventure, "The Duke of Chimney Butte," in which Fred Stone will appear at the ———— theatre beginning ———— is a clean-cut rollicking comedy-drama. The star has a role to which he can give the full scope of his extraordinary talents. He displays his remarkable horsemanship, his skill at shooting and roping and at the same time does some clever acting. A delightful vein of romance keeps interest sustained at high pitch throughout.

Opposite Mr. Stone appears the charming Vola Vale, who portrays the role of the daughter of a wealthy rancher who left the young girl his property when he died. The Duke blunders into her ranch seeking work and serves as her protector and aide against rustlers who have been harassing her for several months. This opens the way to many thrilling adventures which are depicted on the screen with splendid realism. The Duke is captured by cattle thieves, but escapes and then he rounds them up and puts them out of the way. Prominent in the cast are Josie Sedgwick and Chick Morrison. Frank Borzage, the director of "Humoresque" had charge of production.

PROGRAM READER

Fred Stone, America's all-around comedian—Fred Stone, the comedian who can ride and throw the lariat like a born cowboy, who can dance and skip the rope, who is gifted with sharp-shooting with a trusty Colt—Fred Stone, America's favorite comedian is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in a motion picture, the title of which is "The Duke of Chimney Butte." This is a western melodrama which permits this star to display his versatile talent. It is a breezy picture filled with dash and spirit and plenty of humor—to say nothing of some original stunts. So come and see Fred Stone, the most accomplished comedian on screen and stage in a picture calculated to entertain your from start to finish.

SUGGESTIONS

The best way to popularize this picture is to concentrate upon the star, Fred Stone. He has made some pictures—some seasons ago. But if your town is large enough doubtless your public is familiar with him since he is a recognized stage star of real ability. And he always gives a good show. Doubtless he has appeared on your local stage. If not play him up as the most accomplished comedian on stage or screen. Play up that he can do anything ever executed by a real cowboy. He can ride, throw the lariat and is an expert sharp-shooter. Play up the picture as a breezy western filled with plenty of humor and dash.

CATCH LINES

See Fred Stone in "The Duke of Chimney Butte." America's most versatile comedian in a breezy western. Don't miss it.

"THE GIRL FROM PORCUPINE"
(Arrow Film Corp.)

Can Compete With Any as a Program Feature

THIS is the second of a series of James Oliver Curwood stories which are being filmed by the Pine Trees Pictures, Inc., for release through Arrow Film Corporation on the independent market. Briefly, "The Girl From Porcupine" is an Alaskan picture, capably acted and directed, with enough attractive ingredients to make it draw well on any program. It is most certainly a credit to the independent market and the exchangeman will have here a program release able to compete with a great majority of the large national distributors' offerings.

It goes in for consistent entertainment rather than spasmodic thrills. Featured in the picture are Faire Binney, an exceedingly pretty heroine, as the screen public knows, and William (Buster) Collier, Jr., who, while less widely known, shows promise and remarkable intelligence in handling himself in the emotional moments. The story concerns two old partners in the Yukon district who adopt two orphans—a boy and a girl. Early in the picture there is a vigorous fist fight between two husky miners who supply realism aplenty.

Working their claim near the village of Porcupine, the two old miners bring up their children to young manhood and womanhood. The girl, it is decided, shall go to a fashionable school in New York for an education. But the education costs far more than was expected and as a result one of the miners works himself to death in the effort to increase the output of their mine. There are a number of fashionable school scenes which will give the picture a wider appeal. Finally the miner and his "son" are forced to sell their old claim. They are robbed of their money, and stage a hold-up to get it back. As a result of this the boy is captured. Then the girl realizes that she has been taking money which could not be spared, and repenting, she returns to Alaska. The boy is sentenced to the penitentiary. To save him the girl and the miner hold-up the stage coach and rescue the boy from miscarried justice.

The picture is sprinkled with conventional directorial touches, such as a dog going through his tricks, an Alaskan dance-hall scene, and finishing school girls playing around in pajamas, which will probably make it more entertaining. The natural beauties of Maine, where the picture was made, have been made the most of, and furnish beautiful backgrounds for the action. An especially built Alaskan village adds greatly to the atmosphere. All the mining types are excellent.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Girl from Porcupine," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, has won for itself the reputation of being one of the most powerful James Oliver Curwood stories to reach the screen. Mr. Curwood is an author who needs no introduction to the screen public. His stories of the great Northwest have always made excellent picture material. "The Girl from Porcupine" is no exception. It is a story of the Yukon where men hear and answer the call of the wild—the surge of the turbulent rivers, the mystic silence of the rugged mountains. Two partners, prospectors for gold, suddenly find themselves forced to adopt a young girl and a boy. Their future life, the sacrifices they make, the sufferings they undergo, for the sake of their "children" makes up a motion picture rich in adventure, romance and pathos.

The leading roles in "The Girl from Porcupine" are played by Faire Binney, a sister of Constance Binney and conceded to be one of the most attractive screen players, and William (Buster) Collier, Jr., who, it would seem, will soon be almost as popular as his inimitable father. The rest of the cast is entirely capable. The picture was produced in the Maine forests and there are a number of beautiful scenic views.

PROGRAM READER

The latest story from the virile pen of James Oliver Curwood to reach the screen is "The Girl from Porcupine," which will be offered at the ———— theatre on ———— as the feature picture. Mr. Curwood has won for himself the reputation of being a writer unequalled for his power to bring to the imaginations of his readers all the romance and adventure of the Northwest. His stories have always made excellent screen material and "The Girl from Porcupine" is no exception. It has been excellently produced with a capable cast, heading which are Faire Binney and William (Buster) Collier, Jr., both of whom are two of the youngest and rapidly rising stars in motion picturedom.

For those who like a virile, strenuous, vigorous picture laid in the "great outdoors," no better entertainment could be provided than "The Girl from Porcupine." It is a story that grips and thrills every moment—a picture that brings Alaska before your mind with all the realism that lies within the screen's power.

CATCH LINES

James Oliver Curwood's latest picture of the wild and rugged Yukon country. A land of adventure and romance, or quick tempered men, quick to handle the gun.

Faire Binney and William Collier, Jr., a team of screen sweethearts that it would be hard to equal in a story of thrills and action, written by James Oliver Curwood.

"CHEATED HEARTS"
(Universal)

An Average Program Release

THIS picture is a tribute to American pluck and perseverance once it gets over an introductory line of action revealing a youth afraid to encourage romantic tendencies because of a knowledge that his character is weak. He is inclined to drink at the slightest provocation, and a dissolve is shown revealing Josef Swickard as a parent fond of liquor. Hence Herbert Rawlinson as one of the sons inherits the parental weakness. He gives up claim to the heart of his fiancee and seeks forgetfulness in Paris. This shot is quite unnecessary except to connect a link. A paper which he picks up informs him that his brother, who had gone to Morocco on some enterprise, is missing.

The story tells nothing up to the point when the Orient is reached. The first few scenes are society sets with considerable dancing and groupings of the characters in evening dress. The star drinks heavily and the girl is disillusioned. So he relinquishes all claim. Just why the author thought it advantageous to take the entire group to the Orient is difficult to explain—unless a final reconciliation was needed at the hour of danger. Anyway the melodrama which is developed almost resembles a new story. It takes up a thread of adventure. Hokum to be sure, but the kind of hokum that has seldom failed to get over. The youth goes into the desert to rescue his brother and finds him under the influence of some powerful drug, a victim of Oriental treachery. He has been kidnapped and held for ransom.

Some mysterious plotting occurs with the Arabs whispering and carrying on some intrigue. The hero offers to take his brother's place and bribes them with money. He escapes in the conventional fashion. The resourceful American knows how to use his fists, also a gun or two. And he wanders back to the settlement very much unkempt and ill. It seems as if the star might have grown a heavier beard after such a long absence. He is about to toss off a drink of some drugged liquor, when looking up, sights his fiancee. Thus through courage and self-control he finds his character. The picture is easy to anticipate, and it is a one character story. But it carries satisfactory action in the latter reels, provides fair atmosphere and will fit into any program schedule.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "Cheated Hearts," adapted from a popular story by Wm. F. Payson which presents Herbert Rawlinson in a romantic role. It is a story which features a young man who is uncertain of himself. Knowing his weakness for liquor he gracefully gives up any claim to the girl of his heart and leaves for Europe. It is in Paris that he learns that his brother is reported missing in Morocco and he goes to that country to conduct the search. Learning that the youth has been kidnapped, Barry Gordon employs a ruse to free him. It works successfully but the hero is left in the desert. After many adventurous incidents he makes his way back to the city where he is joined by his erstwhile sweetheart, the girl having come to Morocco with her father. The picture permits the star ample opportunity to play a heroic part. There is plenty of adventure and action. In the cast are Marjorie Daw, Doris Pawn and Josef Swickard. Hobart Henley directed.

PROGRAM READER

A dashing story of American pluck and perserverance—a colorful story of a youth who felt himself lacking in character to seek matrimony, yet his whole heart crying out for feminine companionship—a home, wife, babies and everything. That is "Cheated Hearts" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Herbert Rawlinson as the star. It is an adventurous, romantic type of story with the dashing star portraying a colorful role. It carries a breath of romance, plenty of action and considerable heart interest. You will see some corking good atmosphere coupled with some thrilling incidents. In the cast is the pretty Marjorie Daw, Doris Pawn and Anna Lehr.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a Herbert Rawlinson picture and the best idea is to concentrate upon his name and put him over. Every screengoer is familiar with his personality. He is young in years, but an old-timer on the screen. And the stories which he appears in are those dashing tales of American pluck and perserverance. So play up the picture as an interesting account of a dashing American who did not know the meaning of fear. Such captions as—"He was afraid of the influence of love, because he lacked confidence in himself. But through courage he found happiness." Mention the other Rawlinson pictures. And mention Hobart Henley, the director. Also the players. Marjorie Daw is pretty and accomplished. Play up her personality.

CATCH LINES

"Hhe lacked confidence in himself until he had proved his mettle in a supreme moment of courage." See Herbert Rawlinson in "Cheated Hearts."

"HUSH MONEY"
(Realart)

Slight Material for Feature Length

HERE is a story about a pampered daughter of the rich who in the secure place which money and society have brought her is led to face stern realities. In speeding with her fiance in a high-powered car, she accidentally runs over a newsboy and neglects to show any humanity. The rich magnate acquainted with the facts allows himself to pay hush money to keep the unpleasant incident from the papers. And the drama revolves around the girl's awakened conscience and her defiance of her rich parent. Taken as a story it reads convincingly. But on the screen it shows its limitations because the plot is padded extensively to run to feature length.

It seems to us that the director has harped on his theme too long and has paid too much attention in pointing out little details and then going over them again and again. There are lengthy episodes given up to captions and group scenes with the characters standing around moralizing or carrying on some verbal battle. In reality this accident would have proven itself a mere incident and the social whirl would have been taken up again. It is proper to make it the big theme here for it does teach a toleration of the underdog. But the director might have balanced his scenes with some incident relevant to the high social plane of the wealthy figures. There is no humiliation attached to the idea of a rich girl running over some downtrodden figure in her car. And it is hardly logical that rich parents would have paid hush money where no crime was implicated. But the little youngster is carried to the hospital and the rich girl pays him homage. She is aided by her pastor and the conflict grows out of the fiance's disregard of the lad's injury and her own verbal war with her indulgent father.

It is too much on an even key. Which does not build entertainment because there is no contrast—no surprises—no drama, but just a sample of heart interest. Certain scenes do not move at all. And with such capable actors as George Fawcett, Lawrence Wheat and Alice Brady standing around when they are gifted enough for dramatic expression gives away the weakness of the plot. It is a conventional story and it has been directed in a conventional manner. Technically it is O. K. The settings and lightings being first rate.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A modern story of New York's moneyed class is "Hush Money," written by Samuel Merwin, one of the popular fictionists of the day, and which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with Alice Brady as the star. The picture offers Miss Brady one of the finest roles she has had in some time. As Evelyn Murray she is reared under the idea that money could do or buy anything. She is a spoiled daughter of a big Wall Street operator. Then, inadvertently, the girl finds herself involved in an affair that would make splendid front page reading. Her father and her fiance both wish to hush the matter up by paying a generous sum and then forgetting it, but the girl finds courage to face her responsibility. Not only does this situation offer Miss Brady a strong dramatic role, but also, as the daughter of a New York millionaire, opportunity for a very smart wardrobe. The picture has been lavishly produced and it is acted competently by a cast that includes the dependable George Fawcett as the financier, Lawrence Wheat and Harry Benham.

PROGRAM READER

She was the petted daughter of the Big Man of Wall Street. Behind a bulwark of money she had lived serenely and selfishly. Then, unwittingly, she did something that her father and fiance wished to have kept secret. With Spartan courage the girl faced her own moral responsibilities in the matter, and accepted the painful publicity and punishment due her. What was this big, dramatic situation? What is it that might happen to every man or woman? Would you settle the problem with the humanity expressed in this vital story of today? Come and see Alice Brady in Samuel Merwin's original photoplay presented by Realart. Come and see "Hush Money." At the ———— theatre next ———— and ————.

SUGGESTIONS

In Realart's press book are a number of good exploitation stunts which could be used to advantage in advertising this feature. A series of teasers and catch lines describing "Hush Money" as the story of a girl who discovered that money is no more valuable than so many leaves when it tries to purchase a human conscience would be effective. Fake bills in the form of U. S. currency would be a good angle for exploitation. These could be scattered about town. And they would have the advantage of exciting interest in the picture. Next describe it as an up-to-date story of modern life—the power of money—the curse of money.

CATCH LINES

He trusted to his bank roll to keep the unpleasant facts from the papers. But his daughter's conscience could not be bought. See "Hush Money."

"DR. JIM"

Suffers From Undeveloped Characterization Though the Picture Is Always Interesting

A LIKELY story has been uncovered for Frank Mayo's latest expression, "Dr. Jim," which certainly builds a deal of sympathy for the characterization which he portrays although the figure of the wife is neglected in making her appreciate his duty toward society. It is the old story of a wife's misunderstanding—of a wife who prefers the little social gayeties rather than an understanding with her husband. His profession (he is a surgeon) prevents him from accompanying her upon her social whirl, and she upbraids him for his neglect, though the figure of the wife is robbed of all sympathy because of her unwillingness to accept the fact that she is a doctor's wife.

From this standpoint the author's premise is unconvincing. He has pointed his plot toward sharp contrasts. The picture is absorbing and rings genuine insofar as the surgeon is concerned, and Frank Mayo plays the part with real sincerity. Toward the middle of the picture the author cuts abruptly to a different angle—a domestic triangle, forgetting or neglecting the opportunity to develop the character of the wife. The surgeon suffers a nervous breakdown and charters a sailing vessel to recover his health. He is accompanied by his wife and the succeeding scenes disclose a brutal skipper browbeating his men at every opportunity and attempting to intrigue the wife, knowing her husband to be helpless.

The wife has deteriorated in character so completely it will be difficult for the spectator to reconcile himself to the fact that the husband eventually wins her back to a trustful attitude, although she shows no indication that her selfishness and jealousy regarding his profession have been overcome. The interlude before the final reconciliation presents some stormy domestic scenes coupled with a Jack London touch in revealing the brutality of the skipper. The surgeon has cause to operate upon his enemy and remembers that he is a doctor and not a man by bringing his patient safely through. An uncanny touch shows a sea burial, the ceremony centering about the supposed death of the skipper. But it eventually proves to be a dummy, the patient being imprisoned to hoodwink the wife. He finally releases himself and a fierce battle is waged upon the deck between the surgeon who has recovered his health and the skipper. When the former wins, his wife returns to him. She has appreciated his strength of muscle but not his strength of character. However, the picture is compelling and offers some goody thrills and dramatic punches—not the least of which is a storm at sea and a praiseworthy miniature of a storm-tossed vessel. The details and atmosphere are entirely adequate.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The leading attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "Dr. Jim," starring the popular Universal star, Frank Mayo. This gifted actor has a role which enables him to show his ample talent. It is a role which commands a world of sympathy since the hero is a surgeon who gives up the pleasures of society to perform duties of his profession. He is married to a woman as selfish as he is generous. She cannot reconcile herself to the fact that a surgeon or doctor must be at the command of the public. She would want him to sacrifice his hours of patient administration to the sick to be with her in some social diversion.

The picture builds a tense drama which shows this couple approaching the shoals of domestic incompatability. The doctor has taken a sea voyage to recuperate and he is accompanied by his wife. But ever in search of pleasure she listens to the entreaties of the captain who is a brute. He browbeats his men and taunts his patient. Then one day the doctor's health is restored. And he rewards the skipper with proper punishment. It is a story which carries strong dramatic force and is cleverly acted by the star and a highly competent company. Some of the conspicuous high lights are a storm at sea, a fight and the atmosphere of the hospital.

PROGRAM READER

When you come to the ———— theatre next ———— you will see the virile star, Frank Mayo, in one of the best pictures of his career. You will see "Dr. Jim," a story of a physician who performed noble deeds of self-sacrifice to the total disregard of any social diversion for himself. This application of duty sows a breach in the domestic side of his life. His wife rebels over his attentive duties to his patients. The doctor takes a voyage to recover his health and his wife accompanies him. What happens aboard ship to widen the breach? Does the doctor recover? Is he further humiliated? Come and see "Dr. Jim," a powerful picture which teaches a valuable lesson. An entertaining picture. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Exploit this feature as one of the best in which Frank Mayo has ever appeared. Make mention that he has a role which instantly builds sympathy and holds it to the end. Mention that it is a compelling drama of human lives—of everyday life—of the noble self-sacrifice for duty. Play up its tense drama. Get the doctors interested. Run a professional matinee. Bill it as an intensely human document of a drama which tugs at the heart and commands the greatest interest. If you have played the other Mayo pictures, then mention them and state that this is up to the same entertaining calibre.

CATCH LINES

See the popular Frank Mayo in one of the most entertaining pictures of his career. See "Dr. Jim."

"SIR ARNE'S TREASURE"
(Swedish Biograph)

Fantastic Melodrama Is Vigorous in Its Action and Atmosphere

A PICTURE presented by the Swedish Biograph is always interesting regardless of what the theme might contain. These Scandinavians are sticklers for realism, and if they feel that tragedy cannot be expressed if deprived of its fundamentals they are earnest enough to keep it intact despite the losses that might ensue at the box-office.

"Sir Arne's Treasure" must be accepted frankly for what it is—a tragic, fantastic design of a Viking race—the tale going back to a period approximating three hundred and fifty years ago. By such a lapse of time the feature takes on the aspect of a costume drama—that is if one accepts the peculiar style of dress of these picturesque people. They are idealists—these Swedish directors and producers. They are also realists. And they are unmindful of the commercial angle. Perhaps they have found the key to the movie millennium if it is to be regarded as an art.

The picture's appeal lies in its rugged backgrounds, the fiords, mountains, the land of everlasting snow and ice, and through the eloquent acting of the players. The story does not carry the human interest, the poignant drama of "A Man There Was," or "You and I," and naturally carries little box-office value. But it is rugged and honest and quaint and fantastic—this tale of the will to live and love. Three men break prison and engage on a pilgrimage of murder and arson. One of them falls in love with the sister and daughter of the victims, and he searches for a spiritual communion. By a strange course of events almost psychic in their nature, the girl is acquainted with the fact that the man responsible for her sorrow is her lover. She unwittingly aids the law in his capture and then womanlike, thoroughly impulsive, she endeavors to save him. It is a tragic end. She sacrifices her life by taking the spear thrusts intended for him. And the frozen sea breaks and the ship is ready to sail once the evil influence is eliminated.

The final scene disclosing a sea burial is one of the most impressive and unique ever picturized. It is an epic canvas—this marching of thousands of mourners bearing torches and carrying the girl's casket across the frozen wastes. The atmosphere is highly impressive which heightens the intensified drama. The overwhelming cold and snow, the rugged types—these lend an appeal not to be quickly forgotten. The leading players are Sweden's sweetheart (so called) one Mary Johnson, whose wistful, tragic, pathetic face is fairly haunting. It is a superb performance marked for its beautiful restraint and child-like appeal. Richard Lund resembles a true Viking. It is a tense story of theft, imprisonment, murder, arson and love—tinctured with a fine spirit of noble self-sacrifice. It may not convince, but its rugged power is fairly sweeping.—Length, 6,500 feet.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A vivid story of Vikings—a story which has for its background the Sweden of three hundred and fifty years ago when King John ruled over the land—a story which tells of the love of a little village maiden for a fiery-hearted nobleman—that is "Sir Arne's Treasure," which has been adapted to the screen from Selma Lagerlof's tale. It is a picture which shows the power of love to overcome all obstacles. It is a picture of a maiden who offers her heart to a man who killed her sister and made her an outcast. It is vivid in its picturesque scenery—powerful in its revelation of dramatic strokes—appealing in its spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion—and moves with the vigor characteristic of the Swedish people.

The principal players are Mary Johnson who, as the village maiden, contributes one of the most poignant and appealing performances ever seen. Richard Lund is the other star. These players are thoroughly grounded in their art. The exteriors, the fantastic design of the sets and drama—the atmosphere, the backgrounds suggestive of an old-world atmosphere—these contribute their effect in making this a picture of unbounded appeal. The supporting cast is highly efficient. The direction is highly praiseworthy.

PROGRAM READER

A vivid story of the old World. A picturesque story of the Vikings—the rugged people who live in Sweden. A powerful story of lost romance and disillusionment and self-sacrifice. A story of overwhelming love—the love that passeth all understanding. That is "Sir Arne's Treasure," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is a Swedish picture adapted from the story by Selma Lagerlof and tells a powerful story of plunder—revenge—love—hate—sacrifice—and other appealing elements. It is laid against the marvelously picturesque backgrounds of Sweden—the land of rugged mountains and snow. It portrays a race of people who live the great outdoors. Come and be thrilled. Come and see something new.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a Swedish Biograph picture and if you have played any of their other releases such as "A Man There Was" or "You and I" you have some knowledge of their worth. They are putting out pictures which stand for realism—which stand for impressive acting and most rugged backgrounds. The previous pictures will be remembered. And the present release is of the same high calibre. So if you play it mention the fact that Sweden is putting out pictures which surpass them all in the quality of vividness and realism and forceful acting. Play this one for its depth of drama—its powerful romance—its quaint story and the marvelous backgrounds. Present the fact that the public has a chance to see something new.

CATCH LINES

See "Sir Arne's Treasure," a powerful picture of romance and tragedy. A picture from Sweden. Unusually real and picturesque. Unusually well acted. A genuine treat.

"THE BONNIE BRIAR BUSH"
(Paramount)

Simple Little Love Story With Scotch Dressing

A LONG time ago a story was written called "The Bonnie Briar Bush." It was written by a minister named Watson, who used the pen name of Ian MacLaren, and he put down a simple little tale peopled by a group of picturesque characters, colored it with Scottish dialect and atmosphere and our forefathers read it with much delight. This story has reached the screen and it seems awfully old-fashioned and conventional for MacLaren's theme has served in a thousand and one patterns since the birth of the photoplay. The younger generation will probably not respond to it. One has to be a trifle old-fashioned with a leaning for quaint sentiment and romance and atmosphere to appreciate it.

There is no drama; no triangle; no play of conflict in the broad sense of the theatre. Adorned with a pretty name, the picture appeals for its sentiment like an old-fashioned lullaby. It entertains solely for its picturesque settings, for being produced in England and Scotland, the director has incorporated genuine backgrounds. The thatched cottages in careless arrangement, the thickets, the briar bushes, the lads and lassies, the conversation about "kirks"—these are the atmospheric elements which saturate this extremely simple story of a daughter and a son's defiance of their respective fathers in their passion for love. The tale presents a detached picture of Scottish life—that clannish life lived so seriously—so religiously. The simple folk go to the "kirk" and walk back to their homes. They are attired in the quaint costumes peculiar to Scotland in the fifties. The kilts are worn—and so are the spats and leggings. And the bag pipes are played and when the stern fathers relent, there is great rejoicing in a baronial hall. The ivy clinging walls of the cottages—the thatched roofs—the quaint lanes and walks—well this picture has such atmosphere. There is no humor, no contrasts except as to types. And exhibitors will probably admit to themselves that it carries very little box-office value. But if they want to give up an evening to sentiment and atmosphere, they need look no further than "The Bonnie Briar Bush." The director might have made it more of a folk-song, brushed it up a little with Scotch humor and temperament. It will charm with its backgrounds, but the plot is hoary with age and the action is as placid as a gentle wind. A good showman will put it over with a Scotch prologue—bag pipes, sword dances and folk-songs. It will need much assistance. It is almost too frail to stand by itself.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Directed by Donald Crisp.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is considered one of the best Paramount pictures made by Paramount in England will be shown at the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Bonnie Briar Bush," a picturization of Ian MacLaren's famous novel and the celebrated play by James McArthur and Augustus Thomas. Every Scot in the United States will be delighted with the outdoor scenes of "The Bonnie Briar Bush," which was for the greater part photographed in Scotland.

Donald Crisp, the director, plays the important part of the stern, rigid elder of the "kirk" whose sternness all but provokes a tragedy in his own home. The story gives one a wonderful homely and intimate view of Scottish village life. It is a picture deep with human pathos and carries a strong flavor of heart interest, appealing sentiment and romance. The cast is one of the best that could be found in England and prominent in the leading feminine role is the attractive and talented Mary Glynne.

PROGRAM READER

A story that has won the world. With all its beauty, fun, and heart-stirring drama, lived by real folks on the screen. That is "The Bonnie Briar Bush," the Paramount picture made in England, which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a celebrated cast of players and directed by Donald Crisp. This picture is adapted from the famous novel by Ian MacLaren. It is a wee bit o' Scotch and a muckle of human nature. Blended into a romance that has won the heart of the world. The picture has been taken amid Scottish scenes and is wonderfully rich in its backgrounds and its revelation of such vital elements as heart interest and sentiment. Come and see this delightfully human picture.

SUGGESTIONS

The mere fact that this is based upon a celebrated story should have some appeal. After you have made your crowd familiar with the author's name, then get busy in a tie-up with book-dealers on "The Bonnie Briar Bush." Lobby stunts should prove profitable. If there are any Scottish societies in your town doubtless you can enlist their cooperation in staging a prologue of Highland dances, or an ensemble with bagpipes and drums. A miniature parade held daily or nightly with the bagpipers marching would stimulate patronage. Your ushers can be garbed in Scottish costumes. Bill the picture as a vivid, human picture of homely humor and sentiment.

"CHIVALROUS CHARLEY"
(Selznick)

Eugene O'Brien as Fighting Irish—American Surprising Novelty

A SERIES of connecting episodes, linked into a light story; a supporting cast of no particular weight; New York and immediate vicinity, the locale and Eugene O'Brien in the title role, a tender-hearted fighting Irishman. There, you have "Chivalrous Charley."

The story by May Tully was adapted for the screen by Edward Montagne, whose powers of scenography are more responsible for the fitness of the vehicle to the Selznick star, than the source of the original.

Cast as a sort of sentimentalist, one who in earlier years delighted in reading of the chivalrous deeds of Knights of old, and idealizing his favorite hero, Sir Walter Scott, the star's work is excellent, throughout.

The nephew of a politician, named Reilly. Uncle's idea of manhood is a well built, athletic specimen perfectly able to fight his own battles, but who has the discretion to let others (including the fair sex) do the same. Young Reilly receives no sympathy from uncle when he becomes involved in continuous scrapes, where his intentions were but to protect a defenseless woman. The habit, seeming to have attached itself permanently, uncle decides to detail young Reilly to a ranch in the West, where he will learn to ride and to fight. At beginning of photoplay, nephew is expected to return to New York, cured. Newspaper clippings from West indicate the experiment a success, the young man referred to in the papers as "Double-fisted Reilly," picturized riding unmanageable steeds, and indulging in "Bill Hart" stunts, generally. Happenings en route, and following nephew's arrival, drain upon his natural inclination toward chivalry, so uncle, in disgust, "frames" a scheme to involve Chivalrous Charley into a lively squabble that will "cure" him once and for all. Contrary to plans, girl's uncle employs to act as damsel in distress, falls in love with handsome nephew, while "Double-fisted" Reilly has been obliged to prove his right to the title by fighting a squad of rough-necks, single handed, saving the girl.

The fight scenes in the last two reels are among the best ever seen on the screen. They will delight followers of Mr. O'Brien, who may have defended him against the accusation of being a "lady's man." The direction, by Robert Ellis is spendid, love interest and suspense well handled. Photography below ordinary, but the offering above average in entertaining value. —Length, 5 reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

THE CAST

His Uncle	George Fawcett
Alice Sanderson	Nancy Deaver
Her Father	D. J. Flanagan
Geoffrey Small	Huntley Gordon

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

When Eugene O'Brien is scheduled to appear in a Selznick photoplay, one expects always, to see him the object of feminine admiration, a well groomed, gentlemanly indoor variety. You think he cannot fight? Wait and see him in "Chivalrous Charley," which comes to ———— on ————, with Eugene O'Brien as "Double-fisted Riley," a fighter and a rough rider, too. He fights not only his own battles, but everyone's else, especially addicted to protection of the fair sex. He gets himself into some scrapes where he is called upon to fight rough-necks of all sizes and weights. Does he win? Watch him! Yes, Eugene O'Brien, whom you thought could wear a dress suit much better than apparel identified with the far west. The same, and yet a different 'Gene than you have seen before. If you always admired Mr. O'Brien, but wished he would have a chance to appear more manly, as "Chivalrous Charley" he will win a new spot in your heart.

PROGRAM READER

In "Chivalrous Charley," the new Selznick picture with Eugene O'Brien in the title role, the popular star is said to be at his best. He is the soft hearted but hard fisted nephew of an Uncle politician, who wishes to cure him of trying to protect the "fellow who is down," thereby getting himself into countless squabbles. He wins the title of "Double-fisted Riley," and proves that he isn't afraid to soil his clothes or tear his shirt or get beaten up, trying to help the under-dog. In this picture "Charley" is supposed to have spent months on a ranch where he learned to fear nothing, yet he returns to New York only to get into trouble again, protecting defenseless women. In the fight scenes he goes after the toughs like a Dempsey, challenges "all comers" and fights like the man he really is.

CATCH LINES

You have seen Eugene O'Brien drive a pleasure car. Ever see him drive a racer? Talk about speed. The "speed kings" aren't in it with 'Gene. Watch him turn the sharp curves!

DRAMA

No more dramatic situation has ever been conceived than this—in which the poor blind youth thinks he is a famous poet, married to a famous dancer. And when he finds that his book of poems is only a cook-book—and his wife a common woman he loathes—what then?

THRILLS

Into the crocodile pit, swarming with fifty horrible, man-eating reptiles! And to save his rival and enemy! His fight with the savage monsters is the most thrilling scene ever seen in a motion picture. No fake about this—it was filmed at the risk of the actors' lives!

ROMANCE

A penniless youth in a Mexican oil town. A dancer with all Europe at her feet! How could he hope to win her? Yet he travelled around the world to find her, won her—and then tossed her aside for the woman he had scorned. A love story that fulfils the deepest dreams of romance.

HEART THROBS

In malice and hatred she had ruined his life. Now in love and pity she would give him happiness. She would slave for him, die for him. And with tears streaming down her cheeks, she started the strangest masquerade since time began. No heart is too hard to be moved by it.

BEAUTY

The marvelous ice-ballet, the snow-queen's palace, the shimmeringly alluring tropical lagoons, the riotous temple dances of Siam—beauty of women, beauty of sets, beauty of gowns—in all of these it excels, as a feast for the eyes, anything DeMille has ever done before.

SPLENDOR

Here you will see settings so massive, that you will be overawed by their stupendous grandeur. You will see the most lavish investiture that has ever been given a picture. You will gasp at the incalculable sums that have been spent—to make incalculable sums for the world's exhibitors!

As the author of the novel "Flower of the North," I cannot fully express my appreciation of your picturization of the book. It is one of my favorite books of the big North and I am delighted with the masterly way that director David Smith has put it on the screen; not only has he kept my story in every detail but he has added to it a craftsmanship that makes of it one of the best pictures I have ever seen.

I am accused of being an ultrasevere critic of the picturization of my own stories, but in this instance I cannot find words which can too fully express my satisfaction of the splendid piece of work you have turned out with "Flower of the North." Pauline Starke is exquisite. Henry Walthall has done his best acting. The entire cast fits in like a cross section of the Northland itself. The real Jeanne D'Arcambal and I tender you our thanks.

The De Havens Have Hit It!

That elusive quality of audience appeal which makes a good comedy drama a brilliant success in the theatres; that essential "something" which draws the enthusiasm of the people and sends them away talking about the show.

"Marry The Poor Girl"—the emphasis is on the Marry—has caught it. A bit of boudoir, perhaps; innocent but entangling situations, unexpected matrimonial mix-ups, clever comedy business, flashes of real drama, speed, class, surprises, complications, climaxes and a riotous finish.

"Marry The Poor Girl" is bound to be a hit. It has the lure which puts lines in your lobby, it has a title worth exploiting, it has two stars famous on both stage and screen, it is lavish in its production, smart in its settings, satisfying in its entertainment.

It's as good a guarantee of big business as any comedy-drama can offer.

Theodora is ten

More than two years were required in the making of "Theodora." The actual production cost exceeded three million dollars.

Twenty gigantic sets, reproducing forums, amphitheatres, palaces, pavilions and gardens, built of stone, were constructed for the sets by Armando Brasini, the famous architect of the Vatican.

Over 30,000 costumes, all especially made for this production, were required.

So vast was the assemblage of actors for the production that the Italian government assigned a regiment of cavalry to keep order.

Goldwyn's sensation

Theo

The greatest motio

pictures in one

Theodora has played to big money in several of the big Eastern cities. It is the talk of the whole picture-loving public, because it has been heralded and written about in the great national magazines.

It is now going into its fourth month in New York at the Astor Theatre at $2 top. The critics of all the cities where it has played have raved about "Theodora."

What the Critics say about Theodora

Photoplay

"In attempting to describe it adequately, one looks in vain for suitable superlatives. It literally knocks one's eye out."

New York

"Collect all your 'Ohs!' your 'Ahs!' and your interjections of acure gaspology and prepare to utter them when you see "Theodora" at the Astor Theatre. It was a perpetual feast for the eye."

—Alan Dale in N. Y. American

Cleveland

"One cannot over-praise this film, in fact, cannot adequately describe or critisize it. It is beyond anything that I expected from producers of films for years to come."

—Archie Bell, Cleveland News

Detroit

"And if it cost three million dollars to achieve the amazing succession of trip-hammer punches such as one sees in this production, all I can say is that it looks like a full moneys' worth."

—Detroit Journal

Pittsburgh

"Gorgeous is a word frequently used by those who would describe dramatic scenes whose magnificence has pleased. The word is much too weak to adequately fit the settings of this production."

—Chronicle Telegraph

Chicago

"The splendors of the Byzantine Empire, the stupendous cast of 25,000 people, the terrific rain of climaxes, the under current of a frenzied love tragedy will lift the jaded movie fan out of his lethargy into the seventh heaven of attention."

—Herald Examiner

Boston

"It is a picture that will live as one of the great spectacles of motion picture art. There is a gorgeousness of pageantry which surpasses any thing that has ever been shown."

"Will Hold Every Kind of Human Being In Any Kind of Audience"

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW
December 10th, 1921

"THE LIGHT IN THE CLEARING"

A GOOD PICTURE THAT WILL HOLD EVERY KIND OF HUMAN BEING IN ANY KIND OF AUDIENCE. The screen can use more such stories, filmed as notable authors write them. Irving Bacheller's story is one of these. Mr. Hunter has sacrificed nothing of his abilities as a director in holding to the author's plan, and yet the result is a highly interesting picture whose suspense is unvarying from beginning to end.

It is a melodrama, but melodrama of a finer sort, with a real plot and several unusually thrilling situations.

Eugenie Besserer as Roving Kate, the crazed outcast daughter, registers brilliantly the most difficult part of the play. It is a great characterization of an unusually exacting role.

The photography is excellent. The titling is good and the direction compares with the best of the year.

THE AUDIENCE THAT IS NOT PLEASED WITH THIS ENTERTAINMENT WILL BE DIFFICULT TO PLEASE WITH ANY PICTURE.

"JUST AROUND THE CORNER"

Directed by Frances Marion

A Story of Classic Simplicity Everybody Gets

EVERYBODY knows the meaning of the word mother—knows a mother's sacrifices—but the mother who lives and breathes and suffers in "Just Around the Corner," becomes the mother of everybody.

We may not have suffered her acute poverty—but we can see the hand of mother—our mother—in every homelike touch she gives to her little tenement home—can struggle with her against the white sickness which weakens her steps and makes her a drag upon her children—and we suffer with her as she sees her daughter drifting out of her life, looking outside of the home for recreation and happiness.

That is the setting, the drab background against which the struggles of the mother and the temptations and pitfalls surrounding the daughter are vividly cast.

But "Just Around the Corner" is lit with ennobling faiths, bright touches of home life, winsome bits of fun, and in the end with a mother's love triumphant—sacrificing itself at the feet of a daughter redeemed.

Policies That Brought Success:

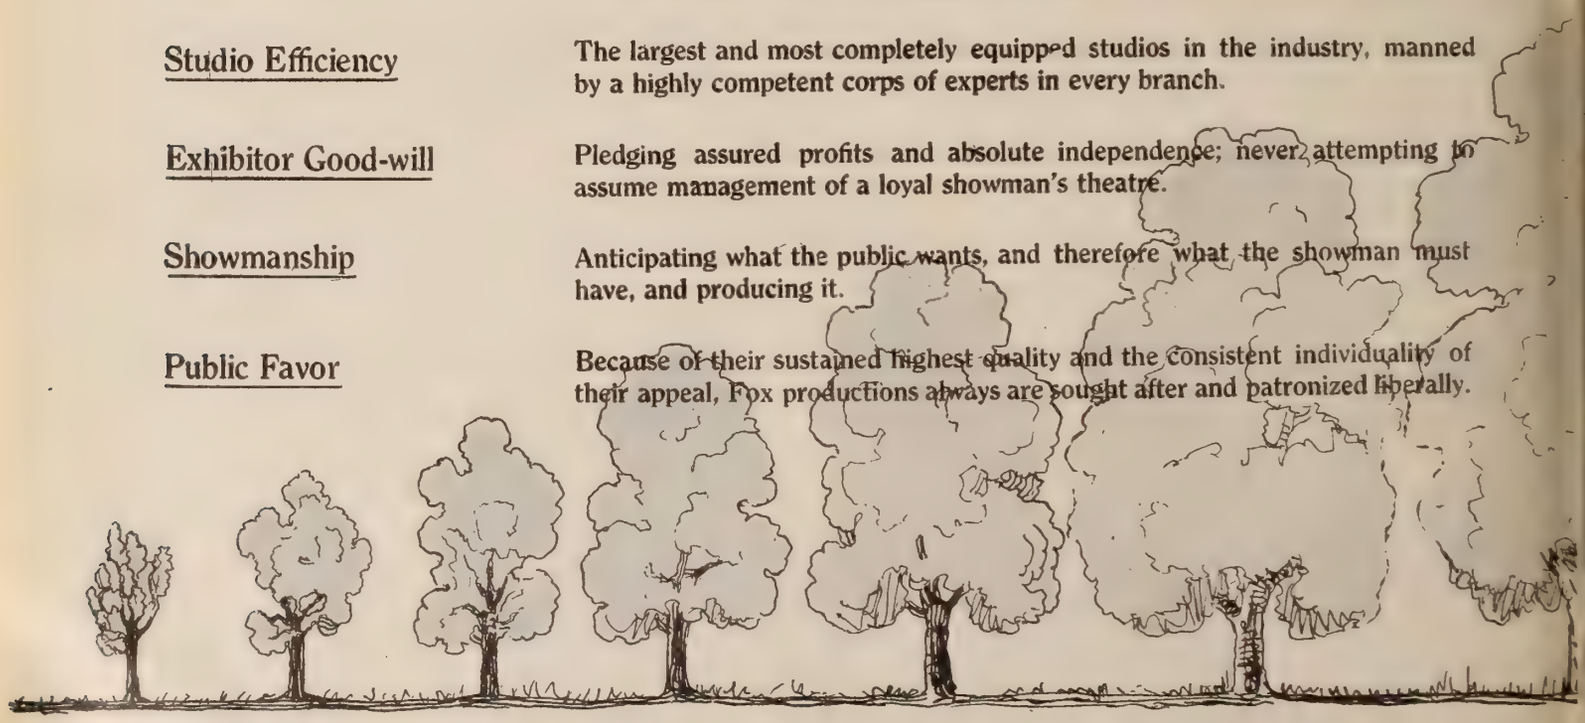
Business Integrity — The guiding hand of William Fox, a showman with a purpose fulfilled. Breaking clean at all times with showmen and the public they serve.

Production Quality — Unerringly giving the public what it wanted when it wanted it, and making each succeeding production a reflection of highest quality ideals.

Financial Resources — Making vast, judicious expenditures when necessary to advance the interests of motion pictures and the industry, the showman, and his public.

Foreign Markets Expansion — Giving the whole world the benefits of Fox's American organization and prestige and instituting studios at strategic points for the acquisition of foreign material to entertain the American public.

Perfected Organization — Every department working like clockwork with the others, each supervised by a trained executive who knows every angle of his profession—all units constantly operating as a highly effective and efficient whole.



Confidence of the Trade — Open and aboveboard in all business transactions and rigorously maintaining the highest standards of fair-square dealing.

Studio Efficiency — The largest and most completely equipped studios in the industry, manned by a highly competent corps of experts in every branch.

Exhibitor Good-will — Pledging assured profits and absolute independence; never attempting to assume management of a loyal showman's theatre.

Showmanship — Anticipating what the public wants, and therefore what the showman must have, and producing it.

Public Favor — Because of their sustained highest quality and the consistent individuality of their appeal, Fox productions always are sought after and patronized liberally.

Not Higher Prices but Higher Quality and Better Business Methods Is Our Aim

We could ask higher prices and probably we could get them, but we are allied to constructively aid producer, exhibitor and distributor.

Our constructive aid consists of—

FIRST—Furnishing the industry with the highest quality of prints obtainable.

SECOND—Furnishing these prints at prices and terms that place highest quality within reach of every producer and distributor.

THIRD—Standardizing the intricate technical requirements necessary in American laboratories so that the screens of the country can consistently show the best, both in quality and durability.

FOURTH—Providing service in the matter of prompt deliveries.

With these four constructive factors to take care of in our laboratories we haven't the time, nor the funds, to exploit stars, directors and producers with costly publicity.

J. Fitzgibbons, Regent Theatre, Bayshore, N. Y.

Richard Barthelmess' characterization of "Tol'able David" has real audience appeal. With supporting cast and story, should be a tremendous box office attraction.

Harold Franklin, Shea's Hippodrome, Philadelphia.

Marvelous. Exciting. Pleasing. In entertainment everything that a picture should be.

A. M. Rappaport, Ideal Theatre, Philadelphia.

Daniel S. Bader, Lincoln Theatre, Philadelphia.

H. B. Varner, Lyric Theatre, Lexington, N. C.

C. F. Hopkins, Wilmer and Vincent Theatre Co., Harrisburg.

I did not leave a written expression regarding "Tol'able David" because I did not want to be hasty in my opinion. I think that "Tol'able David" shows Richard Barthelmess to be a wonderful actor, just as some of his previous pictures have shown him, and the photographic work showing the scenery of the Kentucky hills and valleys is splendid. Whether the story of "Tol'able David" dealing as it does almost entirely with a detestable type of Kentucky Mountaineer, would have an appeal to the public, is a question, and I feel sure that the drawing power of the title, "Tol'able David" would be rather weak. I fail to see anything in the picture that would send an audience out to tell its friends to go to see it.

Irving Rose, Pastime Theatre, Union Hill, N. J.

A picture that the most critical and hardened movie fan will find he has to get his handkerchief ready. The entertainment is as complete as one can hope to enjoy.

They were made after viewing the picture at the Richard Barthelmess adoption dinner. Read them!

J. H. Michaels, Regent Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.
A truly remarkable picture in every way.

Lowen Pizor, Colonial Theatre, Phoenixville.
A wonderfully acted picture which holds the interest throughout. Star and cast very good. It is bound to please.

L. F. Blumenthal, National Central Tivoli, Jersey City.
The sterling acting of Richard Barthelmess is an outstanding feature of the red-blooded American drama. It is a story of a go-getter and has a popular appeal that should make a good box office attraction.

Louis L. Bollinger, Summit Theatre, West Hoboken, N. J.
It gives me great pleasure in stating that to my opinion the acting scenes and photography is wonderful, story very good and think that if changes are made in title more suggestive that it will be a box-office winner.

W. G. Hartford, Imperial Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I.
Regarding criticism on Barthelmess' picture "Tol'able David" as a whole I consider it a good picture filled with heart interest, but in my opinion it will not be a box-office attraction. It does not measure up with Barthelmess' work in "Broken Blossoms" or "Way Down East." The support was exceptionally good; types well chosen; direction good; splendid scenery; excellent photography. However, with three deaths and one injured for life, it seems to me there should have been more comedy injected into the picture. The director missed the opportunity in this respect. There could have been some good comedy scenes in the country grocery store and there was a fine chance to pull off an old-fashioned rural barn dance which would in a measure offset the deaths which occur in this picture. This criticism may not be what you want, but it is a frank expression of my idea of the picture.

Wilmer and Vincent.

H. J. Schad, Colonial Theatre, Reading, Pa.
Full of heart appeal and a wonderful punch.

Charles Segal, Philadelphia.
A picture that will touch the hearts of all. It sure will be a box office winner. Mr. Richard Barthelmess is some star, and deserves a lot of credit as well as Mr. King, the director.

W. S. Ayer, Exeter Theatre, Boston.
Splendid character work but scenes are held too long in planting atmosphere in first reels which causes picture to drag. After action begins work and direction fine but too many gruesome scenes introduced. Picture too morbid throughout. No comedy relief. Do not think type of story exactly what public wants. Barthelmess does splendid work. In more pleasant story think he will prove well worth while.

A Regrettable Distortion of Fact

Thursday Morning—

AT the hour of going to press we are taking it upon ourselves to set right, so far as we can, the highly sensational story which appears this morning in the New York papers—and probably the Associated Press reports—on the reorganization of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The newspaper headlines and the terms of the articles convey the impression to the public that an all-embracing combine of producers and distributors has been formed—for commercial and political purposes—and that Postmaster General Hays has been asked to head it.

* * *

The simple facts are these: That an ordinary reorganization of the present National Association is in progress and that Postmaster General Hays has been seriously considered to head it for the very same reasons that the name of ex-President Taft was mentioned at the Cleveland convention last year as a possible head of the Exhibitors' League.

That is all there is to a trade matter which, as soon as they got an inkling of it, the newspaper reporters eagerly and naturally jumped to as a " gigantic movie combine."

The object of the reorganization, so far as we know, is simply to make the present Association more comprehensive as to membership, more active and more influential. Its aims remain unchanged. They are, as before, to promote the good of the industry at large, and defend it against unjust legislation, the same kind of organization in scope and principle as is had by every other industry in the country. One main object sought by the new association is to secure effective co-operation with the M. P. T. O. A., so that in all outside matters the industry may maintain an effective unity.

* * *

The trade papers knew of the reorganization of the National Association some weeks ago. They considered it best, we feel sure, to wait until it was in some way perfected so that the full facts could be given to the trade. In fact, we are frank to state it was at the suggestion of this publication for one that, since a few facts were generally known by hearsay, a letter be sent to the trade papers asking that any spasmodic news be withheld until the full and authoritative announcement could be made.

Evidently these letters reached the New York World—how or why is inconceivable.

* * *

The thing is exceedingly regrettable—to say the least.

We are writing this editorial simply to set the exhibitor right in the matter.

This distortion of facts, this sensationalizing of an ordinary trade story will go to the eager eyes of every enemy of this industry and be used accordingly. Our friends will be puzzled. The legislator will be more confounded than ever. The public at large will get another wrong slant on this industry and its aims.

Why do we continue to have a deluge of bad publicity and no publicity at all that is even fairly just to the industry?

We have seen fat thrown recklessly in the fire before but never has it bubbled so much and so stingingly.

Work With a Vim

Just got through reading your editorial in the NEWS issue of Nov. 26th, and here is my answer to the question you ask, "What is it that the exhibitor can do?" etc.:

Go to work with a Vim. Work with a VIGOR, and the result will be VICTORY. How do you like it? It tells the story in every sense just the same.

You have a man down there, Mr. J. S. Dickerson, who knows me personally, and he will tell you the sort I am. However, there is just one addition to the above: Plain BRAINS and common sense. What I mean by that is this: Use the brains God gave him when it comes to buying his merchandise for sale in his theatre. Unless a man can BUY, and BUY GOOD things right these days, he is a goner.

In June I formed a company here and purchased the real estate on which this theatre is located. It had ruined its former owners through too liberal buying both in quantity and price. When the writer started on July 1st he was immediately confronted with a PACK of contracts which would have taken several years to fulfil. However, as is always the case, the film managers are human and are always willing to listen to reason if you use REASON with them. I can honestly say that to date I have NOT found but two exceptions to this statement out of TWENTY. The result proves that if "a man's a man" he may expect a man's consideration to his arguments whether it is in the exhibition of motion pictures or selling HOOTCH.

For my part I say: Let's stop whining; work a little harder and more intelligently, and we'll all be happy.

I am very sincerely yours,

ROSS A. MCVOY,
The Temple Theatre, Geneva, N. Y.

Cooperation Needed

Business has been decidedly off the past summer. There was some unemployment, and then the people slacked up on buying. We closed two of our smaller houses, which reduced expenses some, but in our larger houses we increased our orchestras and bought the strongest pictures to be had. Now, with our winter visitors coming in and our home folks employed, it looks as though we will have at least a satisfactory winter season.

As to just what the people want in the way of pictures, I wish I knew. One thing I do know and that is they want clean pictures, and that is the only kind I will book for our houses. There are plenty of pictures, and good pictures too, so the exhibitor has no trouble in selecting good programs, but to get them at a price which will show a profit to the house is another thing.

Tampa is listed as a city of 51,000 population. When the distributor sets a price upon a picture for Tampa they base the price upon that population. They do not investigate local conditions. They do not seem to know that Ybor City, with its 18,000 people, is a part of Tampa. The people of Ybor City are mostly Latin, and they patronize the four theatres over there. We get very little patronage from that section. Then we have around 12,000 negroes in Tampa. They have their own theatres. So, counting the suburbs, we have about 25,000 people from whom we must draw our business, instead of the 51,000 we are credited with.

If the distributor would investigate these local conditions, see what the exhibitor is up against, and meet him half way, they would get his friendship and co-operation. Producers and distributors have large investments and expense, and, of course, are entitled to a fair return, but we, too, have large investments and expenses and are entitled to a like return. I want them all to make money, but, by golly, we want to make some money too.

C. D. COOLEY,
Consolidated Amustment Co., Tampa, Florida.

"Stick to the Ship!"

"Seeing it through" is merely a matter of making up one's mind and "hopping to it," so to speak.

As the mariner of old set his sails to drift along in the sea's "dead calm," so the exhibitor must adjust his affairs when the winds of prosperity die down and tranquil waters separate him from the horizon that holds forth promises of successful showmanship.

Possibly it was because I was born and brought up—and still dwell and am in business—on the shores of old Lake Erie, that I pictured myself a vessel master when the lull of adversity began to loom; acted accordingly and soon found myself prepared to cope with the various elements entering into its make-up, when eventually it became a realization.

The first thing I did, once I was convinced that there was slow sailing ahead, was to call my "crew" together for a conference. By my "crew" I mean my employees; my assistant, cashier, operators, musicians, ushers and others rendering service essential to the operation of my theatre.

I had an advantage over a great many exhibitors, I'll admit, for I had a loyal "crew." I knew it was loyal. In assembling it loyalty was the standard by which I gauged the various individuals who, from time to time, had entered my employ.

Everything being as it was, there was not the slightest semblance of mutiny.

It was agreed in conference that inasmuch as "the old boat"—the theatre, of course — meant employment — in fact, "beans and biscuits"—to every one of us, we would stand together and see her into the breezes of prosperity regaling the dim distance.

And that's what we're doing—standing together.

I have had to cut pay, but in the cutting I have shared adversity with those directly affected on a fifty-fifty basis. My employees realize this fact and are making the best of the situation confronting with me. They smiled when we discussed the future and decided to stick together. They are still smiling. And a smile, by the way, means a lot around a picture theatre. It's a puller and no mistake.

I have not advanced prices, having felt —and now feeling—that ten cents for children and thirty cents for adults in the afternoon, and fifteen cents for the youngsters and thirty-five cents for the grown-ups in the evening, is fair, in view of the fact that my theatre has a seating capacity of 725, and there is, as a rule, plenty of room. I have lessened the quantity of advertising space in the newspapers consumed ordinarily, but not to any great extent. This action was prompted by not one but several advances in advertising rates.

There is truly truth in the old saying, "Advertising pays." It is also true that there are such things as "judicious advertising" and "injudicious advertising." Prevailing "times" have taught me the difference.

While I have found it necessary to lower the standard of my house somewhat —that is, present the "cheaper" pictures more often than I would under normal conditions—I have given the very best I could afford at all times, and, having selected deliberately and carefully, rejoice today in the knowledge that the public looks to my theatres instead of to my competitors for "quality."

I have exercised ordinary business judgment in the management of my theatre. I have saved here and there without detracting from the pleasure-affording propensities of my presentations.

Most managers would be surprised to know just what can be saved if saving is resorted to in earnest. For instance, very often a penny postal card or a sheet of paper, an envelope, a two-cent stamp and a little energy, will bring the same results as a one dollar telephone message or a fifty-cent night letter or telegram.

A little bit of the business judgment that one would exercise in the running of a meat market or a dry goods store, will see most any exhibitor through the "calm" from which I believe we are emerging.

I might write on, but what's the use?

"Seeing it through" will eventually be consummated if the exhibitor will but—

Smile, and—

Play to the Family

Eliminate filth and substitute in its stead clean, wholesome pictures that the entire family may enjoy.

In our theatre we have shown nothing but clean pictures of the highest possible type. I was told it could not be done; that we must pander to the tastes of the sensual and the depraved. I was of the belief that the public was sick and tired of the sex appeal and wanted something clean and wholesome. I have used such features as "The Queen of Sheba," "The Toreador," "A Connecticut Yankee," and pictures of that type with startling success. For the first time since the Liberty theatre was built we have played to capacity houses each night and have been compelled time and again to play continuous shows instead of following our usual policy of matinee and night performances in order to care for the crowds. This no buncombe; it's the truth, and merely is cited to show what can be done by exhibitors who will stop to consider that mothers and fathers want pictures which they are not afraid or ashamed to have their growing children view. I believe a better day is in store for motion pictures everywhere as a result of the campaign to eliminate filth, and I am sure that in our theatre no picture ever will be shown which could possibly offend any one.

The exchange man and the producer should always place himself mentally in the position of the exhibitor. He should ask this question of himself: "Will this picture appeal to men, women and children from every angle? Is it a picture which will enhance the reputation of the house?" If the answer to both is not "Yes" then he should reject that offering.

Advertising from a selective standpoint—that is, using care and a careful checking system to determine the best mediums is another plan. I want the papers which reach the homes, the papers which are read after the dinner hour and which are so reliable that their reviews of my pictures are taken for gospel in those homes. If I show a bad picture—and perhaps one is liable to creep in—by bad I mean one which lacks appeal—I want the critics of the daily newspapers to frankly say so. For when the public learns that they are telling the truth and are not hired press agents a favorable criticism from them means many dollars to our house.

Plugging the Leaks

The Garfield theatre, a neighborhood theater of 700 seats catering to a family trade with an admission price 17c, children 11c, and on special big features an admission price of 22c, is successfully "seeing it through."

Despite constantly encroaching competition, the attendance at the Garfield is ever on the increase. On every side at varying distances the Garfield is surrounded by the stiffest of competition, but still it keeps its place in the hearts of the west side residents. Patronage remains faithful because no detail is overlooked in catering to their wants. A mailing list of 1,200 names sends a program to their mail box every Monday morning. Patrons are invited by an announcement on the screen to get on the program mailing list.

For the men patrons who do not like to throw away the greater part of a good cigar we have a checking receptacle in the lobby to place their cigar in till they leave. Also beside the "Check Your Cigar" container is a box of matches for their convenience.

Every Wednesday is "Jazz Night," and this always attracts capacity business and draws all the young folks. Jazz Night we show a feature and have a 25-minute Jazz Frolic, consisting of jazz music, comedy, singing and dancing.

Look back over the big pictures from two to four years ago, such as "Miracle Man," "Mickey," Talmadge features. Pick them out and run one or two of them a week and see if they do not draw better than some of the late releases you are running.

Pick four good comedies from those made by Keaton, Semon, Sennett, Cook, Chaplin, Lloyd, Al St. John, Johnny Hines or Lloyd Hamilton and run an "All Comery Night." It does not cost any more than a regular feature show and it is something different and draws all of the comedy fans and gives you a special night about once a month.

For the children have a "Serial Club" with some gift or prize to those who attend every episode. A children's "Candy Matinee" also draws good. Here in Chicago we buy a box containing five molasses kisses for one and three-fourths cents each in 250 lots.

Stimulate community interest and bring residents of your neighborhood to your corner as frequently as possible. Talk to your neighborhood merchants and have them increase the illumination in their show windows and change their window display at least once a week.

Last but not least, keep these three words on the end of your tongue for all who ask: "Business is good." And have your local merchants remember the same slogan.

Garfield Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

Go Strong on Advertising

The writer has only recently taken over the directorship of this theatre from the Allen's Capitol at Cleveland, where he resigned to come here. After looking over the ground and the possibilities he decided to make the jump. The theatre is situated on the dividing line between Windsor and Walkerville, across the river from Detroit. On Sundays the people go over the river for their amusements. In many cases they see features long before they are released here; in other cases we get pre-lease over Detroit. Business conditions are bad.

Contracts were immediately made for a second run on the big specials and the patrons were advised that all the big pictures worth while would be shown at the Walkerville. The scale is 25 cents and 35 cents, practically the same as at most houses. I paid prices for film subjects far below what the house had in previous days. I reduced the newspaper bill about 25 per cent and used that amount for house adver-

Business "Picking Up" in Buffalo Territory

Members of the F.I.L.M. Club of Buffalo are looking to the future with confidence. At the big get-together meeting of the organization in the Hotel Iroquois last week every speaker told of a general "picking up" in all parts of the territory, and a quick return to normalcy was predicted. One speaker, who is an exhibitor as well as an exchange man, declared that records at his theatre showed a 30 per cent increase over last year's receipts.

Allan S. Moritz, president and manager of the Buffalo Paramount office, presided. Mr. Moritz discussed the reorganization of the club and the excellent results which were being obtained in the campaign to better relations between exhibitor and distributor.

The evil of "bicycling" was discussed by Archie Moses, manager of the Buffalo R-C pictures Corporation exchange, who said that much of it was going on in Rochester, Syracuse and Binghamton. W. A. V. Mack, Pathe chief, talked on co-operation among the salesmen. Henry W. Kahn, manager of the Metro office, discussed the growth of the club and predicted that every exchange in Buffalo would be a member in six months.

Maryland's Censor Board Now Under Fire

In Maryland the board of censors is the object of considerable discussion at the present time. On the one hand are the "pro's" who insist that the board must continue as a necessary welfare factor; on the other side there appears to be a large number who—to quote an editorial in the Baltimore Evening Sun—"rage and roar that the joy has been taken out of the movies as well as out of life generally by the moralists." Commenting on the situation, the Baltimore Evening Sun writes in part as follows:

"Censorships over the morality of this or that are like that—nobody agrees about where the line should be drawn except the censor. To a certain type of mind a real picture of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden would be shockingly obscene, and a picture of the Venus de Milo should be barred from the mails unless the statue was taken in a shirtwaist and skirt. At the other extreme are the prurient-minded, to whom the vilest pictures are the most entertaining. Fortunately, the latter are in such minority that it would not pay to cater to them even were it allowed.

"While there is a large proportion of movie fans who like to see something more or less spicy, it is also true that the great majority do a good bit of censoring on their own account. Censorships of all kinds are as a rule inordinately stupid. There should be no place for them in decent and intelligent America."

Hugo Ballin and George S. Hellman of Hugo Ballin Productions

Shubert-Ballin Discussion

TWO weeks ago Lee Shubert announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS a vaudeville service for exhibitors. In his announcement, Mr. Shubert declared this service would help "to bolster up their drooping business," and he also volunteered the opinion that the day of the motion-picture as a complete entertainment had passed. Last week Hugo Ballin, the producer, made reply with a view to proving that the picture was entirely adequate by itself to furnish satisfactory entertainment. This week, Mr. Ballin goes a step farther and recommends to Mr. Shubert the use of the motion-picture in vaudeville houses as highly beneficial to the business of the variety houses. Mr. Ballin writes:

"My dear Mr. Shubert:

"The scores of theatres operated by B. F. Keith, Marcus Loew, Mr. Proctor, Mr. Fox and those other gentlemen, who, with you, now constitute the most powerful operators of variety theatres in the world, launched these enterprises with vaudeville as the sole attraction. That motion pictures were later introduced into the programs of these theatres was neither an accident nor caused by any desire on the part of the proprietors to lengthen their bills.

"Motion pictures were introduced into vaudeville houses to stimulate business and attract greater crowds. And, from being the added attraction, the motion picture has become the feature attraction.

"Motion pictures, my dear Mr. Shubert, are what all vaudeville houses need to stimulate business. The motion picture business at present does not present its most flourishing aspect; nor do the legitimate and variety angles of the theatrical business, though we realize the fact that these businesses are suffering much less than 95 per cent of other industries, reacting from war-time over-inflation.

"However, to suggest to motion picture exhibitors to use vaudeville to attract business is not good policy for this reason:

"The exhibitor has attracted his clientelle because he shows pictures. His patrons come to see just that—pictures. On the other hand, visiting the vaudeville theatre, the patron looks forward to and expects the utmost variety for the fare presented to him. If there is a picture on the bill, the attraction becomes much greater proportionately than merely the addition of another vaudeville act (which incidentally might cost the showman even more money) to a seven or eight act variety bill.

"You see, Mr. Shubert, the vaudeville man has a much greater profit to derive from employing the motion picture than the motion picture has from employing the vaudeville booking agent.

"In a statement issued by your office, which appears in the current Motion Picture Trade Publications, you cite, as instruments used by the exhibitor for greater patronage, Miss Theda Bara, drawing, you say, $3,000 per week, and Victor Herbert, whose price you quote as $1,500 per week. You see, Mr. Shubert, the motion picture exhibitors in these instances have drawn upon people interested, primarily, in a motion picture personality—and it might not be a bad idea to recruit more of them for the variety stage and an outstanding figure in the music world. This does not impress your point, Mr. Shubert.

"Frankly, your letter and article interested me extremely. Any suggestion that would help the motion picture exhibitor's business, is one to be carefully considered, and, offered as such, I think I may speak for the industry in acknowledging it cordially.

"Now, Mr. Shubert, may I ask you to consider a suggestion of my own? It is known that the present vaudeville competition is a tremendous one. Different factions are using every means at their command to attract business. I am absolutely confident that the motion picture judiciously chosen and exploited, as it would be by the various companies from which you draw your attractions, would benefit you.

"Do not think that my attitude bespeaks a downright condemnation of vaudeville as a motion picture theatre stimulant. Like every other fair-minded man, I am open to conviction—as I am certain you must be.

"Cordially,

"HUGO BALLIN."

Iowa M. P. T. O. in Drive for 100% Membership

Word from the Iowa Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America advises that a state-wide campaign has been launched with a view to enroll every independent exhibitor operating in Iowa as a member of the organization. The campaign was decided upon at a meeting of the executive-committee on November 20th at the Savory Hotel, Des Moines. The drive is proceeding by Congressional districts with an executive committee member in charge of the work in each district.

Phil. A. Schlumberger of Denison resigned from the executive committee in favor of A. J. Johnson of Ft. Dodge owing to the presence of two members in the same district.

Those present at the Des Moines meeting, November 20th, included J. C. Duncan, Thomas A. Brown, M. R. Tournier, Eller Metzger, Dr. J. W. Pence, Alexander Frank, A. J. Deibold, W. E. Waterhouse, George Cruzen, B. I. VanDyke and P. A. Schlumberger.

Radical Changes in Minneapolis Theatre World

Rumors of startling changes in the theatrical world in Minneapolis the first of the year were confirmed recently by I. H. Ruben of the Finkelstein and Ruben enterprises who returned from a five weeks conference with leading theatrical men at New York.

According to reports, Minneapolis is all set to take her part in the war which is destined to spread over the entire country, instigated by the Shubert interests.

According to Mr. Ruben, the State theatre, Minneapolis' newest picture house and sister to the Capitol theatre at St. Paul, will show one Shubert headline vaudeville act every week in addition to the regular film program, commencing January 1. Later the Shubert vaudeville bills will be presented at either the Shubert theatre now featuring a stock company, or at the New Garrick theatre, at present a motion picture house. The New Lyric is also being considered for either stock or the vaudeville and the Lyric, will be closed to determine the advisability of remodeling it for stock or vaudeville.

New policies will be inaugurated at all the downtown first run picture houses of which, Finkelstein and Ruben control the majority. The first entire Shubert bill will come into the city February 1. The Capitol theatre at St. Paul will play the same acts that run at the Minneapolis State and the New Garrick, St. Paul, now a picture theatre will eventually house the Shubert vaudeville.

The fight has been prompted through the encroachment of the movie interests by the Keith and Orpheum interests, it is said.

3 Local Get-Togethers of Franchise-Holders

First Nat'l Exhibitors of Washington, Detroit and San Francisco Hear Delegates' Reports

LOCAL "get-togethers" of First National franchise-holders were held last week in Washington, Detroit, and San Francisco. At each of the meetings the delegates who attended the recent national "get-together" at Chicago, submitted reports of the proceedings at the Chicago gathering and endorsed the decisions arrived at during the sessions there. Advisory boards were appointed at each of the local meetings to deal directly with the First National home-office in New York on all matters calling for adjustment between the executive officers and the individual franchise-holders. In each instance, the meetings adopted resolutions of confidence in and endorsement of the officers and executive committee of First National.

Nearly fifty franchise holders from Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia assembled on November 29th at the Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., answering the call of Guy L. Wonders, Thomas D. Goldberg and Frank Durkee, delegates to Chicago. Harry M. Crandall, as temporary chairman, opened the meeting after luncheon, and turned the chair over to Mr. Wonders. Telegrams of welcome were read from J. D. Williams, Harry Schwalbe, Al Lichtman, Paul C. Mooney and James R. Grainger.

Then Frank Durkee arose to make his report to his fellow franchise holders. He told in detail how the "Get Together" at Chicago had been conducted. He explained the workings of the sectional meetings, the open and unconditional manner in which their reports were presented to the executive committee on the floor of the general meeting, and declared the executive committee had endeavored to answer frankly and explain every question and problem laid before them.

"There was not a delegate that did not express himself as 100% satisfied," said Mr. Durkee.

Harry Crandall gave the exhibitors present a detailed account of how negotiations with producers were carried on and how exhibition values are arrived at, in order to give the franchise holders a clear understanding of the numerous difficulties encountered all along the line by the executive committee in endeavoring to make sound and practical so revolutionary a plan as the First National one, with the minimum amount of friction and dissatisfaction for everybody concerned.

The Washington meeting elected the following members to the Advisory Board: For Virginia, Jake Wells of Richmond and E. P. Wine of Harrisburg; for Maryland, Frank Durkee of Baltimore, Guy Wonders of Baltimore, and H. Clay Evans of Lonaconing; for the District of Columbia, William C. Murphy and Harry M. Crandall.

The Michigan franchise holders met on Wednesday, December 1st at the Hotel Statler, Detroit. Exhibitors from every section of the state were on hand, and only a comparatively small number were obliged to wire their regrets at being unable to get away from business in their sections.

George W. Trendle, general manager and attorney for John H. Kunsky, original franchise holder in Michigan, presided at the meeting, which lasted from 11 o'clock in the morning until 4:30 in the afternoon, with a luncheon at noon.

James C. Ritter, of the Rialto theatre, Detroit; W. S. Butterfield, president of the Bijou Theatrical Circuit, with headquarters at Battle Creek and Joseph R. Denniston of the Family theatre, Monroe, the three delegates to the Chicago convention, were on the floor explaining in every detail just how their matters were handled and what plans the organization had for the future.

The Michigan Advisory Board, composed of five members, was then elected. The following members were chosen for the board: James C. Ritter, Rialto, Detroit; Joseph R. Denniston, Family, Monroe; Glen Cross, Regent, Battle Creek; A. J. Kleist, Jr., Oakland, Pontiac; George W. Trendle, Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises, Detroit.

A resolution was passed asking the home-office to approve or reject playing contracts within 10 days from the date of signing, in order to avoid embarrassment to both the exhibitor and the exchange.

The regional "get-together" of Northern California franchise holders was held Nov. 29 at San Francisco. The advisory board appointed consists of the following: Oliver Kehrlein, Kinema theatre, Fresno, chairman; Robert McNeil, New Lyceum theatre, San Francisco; Will Krahn, Chimes theatre, Oakland; George Mann, Rialto theatre, Eureka; C. C. Griffin, New Piedmont theatre, Oakland; Ellis J. Arkush, Stanford theatre, Paloalto, Joseph Bauer, Wigwam theatre, San Francisco.

Sam Y. Edwards, manager of the San Francisco exchange, called the meeting to order and introduced Roy Hall, general manager of Turner & Dahnken, main franchise holder in the San Francisco territory, the temporary chairman, who pointed out the benefits that would accrue from the carrying out of the "get-together spirit" in the future. He then relinquished his post to P. J. Hanlon, of Valleys, chosen permanent chairman.

The reports of the three delegates to the Chicago meeting, C. C. Griffin, Joseph Bauer and Ellis J. Arkush, were then heard.

Each of the three speakers was called upon to answer numerous questions shot at them by those in attendance, and all were answered to the complete satisfaction of the franchise holders.

Following the addresses, the delegates resolved unanimously that a vote of confidence and thanks be given to Messrs. Griffin, Bauer and Arkush, for their successful handling of the affairs of the Northern California franchise holders, and to Manager Edwards and his staff for their work

Clean-up Week

With what is said to be the laudable desire of leading exhibitors and prominent exchange men in the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey zone to clean up all pending grievances affecting money, credit, dates or service before New Year's Day a committee from the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City has inaugurated "Clean Up Week" December 24 and 31.

William Marsh is chairman and his associates on the committee are Charles Rosenzweig, John A. Hammell, S. H. Fabian and I. Schmertz.

Hundreds of placards are already on display in all the exchanges of Greater New York with the following announcement: "Everybody's Clean Up Week, December 24 and 31."

Fifty thousand gummed stickers are being sent to every film exchange to be affixed on all envelopes carrying correspondence or invoices to theatres or exchanges.

The exchanges are all receiving letters from the committee urging that if they owe any money, credit or service to any theatre that they should meet the exhibitor more than half way in the endeavor to clean up all trade grievances in the last week of the year so as to start 1922 with a clean slate.

Every theatre in this territory will also receive communications from this committee asking them to square all money, credit or dates before New Years.

Charles L. O'Reilly, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, is said to have declared that he is for anything that will enable every theatre owner to eliminate trade grievances and start 1922 with all decks cleared for action.

William Brandt, President of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, is reported to have said that the committee could count upon his enthusiastic co-operation.

Sydney S. Cohen, National President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has always emphasized the necessity of eliminating trade grievances within the trade.

I. E. Chadwick, President of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City, said that he could conceive of no happier New Year than the knowledge that all pending grievances between theatres and exchanges would be settled during "Clean Up Week," December 24 and 31.

City Council Bans Showing of Clara Hamon Picture

Following the announcement of a local theatre in Ardmore, Okla., that the Clara Smith Hamon picture, "Fate," would be shown there, the City Council of Ardmore met and issued an order prohibiting the exhibition of this picture in the city.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS ON TIMELY TOPICS

Mr. W. A. Johnson,
Editor, Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—

I realize that advertising is the source of livelihood of every trade journal and that the producers are also the advertisers. Unfortunately, this must always be so. No one could expect a trade journal to alienate its principal source of revenue. I would not expect it, but it is time that some trade journal, with the courage of its convictions, poured a volley into the trenches of those leeches who are bleeding the small exhibitor white.

Greed is not peculiar to the producer. The artists first contracted it and caused the first advance in admission prices. They still suffer with it. The exhibitors have also, in many cases, succumbed to the disease but the real heavyweight champions of the greedy class are the producers and their distributing units.

There is no profit in abusing the men higher up. I have always refrained from it but greed is becoming a real threat to the continued existence of the small exhibitor.

During the "mad" days when money was plentiful and everyone was eagerly seeking a place to spend it, the small town theatre made a profit. Not a big profit, but quite satisfactory. Film rentals were doubled, tripled, quadrupled and in many cases they were multiplied ten or twelve times, until today we are paying more for a two-reel comedy than we formerly paid for a good five-reel feature.

In spite of this, he had something left at the end of each week as money was then the cheapest thing on earth.

When the slump came the price of commodities receded. We, of the small towns, had many high-priced pictures under contract and played them in the face of certain loss because we had to do it or loss our deposits. We bore these losses, happy in the thought that the producers would be ready to recognize conditions when it came time to make new contracts, and reduce rentals in proportion to the loss in our gross receipts. Did they do this? Ask any man who has tried to buy pictures. WE HAVE NO RECORD OF A SINGLE EXCHANGE WHICH WAS WILLING TO RENEW CONTRACTS FOR THE SAME HIGH PRICES WE PAID WHEN BUSINESS WAS AT ITS PEAK. Every one of them demanded an increase of from fifteen to fifty per cent over the highest rentals the industry had ever known.

A close check reveals the fact that we paid out almost sixty per cent of our gross receipts last year in film rentals. How can any theatre exist in the face of heavy overhead expenses, high advertising costs and grinding taxes, on forty per cent of his gross?

As an example: We recently applied for quotations on three of the successful pictures of the year. We were informed that they would play us for FIFTY PER CENT of the gross receipts,provided we would GUARANTEE THEM TWELVE HUNDRED DOLLARS AS THEIR SHARE FOR EACH OF THESE PICTURES. We have never grossed twelve hundred dollars in any week in this town with the best located house we have. In order to get either of these productions we would have to guarantee them more for their share than we have ever done in an entire week with four different pictures. And up to the present we have been paying a rental of FIFTY DOLLARS for pictures made by the same stars.

The colossal gall of a producer to want to butt a bare print, which cost less than five hundred dollars against an investment of seventy-five thousand dollars which is represented by the theatre. The proper percentage basis, without a guarantee, would be seventy-thirty, with the seventy going to the house.

Another producer has made about four good pictures in the past five years. These four he has only produced in the last year. After forcing a New York run for two or three of these he sends his salesmen out to book these on a percentage basis, provided the exhibitor will buy two unknown pictures at prices four times greater than he has been paying for the pictures of the same stars. IF YOU DON'T BUY THESE YOU CAN'T EVEN BOOK THE BIG ONE ON PERCENTAGE. I believe they used to call the grocer who compelled you to buy ten dollars worth of groceries to get ten pounds of sugar during the sugar shortage, a profiteer. If he was a profiteer, what term will describe this producer?

Franchise, sub-franchise, group-bookings. Those are the pet names for the new grafts. If you tell them you cannot pay those rentals and continue to exist, they advise you to "raise prices" when about one out of every ten of them is good enough to satisfy your patrons at program prices.

Picture prices must stay down if it is to remain the popular entertainment it has grown to be. The exhibitor seems to be the only one who realizes this. National advertising campaigns costing small fortunes, which the producer collects from the exhibitor in increased rentals, have got to stop. Million dollar contracts to a few screen favorites must be eliminated. The so-called "BIG PICTURES" at legitimate theatre prices has got to stop. Crazy directors who spend fortunes in making a picture that gives no better satisfaction than the old program feature must be eliminated from the industry. Sanity must return and return quickly if the motion picture industry is to weather the storm of hard times. The little exhibitor is the foundation of the industry. He has got to be considered. Rentals have got to come down to a point where the small town can buy the big pictures while they are worth running. If they do not, then the little exhibitor is going to close up shop and open a Bevo joint or some other legitimate undertaking that is not dictated to by hogs.

Our firm has had, for years, a reputation for being eminently fair with all exchanges. We have never presumed upon the fact that we had a "closed town" to force the exchange to sell their pictures to us at a small figure. We wanted the best and newest productions and were willing to pay for them so long as the price was within reason, but now we cannot even buy a picture until it has been worn threadbare. The splendid reputation we have built up with our patrons is being jeopardized by the producer's greed. We offer the very top dollar at which we can hope to make money and they laugh at us. Where are we to turn? There is but one hope, Shubert Vaudeville.

When the price of admission gets above a certain figure the public of small towns will not pay it. Today it is possible to buy a good vaudeville bill for what good pictures will cost and the public will pay more for vaudeville than it will for pictures. If the Shuberts extend their activities to the small town, the theatres may find there a means of continuing in business. If this fails, and the producer does not recede from his exorbitant demands for pictures, there'll be more closed theatres in the United States in the next six months than there are "boobs" in New York.

Very truly,
E. W. Collins,
Grand theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Editor, Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—

As the result of a spirited discussion held at the last meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, I have been instructed to write you this letter.

The Motion Picture Directors' Association feels that it would be to the material advantage of the industry if certain extravagant and unnecessary phases of motion picture presentation were curtailed.

We mean specifically:

1. Atmospheric prologues,
2. Vaudeville numbers,
3. Expensive orchestras.

In almost all the larger cities of the United States, first-run theatre managers have gradually added theatrical features to their feature entertainment until today in many instances the theatrical entertainment overshadows the featured photodrama of the program. This condition is a serious menace to any further advances in motion picture production.

In the first place it is subtly impressing a certain class of our public with the thought that the play is not the thing but that the trimmings are. In other words it is belittling the importance of the photoplay upon which the entire industry has builded.

In the second place, added numbers often take up so much of the program time that the feature picture is "raced" by the projectionist in order to maintain a timetable schedule. This works grevious injustice alike to audience and to author, director and players.

In the third place, this custom is increasing the cost of exhibition to such a prohibitive figure that many exhibitors are forced out of business by the loss they must sustain, and admission prices are increased to such extent that we lose an important and intelligent—but economical—portion of our public.

In the opinion of this association, whose members are dedicating their lives to the betterment of motion pictures, the over-elaborate prologue is a useless adjunct to the feature picture, often even destroying dramatic effect and turning the climax to anti-climax; the place for vaudeville is in the vaudeville house, and the greater portion of the picture-going public prefers its motion picture comedy and drama "straight"; and while the musical accompaniment is an invaluable part of picture presentation and is working wonders in furthering musical culture in this country, expensive orchestras are unnecessary and often in poor taste.

The Motion Picture Directors' Association believes that these theatrical features have been brought to become such an important part in American picture programs through a mistaken sense of showmanship and in some cases mere personal rivalry between managers. We believe that extravagant presentation is futile because it does not increase the attractiveness of motion pictures to the general public.

Sincerely yours,
Wm. D. Taylor,
President,
Motion Picture Directors' Association.

Normalcy Coming Quicker Than Was Expected

By R. S. Cole,

President of R-C Pictures Corporation

AS the various earning statements for corporations are being published it is no doubt causing quite a little surprise when it is realized that business is coming back much more quickly than those not on the inside had realized. No better indication of this is the surprise given Wall Street when the quarterly statement ending September for the United States Steel Corporation was made public.

The moving picture industry is also slowly but steadily "coming back." There is no question but that the industry went through a most trying period during the last few months, especially during June, July and August. While these months are always bad in the motion picture industry, they were especially bad during the present year.

There were many reasons for this, chiefly due, however, to the added business depression and the resultant fright which always accompanies such depression, which seriously affected the attendance at the theatres. A little encouragement in the downward direction caused a great many theatre owners throughout America to either close their theatres or to run them on short time. The "short time" movement was far in excess of any similar reduction of playing dates during recent years. Many exhibitors went into the market for the cheapest, most mediocre pictures attainable, with a view to cutting down their expenditures to an irreducible minimum, with the result that the patrons, accustomed to better entertainment, remained away.

It is a well known advertising slogan that when business is bad and times are bad, a big advertising campaign should be inaugurated and carried through—not when times are good, when such intensive effort is not necessary. But many moving picture exhibitors evidently overlooked this idea which might be considered a parallel in connection with the class of product they should have offered their patrons, and the result was that their action invited further depreciation of their earnings, and in the same proportion must have affected the earnings of all producing organizations, owing to the demand for their product being so seriously curtailed during the full period.

No doubt the various motion picture producing organizations have gone through a very trying period, but a great deal of good has come out of conditions which were forced upon them. This good has come through a proper readjustment of production plans, production costs, etc. and except where their financial position had been in jeopardy, such corporations are now gradually seeing the benefits of the changes which were made, and the steady return toward normal business.

When it is considered that approximately 20,000,000 people attend motion picture theatres daily in America, with a daily box-office income of $4,000,000, it can be realized that the motion picture industry long ago advanced to a position of permanency in the business world, and today occupies the position of fourth or fifth biggest industry in America. A volume of business to that extent having been created, must necessarily continue, and while the return to normal conditions will doubtless be a little slower this year as compared with other years in view of the extraordinary depression during the summer season, there is nothing that I can see which foretells anything but a very satisfactory return to normalcy, to such corporations as may be operating on conservative but constructive lines.

There is no question but that when the condition of closer cooperation between the exhibitors and the producers, which is being earnestly sought, is brought about, the effect on the industry as a whole will be most pronounced. Nevertheless, every indication from the beginning of the fall season, presumably beginning about Labor Day, points to a continuation of the progress which this industry has made—perhaps not so meteoric—but nevertheless, safe and sound.

Universities Recognizing Power of Screen

Course in Production at Columbia; Faculties Favorable to Film as Educational Force

THAT the motion-picture industry is winning recognition among leading universities of the country as a dignified profession and powerful educational medium is demonstrated in reports being received by MOTION PICTURE NEWS from various sources. Columbia University, one of the leading collegiate institutions of the East, only recently established a course in motion-picture production with Rowland Rogers, formerly production-manager of the Bray studios, in charge. From Chicago comes word that Grace Partridge Smith, associated with the University of Iowa, has received in response to a questionnaire, recently sent out by her to the leading Universities of the country, assurances that the faculties questioned are in the main "favorable" to the film as an educational medium in the classroom.

The course at Columbia University was established this autumn with thirty-three students enrolled and it has been so successful to date that the University has decided to extend it for another term and has invited Professor Rogers to remain. It is likely to become a fixed course.

The students are taught everything in the technical line of production, from lights to camera and direction. It is the plan that eventually they will have a studio of their own and make their own pictures. Up-to-date the class has been making use of the William Fox studios in New York City.

Herbert Brenon, Fox director, has been invited to deliver a lecture before the Columbia class, and has accepted. William Farnum also will talk to the students in the near future.

"Motion pictures certainly do move," said Mr. Brenon in accepting the Columbia invitation. "It was only twelve years ago, when the industry was very young, that I took my company to a certain college for the purpose of shooting a few scenes on the campus. I was not only ordered off the place, but threatened with arrest as a trespasser if I attempted it again.

"And last week," he continued, "I had the pleasure of receiving an invitation from that same college to go up there and make a two-reel picture of their activities. Of course I shall accept. Now

500 Incorporations in N. Y. in 1921 Probable

A total of 33 companies, representing a capitalization of $1,563,500, were incorporated in the motion picture business in New York state during the month of November, as compared to 28 companies, having a capitalization of $1,452,500, which were incorporated in this state during the previous month.

Up to December 1, there had been incorporated in New York state this year, a total of 422 motion picture companies. These represent an aggregate capitalization amounting to $26,015,300.

It was noticeable that the records in the state corporation bureau for November show that not a single one of the companies incorporating was located outside of New York City, or the immediate vicinity. While the capitalization run somewhat lower than in times past, there is, however, a distinct atmosphere of improvement shown in the general trend of business, as indicated by the increase in the number of incorporations of all sort in the state, and of which the motion picture industry is a part.

It is thought that the year's totals will show approximately 500 companies as having been formed and incorporated in New York state this year and that the capitalization of these will come close to the thirty million dollar mark.

Street Corner Movies Aid "Mail Early" Campaign

The Post Office Department is making use of the screen this year to spread the doctrine of their Christmas "Mail Early" campaign. In Washington, D. C., the postmaster is making use of street projection machines and a screen, which are carried in motor trucks. Converts are made at street-corner showings of pictures.

THE "Official Urban Movie Chat of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America" means that Charles Urban will produce and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will release to the members of the M. P. T. O. A. a weekly reel of instructive and entertainment material, subjects from "the Arts, Science, Travel and Industry — supplemented with the best thoughts of great leaders of men."

The object of the issue, as stated, is to "give to the exhibitors a weekly contact with the best forces of the community in which he lives." This is most commendable. The exhibitor needs such a contact, for the standing it gives him and his theatre as community factors, for the patronage such pictures add — and perhaps most importantly for the gap it bridges between himself and the element that believes in censorship and blue laws. It is best, moreover, to bring the church people and school children to the theatre as far as possible, rather than to send the picture to the church and school.

There is, however, in this "Official" reel what seems to us a still bigger opportunity. We have, as an industry, a great deal to tell the public today about the picture. The screen, as we all know, can kill censorship and blue laws by simply telling the people the truth about the picture and this industry. If each reel of these "Movie Chats" could contain some brief but pertinent facts of this kind we would at last use, for ourselves, our own great engine of publicity. We are told that this is one of the purposes of the "Official Movie Chat." If so it is a big step forward. W. A. J.

Hammel Joins Paramount's N. Y. Sales Force

John A. Hammell has joined the sales staff at Paramount's New York Exchange. Mr. Hammell's film experience dates back over a period of twelve years, during which time he has had charge of the New York offices of the General Film Company as well as those of Pathe. He also served a term as president of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York.

To Confer on Use of Slow-Burning Film Stock

The substitution of non-inflammable and slow-burning film for nitro-cellulose film stock now in general use is to be again brought up for discussion. In response to a letter from Franklin H. Wentworth, secretary of the National Fire Protection Association, a committee appointed by Jules E. Brulatour, chairman of the Fire Prevention Committee of the National Association, will attend a conference to be held in New York late in January, at which this subject will be discussed.

The committee appointed comprises: Jack G. Leo, vice-president, Fox Film Corporation; Frank Meyers, assistant-secretary and manager of laboratories, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; F. N. Brockell, sales manager, Associated First National Pictures; E. M. Porter, general manager, Precision Machine Company; Albert deRoode, counsel, Committee on Fire Prevention, N. A. M. P. I.; H. J. Yates, managing director, Allied Laboratories, and Frederick H. Elliott, committee secretary.

The conference will also take up the matter of film reels with a view to making certain desirable improvements in the construction of the spools.

Ray Tendered Luncheon to Meet New York Press

In honor of Charles Ray's first visit to New York City, his friend and business associate Arthur S. Kane tendered the star a luncheon at Delmonico's on December 5th. Representatives of the local newspapers, fan magazines and trade papers were invited in response to Mr. Ray's desire to meet the men who have been writing about him and his work for the public.

The invited guests included, in addition to the guest of honor, Mr. Ray, the following:

Arthur S. Kane, J. C. Ragland, Richard Willis, Albert A. Kidder, Jr., Henry E. Wilkinson, Silas F. Seadler, Frank L. Shellabarger, Charles Gatchell, Picture-Play; Miss Susan Elizabeth Brady, M. P. Exhibitor Amalgamation in Ohio Is Discussed

Sam Bullock, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America conferred with members of the South Ohio Association last week for the purpose of ascertaining the sentiment of these exhibitors with regard to an amalgamation with the Northern Ohio Association. A meeting is to be held at Toledo on December 12 and 13, at which it is hoped to crystallize the sentiment for one State organization, the need of which has been felt in the past, declared Mr. Bullock.

Following the meeting, it was stated that the members of the Southern Ohio Association did not regard the amalgamation favorably, as it was felt that two organizations could function better than one. However, the matter was not definitely settled, and the subject will receive further consideration.

Bryson to Succeed Kahn as Universal Foreign Manager

Announcement has just been made at the Universal offices that James V. Bryson has been appointed foreign manager to iucceed Geo. E. Kahn, resigned. The new foreign manager assumes his duties on January 1, 1922.

Mr. Bryson has spent 18 months in the Orient as special representative empowered to open up offices and to place Universal pictures into direct contact with exhibitors. He has already fulfilled his mission in Australia, New Zealand, China and Japan.

comes this invitation from Columbia to tell them something about practical production. Of course, I shall accept this, too, and am delighted at the opportunity."

The Society for Visual Education with headquarters in Chicago reports in detail the results of Miss Grace Partridge Smith's questionnaire campaign among the Universities of the country. Summing up the answers received, Miss Smith advises the Society for Visual Education that the faculties questioned report themselves in the main as "favorable" to the film as an educational aid in the classroom. Universities which responded to the request for information include Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Columbia, Vermont, California, Washington, Oregon, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Missouri, Minnesota, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa.

Tabulated results show that moving pictures are used, to a greater or less extent, for instruction in many courses, including Latin, Greek, English, home economics, journalism, agriculture, engineering, commerce, geology, biology, education, athletics, architecture and business administration. Mention was also made of their use in colleges of medicine, military departments and "others."

TRADE PERSONALS FROM FAR AND NEAR

J. H. Hurschman, formerly connected with Universal, Selznick and American, and J. L. Marcroft, formerly with Triangle, have formed the H. & M. Film Exchange with home offices in Salt Lake City, Utah.

A. Jules Benedic of Fox's Dallas, Texas, office has, figuratively, added a "t" to his name, recently marrying Mrs. Madeleine E. Cash of Fort Worth, Texas.

Thomas E. Hancock, veteran film man and formerly president of the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade, died suddenly in Los Angeles on December 2.

F. E. Adams, managing director of Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd., the largest motion picture circuit in England, arrived last week in Los Angeles, accompanied by F. G. Ball, booking manager of the English circuit, Robert Atkinson and Hugh Turtle, prominent English business men interested in the motion picture industry.

A cablegram received at the home office of Paramount from Sydney, Australia, last week announced the birth of a daughter to Mr. and Mrs. John W. Hicks, Jr. Mr. Hicks, who is now managing director of Feature Films, Ltd., the Paramount Australasian organization, was formerly assistant sales manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

New York Censor Board to Suggest Changes in Law

THE NEW YORK STATE MOTION PICTURE COMMISSION will make some important recommendations in its report to the New York Legislature in January. It is expected that these suggestions will result in certain bills being drafted and introduced at the coming session, which will materially affect the present censorship law in New York State.

One of the suggestions to be made by the commission is the combining of the commission's seal with the serial number. The present practice is to flash these items separately. Several other changes, resulting from the commission's five months' experience, are being considered by the board for recommendation next month.

According to Chairman George H. Cobb, receipts from the licensing of films and granting of permits since August 1 have reached $140,000. Mr. Cobb also declared the commission had found it would be impossible to operate within the $70,000 appropriation fixed by the bill creating the board. He added, however, that the deficiency item which will be included in the annual budget will be of no great amount.

It is also the intention of the state board to keep at the Albany office of the commission a complete record of the work done in New York so as to facilitate reference to these records by those interested in motion picture legislation.

tising and other campaign work. I make it a point to put in some extra strong vaudeville attraction for two or three days and let the patrons know it. I jazzed the orchestra up. Put pep each week into the ushers. Changed the lights in the marquise to nitrogens. Went over all the loose seats in the house. Started daily matinees to keep the patrons on this side. Cancelled some short subjects that had been running for months. Bought a few novelty reels. Jazzed my advertising up, using the screen for all its worth without overdoing it. Tied up with several stores for permanent window displays. And in a few short weeks the receipts have mounted up and the house is doing fine, but will do better before long. Am aiming for 80 per cent capacity every day and will get it. Never stop advertising is my motto and we let the public know it.

Success of R-C Campaign Results in Gala Affair

The success which attended the R. S. Cole Month sales drive by the distributing organization of R-C. Pictures Corporation, with Charles R. Rogers as general manager of distribution, prompted the staff at the studio, Hollywood, to hold a gala meeting a few days ago, and drink a standing toast to R. S. Cole and R-C Pictures Corporation.

The group which is shown on this page responded with enthusiasm and drank a bumper of grape juice to the continued success and prosperity of Mr. Cole and the corporation.

The staff party included Dev Jennings, W. S. Heywood, Joseph Dubray, Ray Carpenter, Louis Gasnier, Eve Unsell, Colin Campbell, Allen Boone, Pauline Frederick, Doris May, R. J. Tobin, W. S. Seiter, Ray Crone, Hunt Stromberg, James Wilkinson, Bert Cann, Carol Warren, Garrett E. Fort and C. McDonald.

Allied Film Laboratories to Hold Ball

Although less than a year old, the Allied Film Laboratories Association, Inc., has completed plans for a big "Movie" ball. The affair will take place in the Twelfth Regiment Armory, New York City, on New Years Eve and, according to present plans, will be repeated each year at the same time.

The Twelfth Regiment Armory, one of the most spacious in the city, was selected because of its size. It is anticipated that the general public as well as all branches of the industry will welcome the opportunity to get together in a grand jubilee. The support given by the public in years past to the annual movie ball will be revived and the laboratory men in charge of this affair see in it an opportunity to make the people engaged in the industry a bit bigger in the eyes of the public.

What Is Real Value of Star Personality?

By J. A. Gove

WHAT is the real value of star personality? Is it overestimated or not rated high enough? Or is the day of the star over?

Those are some of the questions which Jay A. Gove, Realart's assistant general manager, says are again engaging the attention of the industry and answers them in a manner which should prove of interest not only to his contemporaries but to exhibitors as well.

"At least one producer-distributor has come out unequivocally with the statement and the policy that 'the play's the thing,' the whole thing—meaning, of course, the story," says Mrs. Gove, "and another is equally emphatic in saying that the direction and general production is what makes or unmakes the picture, regardless of story or cast. Still another holds that given the proper advertising and exploitation any old picture can be put across.

"And in each of these contentions there is a germ of truth, but none of them are wholly correct, for to insure the success of any picture there must be a composite of all these factors; story, adequate production and exploitation—plus star personality whether announced or suppressed.

"One need only look about him for signs that emphatically point out the fact that star personality is the most potent factor in the sustained popularity of motion pictures. The exhibitors themselves are one of the best mediums through which we can view the situation as it effects stars, for they have the receiver at their ears at all times and the public is at the other end of the wire. Every day, after every performance, in fact, patrons make it their business to comment on the picture so that the exhibitors are not left long in doubt as to how the picture went across. And where their comment is not restricted to the commonplace remark that 'That was a dandy picture,' they more than likely enlarge upon the one outstanding feature—the leading players. Seldom is praise rendered exclusively or even particularly to the author, the story or the director. Glance through the exhibitor comments in the trade journals; few of these reports ever fail to mention the star.

"And to clinch the argument there is the ample testimony of the fan magazines which depend for their very existence on their ability to give their readers what they want, and their contents indicate what that want is—news of the stars. Scarcely a month passes but what some new magazine makes its appearance, and they all seem to thrive. Fan magazine circulation is tremendous and this is all the more remarkable because as a rule they are rather high priced. Where would they be if it were not for star personality?

"Turn to any of the question and answer departments which are a feature in nearly all the fan magazines. What do you find? Queries which exclusively concern screen players; how, when and why they eat, what they do in their spare time, where their pictures appear, their antecedents, hobbies, interests and habits are all laid bare to satisfy the curiosity of this army of admirers.

"Printers who prepare the stock programs for hundreds of theatres will tell you that 90 per cent of the reading matter which is used to boost the pictures hinge their text on the stars.

"The publicity departments of the various companies are flooded with requests for off-stage photos of the stars and production stills from their pictures. And the letters that the stars themselves receive from all over the world! As a specific instance I might mention that Mary Miles Minter has a bona fide list of correspondents that number nearly a hundred thousand names.

"In the old days some companies religiously concealed the identity of their players. Delve into the history of this business and see if I am not right in saying that the companies which forged ahead to success were the ones which let down the bars, and not only gave out the names of the cast, but inaugurated the practice of featuring or starring certain players. And inversely, those which stubbornly refused to adopt the policy have been lost in the shuffle.

"No, star personality is a very tangible asset to every exhibitor and its true value is registered very definitely in the box-office. And it has been effectually demonstrated by thousands of exhibitors that this value is cumulative; the name of a well-known popular star occurring and recurring in front of a theatre at not-too-long intervals (for the public is fickle) is a sure bid for patronage. The real dyed-in-the-wool fans look for their favorites.

"That the exhibitor recognizes this condition is apparent from the tenor of his query when approached by a film salesman. 'Who's in it?' will more than likely be one of the first things he wants to know, and it is dollars to doughnuts that the picture stands a better chance for a booking if the salesman is able to answer that so-and-so is starred than if he has to stand there swallowing his Adam's apple while he mumbles the old wheeze 'all star cast' and tries to make a sale without the selling factor of real star personality.

"In conclusion let me quote the Rev. Dr. William Carter, a prominent clergyman of Brooklyn, N. Y., who recently addressed the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers along the lines of how best to interest the forty-odd millions of church people in the motion picture. Speaking about the apparent disinterestedness of the majority of these potential devotees of the screen he laid it to the inane character of a large number of the stories themselves, suggesting the greater use of standard works, but laid particular emphasis on the need for well-known players to interpret the roles. 'Last night,' said Dr. Carter, 'I saw a marvelous production founded upon a famous story by one of the old masters and I felt sorry for the exhibitor who had booked this picture with the apparent purpose of showing a better grade attraction to his clientele, for there were but a handful of people to see it. It was exquisitely produced, there is not a better author known, yet it was a dismal failure from the revenue viewpoint. I am convinced that had this picture contained the name of some well-known screen personage, it would have proved one of the most popular films of the times, and saved the day for the exhibitor.'

"Only the most skeptical and obstinate will question the existence of star personality as a real factor today. And while I do not wish to disparage the occasional successful 'special,' I maintain that the star pictures are the bread and butter of the exhibitors."

New England Exhibitors Meet in Boston

Exhibitors from every New England state met at the Copley Square Plaza, Boston, on December 6 and 7 to perfect the Massachusetts state organization of the M. P. T. O. A.

The following officers were elected: Jacob Laurie, Boston, President; G. W. Allen, Jr., New Bedford, 1st Vice Presdident; John Keon, Salem, 2nd Vice President; E. R. Gregory, Dorchester, Treasurer; N. Yennius, Fall River, Executive Secretary; and Charles Ross, Boston, Recording Secretary.

"A Necessity"!

"Am enclosing check to cover one year renewal to MOTION PICTURE NEWS and copy Booking Guide. Any exhibitor not taking MOTION PICTURE NEWS is doing himself as well as his patrons an injustice, as it is absolutely necessary to know what you are booking in pictures, and the NEWS does just that. Please rush the Booking Guide out at once and oblige.

"Very truly yours,
"A. A. NEESE,
"Beatric Theatre."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

According to reports coming in from different cities, Virginia Lee Corbin, the well known child movie actress, is making a big hit in her personal appearance and is proving a valuable box office attraction.

Master Advertisers Corporation have removed their offices to 752 S. Wabash avenue, and Al Dezel and Jo Fischer are busy at the new headquarters with a number of important publicity and exploitation campaigns which they have under way, including that of the Dempsey-Carpentier fight pictures at the Barbee.

Tom Gallery's personal appearances at the Stratford theatre last week in connection with the screening of the "Son of Wallingford," in which he stars, drew good crowds to that house. Tom Gallery is very popular locally, and is the son of the well known Captain Gallery, a veteran of the Chicago police force.

L. J. Siakel, of the Tatra Film Corporation, of Chicago, has returned from Szecho-Slovakia, where he directed the making of "Janosik," a seven reel feature picture depicting dramatic incidents in the history of Czecho-Slovakia. The picture had a showing at one Chicago theatre and proved a popular success. Mr. Siakel reports that seventy-five per cent. of pictures being shown in Szecho-Slovakia are American made and among the features popular in that country at the time he left were Douglas Fairbanks' "Three Musketeers" and "The Mark of Zoro." German pictures are not popular there as they are considered far behind the American made film drama, and according to Mr. Siakel, many have the disadvantage of being very vulgar.

The symphony concerts given on Sunday at 11:45 A. M. at the Chicago Theatre are proving popular attractions. The symphony orchestra, under the direction of Nathaniel Finston, is made up of one hundred musicians selected from the Chicago, Tivoli, Riviera, and Central Park orchestras, and the concerts are given in advance of the regular program without extra charge. For his last concert, Director Finston had prepared an all-Wagner program made up of six numbers taken from five operas of this famous composer.

Sales Manager Fichenlaub, of First National, has added O. J. Wooden and H. A. Washburn to his sales staff and rearranged the territories of the different feature and short subject salesmen. Mr. Wooden, who until recently was with Robertson-Cole, will handle Eastern Illinois, and Mr. Washburn, who also was working for Robertson-Cole, will cover Central Illinois, making his headquarters at Peoria. A. C. Fox has been transferred from the feature to the short subject department and will cover Eastern Illinois, working out of Champaign. W. W. Bromberg will sell features in the central eastern section of Illinois, making his headquarters at La Salle. Jack Schwartz, of the feature division, will work out of Freeport, S. Andrews in the southern territory with headquarters at Quincy and Jack Holland in the central territory with Bloomington as his base. Benny Edelman, of the short subject department, will work in the Springfield district and Milton Stern, of the same department, will make his headquarters at Kewanee.

Sam I. Levin, president of the Salt Lake Theatre Supply Company, made a special trip to Chicago to visit the Enterprise Optical Company's plant and see how the new Motiograph De Luxe Projectors are made. He was much impressed by the efficiency of the big factory and the excellence of the workmanship and materials that go into the new Motiograph. He reports he will install Motiograph De Luxe in a number of theatres in his territory within the next thirty days.

Managers Martin and Gillick, of Pathe Exchange, have completed arrangements for a trade showing of "White Eagle" at Aryan Grotto on Monday, December 12th. "Never Weaken" and "A Sailor Made Man" also will be presented. An event of unusual interest in connection with this showing will be the appearance of Victor M. Shapiro, head of Pathe's exploitation department, who is coming from New York especially to address the exhibitors present at the showing on how to put "White Eagle" over so that it will prove a great box office attraction. Mr. Shapiro is not going to tell how much money can be spent to put this over, but how much can be gotten for nothing.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois have completed plans for their one day convention, which will be held at the Jefferson Hotel, Peoria, on December 15th. The principal speakers will be President Sidney Cohen and General Counsel James Walker of the national organization, who, besides making a report on general activities of the M. P. T. O. of America, will tell of the work being done to abolish admission, seating and music taxes. The First National situation also will be given attention by the speakers. The first session will be held at ten a. m. and there will be afternoon and evening meetings, closing in time to allow those attending the convention to leave that night, if they so desire.

On the day preceding the convention at Peoria, Messrs. Cohen and Walker will be tendered a luncheon at the Sherman Hotel in Chicago, at which they will both make addresses, following which they will leave at five thirty-three over the Rock Island for Peoria, accompanied by a large delegation of Chicago exhibitors who will attend the convention. A special car has been arranged for on this train and exhibitors who have not yet joined the association, as well as members, are invited to accompany the party. Details may be obtained by telephoning "Big Bill" Sweeny at the Chicago headquarters of the organization.

Max Gumbiner has taken over the Milford theatre on the northwest side and is operating it. This theatre has changed hands two or three times within the last year but under Mr. Gumbiner's management is showing excellent results.

Bernie Russell, of Russells Productions, has returned from a visit to New York where he sold Pioneer Film Corporation the rights on Russells Productions' feature picture, "Shadows of Conscience," for New York State, Northern New Jersey, Indiana and Northern Illinois. Mr. Russell expects to remain in Chicago for a few days and then return to the west coast to resume charge of Russell brothers production activities there.

Acme Studios in New Offices

The opening of the new offices and display rooms of the Acme Scenic Artist Studios at Suite 308-36 West Randolph street, is of interest to those connected with the motion picture theatres.

The offices are completely outfitted in up-to-date style and the display rooms and miniature stage are equipped to the smallest detail with everything to enable the theatrical manager to select his stage settings and curtains in the most realistic environment and with real theatrical illumination.

A. W. Oberbeck, managing director, is well known to theatrical men, having spent a lifetime in the business. He has designed and painted some of the most elaborate, modern and artistic scenery for the largest productions, vaudeville acts and theatres.

M. Content who is the business manager of the new combination is equally well known to the theatrical profession. His latest connection was with the Fabric Studios as assistant manager and he is thoroughly familiar with all branches of the show and scenery business.

"Shadows of Conscience" Rights Obtained

Pioneer Film Corporation has just closed a contract with Russells Productions whereby it takes over the rights to "Shadows of Conscience," the fine seven reel feature starring Russell Simpson, supported by Barbara Tenant and a strong cast of players, for all of New York State, Northern New Jersey, all of Indiana and Northern Illinois. President Lefcourt, of Pioneer, stated to Berny Russell, who represented Russells Productions in the transaction, that he regarded this as one of the biggest and strongest pictures ever put on the state right market, and that his company was enthused over the box office possibilities of this production.

Russells Productions announce that Charles Meade will represent them in selling "Shadows of Conscience" in the New England territory and will start work immediately.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Sheik—

Wonderful picture. The talk of the town. Kept on for a second week. Business extraordinary. Had a line in front of the house all day Sunday despite constant rain. (Middle West.)

Drew exceptionally well first half, but tapered off commencing Thursday. Patrons divided in opinion of picture. Those who read the book did not like it. (East.)

One of the best drawing cards and most stupendous offerings of the year. We ran the picture two weeks to capacity crowds in a theatre seating 4,000 persons. The picture cannot be too highly recommended. (Middle West.)

Much publicity and press comment helped the picture to do a lively week's business. (Middle West.)

Good story, well acted and some beautiful scenery. Held for a second week. (Middle West.)

This picture went over in fine shape. It is a wonderful production, one of the best this year. (West.)

Good picture playing to capacity houses. (East.)

Good picture, good box office value on account of popularity of the book and the hit that Valentino makes with the ladies. Exploitation stunt, man made up as sheik rode about streets. A picture generally popular. (Middle West.)

A very good picture. It is something out of the routine, somewhat out of the ordinary and went over well with us. (South.)

Great picture and wonderful box office attraction. Broke Sunday record and did capacity business all week. Elaborate stage setting had much to do with the success of the engagement. (Middle West.)

Held for second week. Pleased and brought good business. (West.)

Drew immensely. (East.)

Under the Lash—

Gloria Swanson shows exceptional ability as an emotional actress in this fine picture. Went over big for week. (Middle West.)

An average picture with which we had poor business. (West.)

Beyond—

Ethel Clayton, although popular here, did not attract much of a house, due largely to a smallpox epidemic. (Middle West.)

The Mask—

Well liked. Receipts pleasing. (East.)

Exit the Vamp—

Pleasing picture. Average receipts. (East.)

Wealth—

Fairly entertaining. Fair box office average. (West.)

A Wise Fool—

Nothing extra, but business was right good, due no doubt to the splendid weather, the approach of the fall season and other causes. (South.)

To Please One Woman—

A lavish production, with an apology for a plot. Fair box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Miss Lulu Bett—

The women attended this one in large numbers, but business was only fair. Competition real cause. (East.)

Passing Thru—

Business poor. (Middle West.)

Three Word Brand—

Good picture, good business. (Middle West.)

Experience—

This picture did not go over so well. There is too much reform in it. People don't care for it. (West.)

Don't Tell Everything—

Did not hold up the second week. First week was big. (Middle West.)

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL

Two Minutes to Go—

A fairly entertaining photoplay. Charles Ray is pretty well liked hereabouts. Comes well up to the average, to put it mildly. (South.)

Charles Ray not suited for a football hero and picture was rather inconsistent but because of fact that big football game was played here during the week it drew well. Cannot say much for the picture other than that. (Middle West.)

The Child Thou Gavest Me—

An entertaining production which held up for a week run, helped along undoubtedly by the added attraction, "The Idle Class." (East.)

Well liked and paid splendidly despite mama's remarkably short memory as to who papa was. (East.)

The Devil's Garden—

This brought very poor business as the picture is not good. (East.)

Her Social Value—

Business was not so good on this. Fair picture. (Middle West.)

Tol'able David—

Very, very well liked. Considered a wonderful picture. (Middle West.)

Molly O—

One of the best audience pictures of the year. Crowded houses all the week, and the second week at that, with advanced prices. The kind of picture the whole family wants to see. (Middle West.)

Gypsy Blood—

Pola Negri is a fine "Carmen" but the show as a whole is unsatisfactory. Many criticized the title as misleading. (Middle West.)

Woman's Place—

An average picture with fair business. (West.)

The Invisible Fear—

A long drawn-out affair. Anita Stewart helps to put it over. Only a fair box office value. (Middle West.)

The Wonderful Thing—

Very good picture with good box office draw. Audience seems pleased with comedy role. Exeeptional value here as the Centerville, Iowa, scenes draw. (Middle West.)

FOX

Over the Hill—

In second week broke records for showing. When other houses' business took a drop this house only dropped $3.00. Called forth many voluntary expressions of approval which were published in paper. Special exploitation stunt, boy runaway from home, sentenced to see the picture. (Middle West.)

Meagre business. Pulling out a four week engagement with difficulty. Comments of uninterested patrons are that it isn't as good as some of the other "Mother" pictures recently released. (Middle West.)

Broke all records for showing at the second largest theatre here. Special exploitation stunts, contest with poses by Mary Carr, special showing of picture to ministers and club women and a window showing a miniature house and hill with scene electric lighted. (Middle West.)

Queen of Sheba—

Greatest picture of the age. We turned away crowds so popular was this feature and were compelled to show it for the second week and to give three shows each night. Wonderful photography. (Middle West.)

Good picture playing to capacity houses. (East.)

Ended two weeks' run. (East.)

The Rough Diamond—

Good picture, business fair. (Middle West.)

Little Miss Hawkshaw—

Business average. (Middle West.)

The Primal Law—

Fair picture. Fair business. (Middle West.)

Thunderclap—

Picture and business both pretty bad. (East.)

REALART

The Speed Girl—

Fair picture, attendance fair with a sudden slump in middle of week. (Middle West.)

A good attendance for the week. Bebe Daniels' recent speeding escapade on the coast served to stimulate interest in the picture. (Middle West.)

Very good picture which seemed to please my patrons. Good business. (West.)

Morals—

Patrons enjoyed this subject. Miss McAvoy getting popular here. Holidays approaching is the cause of only average business. (East.)

Beautiful picture but business only fair. (East.)

Her Winning Way—

Fairly good entertainment. Fair box office receipts. (West.)

Her Face Value—

Fair picture and business. (Middle West.)

Little Italy—

Drew good business, good picture. (Middle West.)

R-C PICTURES

The Sting of the Lash—

Business good. Good picture. (Middle West.)

The Barricade—

Picture and business both only fair. (East.)

The Foolish Age—

Good comedy. Good attendance. (Middle West.)

METRO

The Four Horsemen—

Very big picture which brought wonderful business. (East.)

The Conquering Power—

Strong picture which went over so well we are holding it for a second week. (Middle West.)

Fool's Paradise—

Excellent production in every way. Business splendid. (East.)

SELZNICK

A Man's Home—

Picture with strong audience appeal. Played to excellent business. (Middle West.)

An average picture and an average box office attraction. (Middle West.)

The Way of a Maid—

Excellent. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

The Mysterious Rider—

Showed in conjunction with Harold Lloyd in "Never Weaken" and the combined program attracted a good attendance for the week. (Middle West.)

Pilgrims of the Night—

Pleased our audiences and we played to good business. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Conflict—

Second week held up O. K. (West.)

PATHE

Without Benefit of Clergy—

Has the real Kipling atmosphere. A good picture which drew well. (Middle West.)

SELECT

Remorseles Love—

A right good show. Business splendid, comment favorable, little or no criticism. Miss Elaine Hammerstein showed up to her usual good form and she already had an unusually strong grip upon our fans, anyway. (South.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Nut—

Fine business on second showing. (Middle West.)

AFFILIATED DISTRIBUTORS

Burn 'Em Up Barnes—

A real moneymaker. Johnny Hines' admirers supported him great on this one. Good business all week. (Middle West.)

EDUCATIONAL

Saving Sister Susie—

A fine comedy that was run in a program with "The Sheik." People talked about it about as much as about the feature. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

Cabinet of Dr. Caligari—

Freak picture and on that account played to crowded houses. (East.)

ARROW

Love, Hate and a Woman—

Picture and business only fair. (East.)

Fake Traffic Notices Used to Sell "Experience"

Three separate novelties took Sioux City, Iowa, by surprise, which accounts for the big business done by "Experience" at the Royal theatre.

John J. Friedl, Manager, with the assistance of R. C. Gary, Paramount exploiteer, first got some penny post cards which were run through a press, the copy announcing the run of the picture. It was the first time Friedl had used his mailing list in some time.

Automobilists found ominous official-looking envelopes tied to their steering wheels which read: "Important Traffic Notice." Inside were heralds announcing "Experience." More than 10,000 of these heralds were distributed by a door-to-door canvass.

Every newsboy in Sioux City wore a pasteboard foolscap on which the announcement for "Experience" was printed.

Friedl says it pays to cut loose every now and then with a heavy novelty campaign. Novelties used continuously cease to be novel. But after the public has just about forgotten the last stunt, break out again, says the Hestetter manager.

O'Hara Comes Through with Another Artistic Idea

A striking all-Anatol window was secured by S. O'Hara, manager of the Armory theatre, Clarinda, Iowa.

The basis of the scheme was a twenty-four sheet which shows Wallace Reid holding strings which lead up to the heads of the women involved in his numerous affairs. The Reid figure and the heads were cut out and real ribbon attached. One sheet and framed stills neatly arranged completed the display.

Window display on "The Affairs of Annatol" originated by S. O'Hare, manager of the Armory theatre, Clarinda, Ia.

McCormick's Futurist's Ball

Novel Presentation Number Staged at Allen's Theatre, Cleveland

S. BARRETT McCORMICK'S presentation of "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" got its cue from the picture or at least from Mr. McCormick's audience angle on the picture, which was "freak."

In describing the prologue number originated for the feature, Mr. McCormick writes as follows:

"My stage prelude or prologue was called 'The Futurist Ball' and was in itself a big musical review with about fifty people, very colorful and spectacular, and was supposed to represent the condition of the world in 1950 when the Futurists, Cubists, Impressionists, Crystallists, etc., were in control of the world and everything was done on a strictly futuristic basis. The stage was a burlesque futurist setting. To the strains of a Stravinsky composition, the messenger from 1950 steps before the curtain, his costume ultra-modernistic. He tells the audience to imagine themselves in the year 1950 when the world is in control of the Futurists, etc.

"The curtains then open upon the Orchestra from Mars dressed in weird robes, long peaked hats with strange eye glasses and eye lashes, playing upon a weird collection of musical instruments. The tune was 'Ain't We Got Fun.' It sounded very Caligari when it came from this collection of mouth organs, tubas, oboes and jazz whistles. Then came the dancers at the Futurist Ball—the entire company in very bizarre costume creations and their dancing thoroughly in keeping with the mental condition of Caligari.

"Next was the Zimmeresque Fashion Show with the models wearing extreme and futuristic costumes, beautiful and daring. Following them came the Zeigfeld Follies Chorus of 1950—four dancing boys in ballet skirts, tights and toe slippers with evening clothes from the waist up including top hats. They did a ballet number to a jazzed 'moment musicale.'

"At the finish of this the Messenger from 1950 enters and starts to tell the story of Dr. Caligari and the curtains close in and we start the picture as a continuation of his talk."

Showing the lobby decorations and motor cycle ballyhoo used by the Empire theatre, Bridgeport, to exploit "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court"

Proclaims Mark Twain Week

Bridgeport Exhibitor Puts Over Fine Campaign for "Connecticut Yankee"

EXPLOITATION which evoked favorable comment from newspaper editors was effected recently by James Rourke, manager of the Empire theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., in connection with the showing of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

It required little persuasion to get the mayor and the local chamber of commerce to proclaim a "Mark Twain Week." The celebration of the memorial week was concurrent with the showing of the picture. Therefore it was natural for the newspapers to mention conspicuously Twain's great work, "A Connecticut Yankee," which was being shown at the Empire theatre, and natural, also, for parents to bring their children to view the classic story on the screen.

Because all the schools were celebrating the holiday week, there was a great rush on the local library for volumes of Mark Twain's books. So great was the demand that papers published articles about it. Then came the announcement that Mr. Rourke, the exhibitor, had donated to the library ten volumes of "A Connecticut Yankee." All the papers were compelled again to devote considerable news space to this incident because of their duty to announce new books listed in the library and because of their traditional announcement of the names of contributors to the library's stock.

Then three motorcyclists, attired in knights' mail and armor and carrying spear and shield, sped through the city's streets. To the rear of the motorcycles were attached canvas-cardboard signs which read: "Here's one of the Jazz Knights in Mark Twain's 'A Connecticut Yankee'—Empire Next Week."

Special showings of the film were given free for gold star mothers and the orphans of Bridgeport. This, too, brought its share of free newspaper publicity.

Another stunt used was in connection with the classified want ads of the daily papers. The stunt was a circulation builder for the newspapers, and they were glad to co-operate. It was this—each day during the run five names of Bridgeportians selected at random from a city directory were printed in scattered positions on the want-ad pages. The persons finding their names were entitled to two passes each to see the picture. The scheme worked ideally.

To the two thousand names on Mr. Rourke's mailing list were sent proclamations "by King Arthur" commanding the recipient to see the picture. The proclamations were 12x18 inches and printed in red and black on a buff paper.

The result of the exploitation packed the house during the entire run.

Snell Horns In On Circus Parade

It is not often that a theatre can tie up with a circus, but Assistant Manager Snell, of the Imperial theatre, Gadsden, Ala., used Robinson's circus parade to advertise his program. He got permission to place this banner on the largest elephant in the parade: "The two biggest things in town today—Harold Lloyd in 'I Do'." That was all, but it had the kick in it, and got the business.

Schools Aid Brown Put Over "Woman's Place"

Net score:

Ivanhoe, 1.

Loew's Palace, 899.

Looks like a lop-sided contest between a literary classic and a modern theatre, but it merely shows the batting average of a publicity campign inaugurated by G. E. Brown, managing director of Loew's Palace theatre, Memphis.

In addition to a full-fledged publicity and advertising campaign which he put over for "Woman's Place," Brown tied into the Central High School Annex for an essay on "Woman's Place" and on the Palace theatre. Through certain influences Brown was able to have the teachers permit the 900 children in the annex to choose for their weekly literary essay either Ivanhoe or Loew's Palace.

Out of the total enrollment of the annex only one pupil wrote on Ivanhoe and the other 899 chose the Palace theatre and Constance Talmadge as the more interesting subject.

Prizes were offered for the best ten essays, consisting of box seats to the Palace on "Annex Night." More than 300 children came and paid admissions to enjoy seeing the prize winners in the boxes.

The prize-winning essays are to be carried in the annex weekly paper and another competitive essay-writing stunt is already under way at the school.

Chambers Books "The Blot" For Teachers' Convention Dates

A state teachers' convention at Wichita, Kansas, gave Stanley Chambers his cue for booking "The Blot" for dates to correspond with those of the convention.

Inasmuch as the story of "The Blot" revolves around the problem of inadequate pay for teachers, the picture proved a center of attraction for the visitors and their Wichita friends, and was advertised to the limit by word of mouth on the floor of the convention and wherever else the teachers met.

Rural Ballyhoo Used for "Way Down East" by Barger

When Manager L. G. Barger presented "Way Down East" at the Avondale theatre, North Tonawanda, N. Y., he put on an excellent exploitation campaign which enabled him to put over his first week run at this recently opened theatre.

Mr. Barger covered both Tonawanda and North Tonawanda with large banners placed across streets, such as used in political campaigns. He also used two big farm wagons, especially decorated and plastered with "'Way Down East" signs. The drivers were rigged out in rube costumes.

Three thousand post cards were sent to residents of the two cities, much newspaper space was used, several attractive window display tie-ups put over and window cards placed in almost every store.

Novel window display for "The Affairs of Annatol" by the Bell theatre, Pasco Robles, Cal. of which W. W. Walker is manager

Cantrell's Campaign for "March Hare"

ADVERTISING broadcast for a hundred wild rabbits attracted attention to the "March Hare" for Manager Cantrell, of the Knickerbocker theatre, Nashville, Tenn. He stated that these would be turned loose with attached passes on the uptown streets. But failing to get them he "decorated" his lobby with boxes of Belgian Hares and the number grew from eight to sixteen in three days! Big rabbits of cardboard were used on the theatre auto on the streets and were also placed on the stage for a week in advance of showing.

Young Works Hard for "Lord Fauntleroy"

Edwan Forrest Young, publicity director for the Rialto and Majestic theatres, Louisville, Ky., made a special play for the patronage of children when "Little Lord Fauntleroy" played the Majestic.

On Thursday of a week's run, newspaper space announced a "surprise matinee" for the next day, and stated that every child attending would receive a gift. This consisted of a free ticket to the opening performance of the next week's feature. The house was jammed the day after the ad appeared, with children standing in line for two hours to get in.

On Friday "slates" appeared in all the newspapers announcing a contest among the Louisville Herald's newsboys for the most popular newsboy. The idea was that the boys were to cut the "slates" from the newspapers, insert the names of their favorites, and the boy receiving the largest vote, or leading the biggest gang to the Majestic, got a $10 prize. There was a second prize of $5 and a third of $3. The answer was that the newspaper gave one and two-column news stories on the contest, and that boys from all sections of the city stormed the Majestic, making it necessary to give two morning performances to take care of the crowds.

Soriero Uses Novelty Herald Advertising

A novel throwaway for the showing of "For Those We Love" was used with very good success by Thomas D. Soriero, manager of the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass.

He bought at a small cost several thousand of the small cardboard walking dolls with four feet, which rotate as though walking when pushed gently along on any surface. The doll carries on its arm a basket, on the side of which appeared the ad for the picture. Mr. Soriero used the following advertising matter: "I'd walk a mile to the Strand theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday to see Betty Compson in the Goldwyn super-special, 'For Those We Love.'"

These were distributed at the box office the week before the showing, in hotels and cigar stores and mailed in envelopes to the Strand's mailing list.

Mr. Soriero found the stunt provocative of much interest and in connection with the regular channels of advertising and publicity had a pronounced effect on business.

Novel "Cappy Ricks" Lobby Display

When Manager Enrico Leide, of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, played "Cappy Ricks," he achieved a splendid effect of the New England Coast in his lobby and a fine scheme of presentation which added no little to the success of the picture's run.

On the outside of the theatre, in front of the box-office, all advertising cards and posters were framed in life-preservers—the old-fashioned round ones such as were used by sailing vessels of the type of the Florrie R. Across the front of the theatre were three large life-preservers, the first one framing a card on which the name of Thomas Meighan, as star, appeared in large letters—deep sea-blue letters on a gray background, framed by the dingy white of the life-preserver. The center circle held a card which gave the name of the picture and the third one, on the left, framed the name of Agnes Ayres.

Between the box-office and the main entrance were smaller life-preservers which framed lines from the sub-titles, in teaser effect, or sentences like "Do you like romance?" "Adventures galore," "His last fifty cents—and the only girl in the world at his elbow," "As refreshing as a sea-breeze," and so on.

Inside the main entrance and along the beautiful grand staircase which is a special feature of the Howard's main lobby, were a quantity of the small pines which grow, supposedly, along the Maine coast, and through these gleamed tiny electric bulbs that added immensely to the effectiveness of the scene. Rusty old anchors, coils of rope, a sea-battered officer's cap and similar trophies were scattered about.

A special musical score had been arranged by Mr. Leide, who, in addition to managing the theatre, conducts the forty-piece concert orchestra. There was a short prologue—an effective representation of the storm scene which is the climax of the picture. The stage-setting showed a sea-scape with a tiny sailing vessel, all sails spread, setting out gaily from port. Half-way in the middle of the stage the tiny vessel encounters difficulties and thunder and lightning, followed, as the tiny ship disappears, with a calm, and a beautiful moon-rise.

Kennedy's Statute of Liberty Lobby Display

MANAGER KENNEDY, of the Galax theatre, Birmingham, Ala., attracted extra business on "The Land of Hope" by a splendid duplication of the Statue of Liberty in the lobby. It was eight feet high, made of cardboard and painted a pure white. A powerful electric light was connected into the upheld torch of Liberty, with fine effect.

Vivid Red "Heart" Basis of Lobby Display

For "Hearts of the Range," when the picture played the Strand theatre, Atlanta, Manager Schmidt had a huge heart cut out of cardboard and wrapped in red tissue paper. This carried letters cut out of cardboard and mounted to conform to the shape of the heart, giving the name of the picture.

Encircling the heart at a distance of about every two or three inches were tiny electric globes, shaded in green and concealed in the wrapping of paper. When the current was on these globes threw a weird green light on the lettering of the heart which made it all very effective.

Buffalo Showman Tries "Mystery Girl" Stunt

"Why Girls Leave Home" was shown in Buffalo at the Mark Strand by Manager E. O. Weinberg, following an excellent exploitation campaign, one of the features of which was a "mystery girl" stunt arranged with the Buffalo Enquirer through which Mr. Weinberg offered readers an opportunity to win some Christmas money by identifying the "mystery girl" as she appeared at various points in the city. Through the tie-up with the newspaper the Strand got some long stories and big cuts on page one.

Mr. Weinberg also put out a number of sandwich men, carrying signs bearing the title of the picture. Teaser ads were run in the local newspapers. There was a liberal use of billboards. Little red cards in the form of hearts were suspended in strings throughout the lobby a week in advance of the showing. The advertising on opening day was doubled. Small cards, bearing the inscription, "Do you know why girls leave home?" were given out in stores, restaurants, trolleys and public places. It was a widespread campaign and brought fine results at the box office.

Attractive Prologue for "Way Down East"

An exceptionally attractive prologue and setting was arranged for "Way Down East" when this picture was shown at the Halsey theatre, Newark, N. J., and is credited with having been of much value "talking" advertising for the production.

The stage setting showed the river with its timbered banks in the background, with a foreground representing the typical village street, the old wagon shop on one side and the toll-house on the other. Before the wagon shop a white pig rooted contentedly in the dirt. Against an old-fashioned picket fence at the head of the street, a local quartette and soloist leaned and sang "Way Down East" songs.

This cut shows the cast and stage setting for a prologue on "Way Down East," presented at the Halsey theatre, Newark.

Grauman Prologue Highly Original Number

An appropriate feature of the program at Grauman's theatre the week ending November 13th added in observance of Armistice Week was the showing of the official United States Signal Corps picture, "Flashes From the Front," preceded by a patriotic prologue in which more than thirty people took part.

The prologue scene represented the disembarkation of troops from a transport, which was painted in scenery at the rear of the stage. A gangplank led to an opening in the side of the "ship," and emptied doughboys on the stage. Above, soldiers leaned over the railing of the ship. Beside the gangplank civilians stood, obviously awaiting the return of loved ones.

Clad as a Belgian orphan, a girl coloratist left the ship and rendered "Keep the Home Fires Burning." A soldier trio sang Harry Lauder's "Pack Up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag." A Salvation Army girl sang patriotic airs and a doughboy soloist, "There's a Long, Long Trail a-Winding." The Griffith boy twins executed a military dance. In conclusion, a lieutenant put a squad of veterans through the manual of arms.

Victoria Theatre Builds Novel Lobby Front

The management of the Victoria theatre, Philadelphia, used the Producers' Press Book as the foundation of a most unique lobby display on "Why Girls Leave Home." He had the cover of the press book enlarged to the size of a six-sheet, placed on one side of the lobby, and he had a two-column-ad enlarged also to the size of a six-sheet and placed on the other side of the lobby. The usual electric light display in front of the theatre, in addition to carrying the display of the picture in high-powered nitrogen lamps, was augmented by an electrical question mark which was connected with a flasher. All this material was used in conjunction with the regulation posters, photographs, oil paintings and other accessories.

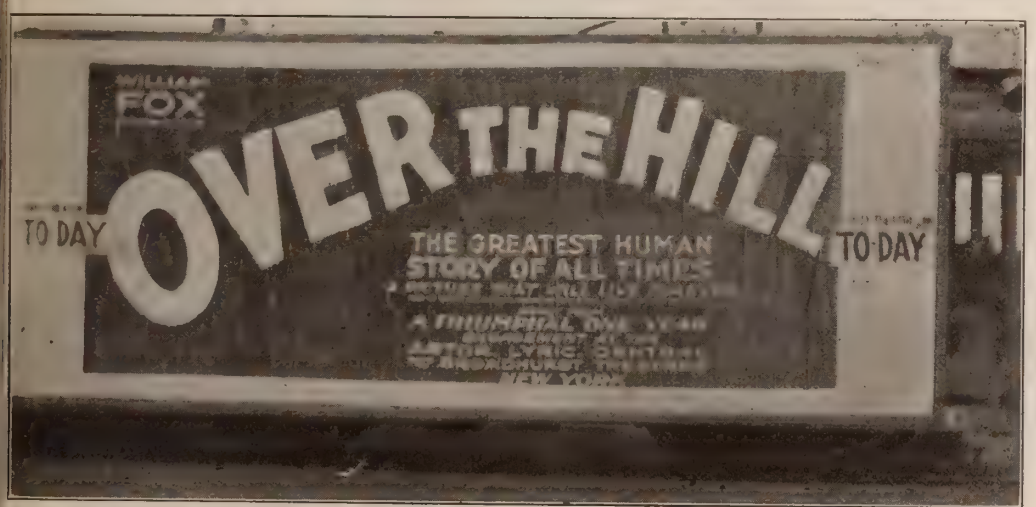
Hager's "Conflict" Campaign

Salt Lake City Branch Manager and Newspaper Effect Tie-up



IT has remained for Gus A. Hager, branch manager of Universal's Salt Lake City exchange, to develop a new way of co-operating with the exhibitors and newspapers of his territory.

When "Outside the Law" was released Mr. Hager, in planning his sales campaign, bethought himself of the daily papers of Salt Lake City and their lust for business in the circulation department. Accordingly Mr. Hager went to Norman E. Beck, dramatic and motion picture editor of the Salt Lake City Telegram, with a plan whereby he was to buy up a couple hundred one-month subscriptions to the Telegram and present them with his compliments to the exhibitors of the section. Beck, however, went him one better and offered to write each exhibitor a personal letter calling attention to Mr. Hager's complimentary subscription and also to direct their notice to the publicity and advertising then being run by the Kinema theatre on "Outside the Law." The letters went out and the papers followed. The small-town exhibitors were not in the habit of hearing from key city dramatic editors on the subject of pictures, so followed the publicity and display advertising pretty carefully. The final shot was a half-page in the Sunday dramatic section of the Telegram announcing the general release of "Outside the Law" and inviting exhibitors to wire for dates. The result was an avalanche of orders for Hager and the sailing made pretty easy for his salesmen in reaching the quota.

When "Conflict" was released the same stunt was worked with the same results. The entire cost of the exploitation for the entire territory was less than two hundred dollars and Hager's quota was reached and topped in record time.

The exhibitors were well pleased and, needless to say, the newspaper was also the winner, as when the dramatic editor had finished with the exchange's mailing list he turned it over to the country circulation manager, who lost no time in soliciting the exhibitors for a regular subscription to the paper on the strength of the motion picture news it carried.

Here is a new thought in selling films and incidentally is an idea that most newspapers will grasp. Even though your paper is hard boiled when it comes to picture exploitation it is a safe bet you can land this one.

Grauman's, Los Angeles, Stages Style Show

Sid Grauman has explored a new theatrical field, and as a result won the praise of newspaper critics when he staged a midwinter Fashion Show in which he also presented Max Fisher and his Ziegfeld Follies instrumentalists at the Grauman Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles, in conjunction with the showing of "Enchantment" during Thanksgiving Week.

The fact that never before in Southern California had a fashion show devoted exclusively to furs been attempted at this season in the year was a novelty which in itself attracted large crowds to the box office.

Mr. Grauman opened the act with Fisher and his ensemble playing current popular selections. When three airs had been rendered the fashion parade began. Clad in modish furs whose aggregate value exceeded $250,000, a dozen players from the Famous Players-Lasky studios, displayed the creations under spotlights as they walked across the balcony and descended the stairs to the stage, continuing until they disappeared in the wings. The set represented the ballroom of a leading Los Angeles hotel. When each creation had been displayed the actress-models appeared, and at various places on the balcony, on the stage, simultaneously as a finale. Meanwhile, as during the parade, the Fisher instrumentalists played accompaniments.

Settling the Cave-Man Argument

Do women love masterful men? This is the vital question that has absorbed all Boise, Idaho, when the story of the man with "heart hot as desert sands," "The Sheik," played there.

The Pinney theatre stirred the town to intellectual activity through the Boise Capital-News, and offered prizes of $10 in cash for the best 100-word essay and a box to the theatre for the second prize.

As usual, giving the contest to the paper threw the publicity on the front page with the increased value to the theatre.

Birmingham House Attractively Decorated

Stage settings and effects were provided Manager Phillips of Strand theatre, Birmingham, Ala., for his showing of "After the Show." Paper and cloth draperies, tassels and hangings on doors and walls, and from the ceiling, gave a proper atmosphere and helped intrigue the passersby.

Twenty-four Sheets Gets Attention of Klamath Falls Fans

Klamath Falls, Ore., may not be as big a city as New York, but H. W. Poole, the manager of the Liberty theatre there, believes in doing things in a big city way. Witness his exploitation for "Our Mutual Friend" and "The Old Oaken Bucket." Twenty-four sheets were used, an innovation for Klamath Falls, and the result was highly successful.

In addition, throw-aways were distributed at the homes of all of the residents. "You'll like the Liberty better after seeing 'Our Mutual Friend'," Mr. Poole advertised."

Chariot Race for "Sheba Again Used

A chariot race down one of the mai streets of Detroit was the most strikin feature of a singularly elaborate exploitation campaign conducted by the Fo Washington theatre for the "Queen o Sheba" engagement.

Two charioteers, attired in the flowin togas of Roman racers and driving tw white steeds staged a "slow" race down this street, attracting thousands of noon day lunchers and distributing in their flight large numbers of circus heralds The street was literally covered with th heralds, most of which were picked up by the curious onlookers. The chariots were plastered with large signs announcing the advent of the "Queen of Sheba."

Further exploitation consisted of making motion pictures of the crowds entering the theatre during the second week of the run of the picture, and showing them on the screen the following day. In this way many persons paid admission twice during the showing of the production—hoping to identify themselves or friends on the second visit.

Arrangements with advertising managers of most of Detroit's leading department stores resulted in the use of the phrase, "The Queen of Sheba Says," in their newspaper advertising copy for several days.

By tying up with a morning newspaper a contest was conducted for the school children of the city, in which prizes were awarded for the best stories concerning the legend of the Queen of Sheba and King Solomon.

Herald displays were placed in all the leading hotel lobbies, and hundreds of circus heralds were left in the offices of doctors and dentists throughout Detroit.

Window displays also were employed. It is said that this exploitation campaign was one of the most productive of good results ever attempted by a theatre in Detroit.

Special Screening Endorsements Sells "Over the Hill" at Albany

The Albany Club, the leading social organization of Albany, N. Y., through its secretary issued invitations to each of its members to attend a private view of "Over the Hill" and thus ushered in one of the most comprehensive exploitation campaigns ever attempted by Manager Elliott of the Clinton Square theatre in that city.

As a result of the exclusive showing, letters were received by Mr. Elliott from more than 100 of the 300 persons who witnessed this filming of the picture. Excerpts from the letters written by the more prominent members of the club were used in the copy of newspaper advertisements. These included the opinions of clergymen and business men.

The preview was so arranged as to put the entire burden of detail on the club, thus lending the prestige of having not the theatre but the organization offer the presentation. This cleared the way for long stories in the columns of the daily press. In this way the Governor of the State of New York was attracted and attended the showing.

Then came further campaigning. Five thousand sniped cards were printed and by means of attached strings were hung on door-knobs and on automobiles and other vehicles.

Window displays were placed in two phonograph stores, two music sheet stores and two leading stationery windows.

A special poster display was set up in the vicinity of the Albany railroad station, thus attracting attention of all the city's visitors. At the corner of the street where the theatre is situated another similar display was erected.

Hotels and restaurants throughout the business district of the city carried mention of "Over the Hill" on their window cards of menus. In the lobbies of the leading hotels displays of stills were made.

Masters Decorates for "Frontier of the Stars"

MANAGER MASTERS of the Capitol and Princess theatres, Bowling Green, Ky., had a good display at the latter house on "Frontier of the Stars." A veritable cloudland was created in the lobby, with painted card board and several colors of serpentine arranged and draped cleverly. Invisible wires strung through the clouds bore silver stars of all sizes scattered correctly at varying distances. Patrons expressed appreciation of the artificial fairyland.

Cooperative Advertising Wins in Winona

"Forbidden Fruit" just visited Winona, Minn., but its entry was one of triumph.

The Opera House got to work and asked the Republican-Herald for free space. The paper wanted some favors. So the theatre representative visited ten merchant friends, procured the necessary double truck and the paper was willing to come through with a four-page special section.

Goldman Has Fine Prologue for "The Sheik"

Managing Director William Goldman, of the Missouri theatre, in St. Louis, used a novel presentation effect to accompany "The Sheik," which was continued into its second week.

As the curtain arose on the Missouri Symphony Orchestra, seated as usual at this theatre in a semi-circle on the stage, a background of Oriental atmosphere was revealed, and then from the mists there arose a huge tent and far in the distance the desert. From the tent emerged The Sheik himself, a tenor soloist on the Missouri staff, bedecked in the Arabian garb, and who sang a weird, plaintive and musical interpretation of the picture as a sort of prologue.

The magnificence of the scene brought forth salvos of applause from the large audiences which saw each showing of the picture.

Stuart Booms "Down East"

Dallas Managing Director Plans and Executes Big Exploitation Campaign

HERSCHEL STUART, managing director of the Palace, "Dallas' Million Dollar Theatre," tells an interesting story of how he put "Way Down East" over to a successful engagement, despite the fact that the picture previously had been shown in Dallas as a road show attraction.

Mr. Stuart says he advertised conservatively ten days in advance of show date, and then goes on to tell how he hooked with an afternoon newspaper, obtaining twelve inches daily, for five days, announcing a newspaper matinee for school children on Saturday morning, getting two-column heads with cuts and other extra free reading matter in connection with the picture.

Mr. Stuart says he tied up with another afternoon paper for front page and other double-column layouts, calling attention to the newspaper's invitation to all people from New England states, now resident in or near Dallas, to see "Way Down East" on a designated afternoon and evening as the guests of the newspaper. A Dallas newspaper comic writer saw the picture in the character of "Uncle Jake," as he is known locally, and wrote a story of his experience at his "first modern picture presentation."

In the matter of outdoor exploitation Mr. Stuart used 1,500 sheets of lithographs, cloth banners, tack cards, etc., in the city of Dallas and the surrounding country. There also was a daily street parade at noon and evening with a "rube" orchestra on a float, carrying banners announcing the picture and dates.

There was used the character of "Seth Perkins" from Vermont, with a dog with a banner announcing the show. Heralds were distributed in hotel room boxes also.

At the presentation of the picture an orchestra played "Home Sweet Home" at the opening with red house-lights dimming down from maximum to darkness. Wind machines and ice machines were used also during the storm and the scene showing the ice floe. Blue house lights were dimmed during the snowstorm and the house cooling system was turned on.

Teaser Stuff Goes Good for "No Woman Knows"

Manager James F. Jackson, of the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, booked big on the "teaser" stuff when he played "No Woman Knows" for a week's engagement.

The billboards had been utilized and carried twenty-four sheets in screaming colors—a vivid yellow with black box-car letters—with such sentiments as "Will the Arms Conference Mean Universal Peace? No Woman Knows!" "How to Avoid Automobile Accidents—No Woman Knows!" "What Does Man Want Here Below? No Woman Knows!" and so on.

Then, beginning a week ahead of his play date, the local papers carried one-inch ads, with "teaser" lines similar to the bill boards.

A smashing ad on Sunday tied up the billboards and "teaser" stuff with the run of the picture.

The lobby carried a cut-out of Mabel Julienne Scott in a tense pose with a book under her arm, the book labelled "Fanny Herself." A display of the published book was made in the lobby, and a tie-up with a local book shop by reason of which they staged a special sale on the novels of Edna Ferber all added to the successful week.

New "Hush Money" Idea Originated

Manager Frank Miller, of the Rialto heatre, Augusta, went the Liberty Lady" unt one better when he played "Hush Money" for a two-day engagement re-ently.

In the first place Mr. Miller is one of ne few exhibitors who doesn't mind uilding up a special lobby set that seems make it difficult to enter the theatre. or this particular picture he built a white icket fence clear across the front of the heatre, entrance to and exit from the the-tre being almost concealed behind two ig red brick fence posts at either side of ne lobby.

Back of this fence, and completely hid-ng the front of the theatre, was a black rop, which made the white pickets of the ence, and the red brick posts stands out vivid relief.

Midway in the white pickets, in the cen-e of the lobby, was a flight of white-ainted steps, like an old-fashioned stile. hese steps were wide at the bottom and rowing narrow as they approached the op. At the foot of the steps, on either ide, were the canvas moneybags used by anks. These two were stuffed with peb-les and were marked $1,000. Two steps p were two bags marked $500, further eing $200 bags, and so on to the top. asted at intervals along the steps was tage money. At the top of the steps, ramed in money bags, was a giant silver ollar, made of cardboard. A hole had een cut so that a cloth could be drawn ver the mouth of the "Liberty Head," hus carrying out the idea of "Hush Money."

It was a lobby that attracted both at-ention and business.

East Indian Atmosphere Provided for Atlanta Lobby Front

A bit of India was transplanted to Atlanta for the week's run of "The Great Impersonation," by Manager Jack Kaliska, of the Rialto theatre, Atlanta.

The box office was masked behind cane and bamboo until it resembled a tiny Hindu hut. On either side of it were cocoa palms and bamboo. The floor was covered with a painted canvas which resembled the hard-packed earth and stones of a native village.

On either side of the little hut which was the ticket office were tiny fires—red electric bulbs with leaves scattered over them. Over these fires were the three sticks, Hindu fashion, which hold up the pots in which the natives cook.

The space between the box office and the entrance to the theatre was a thicket of undergrowth, with two or three cocoanut trees (cut-outs) and, hidden in this jungle, crouched as if about to spring, and only his head showing, was a great striped tiger—an amazingly life-like cut-out, borrowed from a circus poster, cut out and mounted by an Atlanta firm. The special lobby paid for itself several times over in added business.

"Over the Hill" Billed in Sixty Wisconsin Cities

There are approximately sixty towns near La Crosse, Wis., from which the La Crosse theatre often draws patronage. Reaching these numerous towns through paid advertising in the various local daily and weekly newspapers is a matter involving considerable expense, as well as labor; therefore the management of La Crosse's leading house seldom undertakes to reach this field in this way.

But with the showing of "Over the Hill," a new exploitation plan was conceived and executed with decided success.

Here was the little scheme which proved so advantageous:

With the assistance of a Fox representative, a special newspaper story was prepared which, ordinarily typed, would consume at least a half-column space. This story was typewritten (not printed), each sheet being made to appear as an original, and was sent to the editor of each newspaper in each of these neighboring towns.

The proposition placed before the editor was this: "You print the enclosed story and present your newspaper containing it at the door of our theatre, and we will permit you and your immediate family to see 'Over the Hill' as our guests."

Each seat being worth 50 cents and many editors bring four or five members of the family, it was a fair exchange of courtesies and lacked the usual flavor of free publicity.

In addition to this bit of exploitation, the management decorated several downtown windows with tie-up displays, used 600 placards about the city, arranged for elaborate street-car advertisements, and conducted a special showing for the clergyman, teachers and social leaders.

This window display was secured in the window of a local bank when "Little Lord Fauntleroy" played Ascher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee

Pfeifle Gets Merchants' Aid

Detroit Suburban House Puts Over Co-operative Exploitation

BUILDING up business at no extra cost is a problem that is bothering every theatre manager of outskirt houses in the country today, so perhaps a hint from H. R. Pfeifle, manager of the Priscilla, one of Detroit's suburban theatres, will give exhibitors an idea of good co-operative exploitation that won't cost them a nickel.

Pfeifle's main business getting scheme is the establishment of co-operative nights during each week, at which times he goes after the people with such magnets as free bread, free coal and free food stuffs of every kind.

The manager of the Priscilla first made arrangements with the leading bakery in his vicinity to give away 50 loaves of the bread they were introducing at his theatre on a certain night. The result was that Pfeifle had to call for the police to keep the crowd in order. He did a great business that night and the bread makers got a lot of real publicity out of the idea. Now they have a "bread night" once each week, at which time a certain number of loaves are given away.

Another idea worked out by Pfeifle was to make arrangements with a coal dealer to give away one ton of coal on a certain night each week.

Pfeifle is attempting to have something out of the ordinary to offer his patrons five out of the seven nights of the week. He contends that Saturday and Sunday will take care of themselves. The Priscilla manager's idea can be worked out in any neighborhood community where people burn coal, eat bread or folks sell these commodities.

Al Boasberg of the Paramount Detroit office exploitation department got first page publicity for "The Sheik," playing at the Broadway Strand, Detroit, when he sent out 500 telegrams to newspaper men and prominent people worded as follows:

"Take the entire family to see 'The Sheik' at the Broadway Strand."

(Signed) A Wise Man.

The stunt stirred up considerable excitement and one woman called the police because, as she said, "some one had sent her a telegram to get her out of the house so they could rob the place." Hundreds of people phoned the Broadway Strand to find what it was all about.

McClure Uses the Lobby Telegraph Stunt for "Old Nest"

For the presentation of "The Old Nest" in the Allen theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, during the week of November 7, Manager McClure established a public telegraph office in the lobby of the theatre through an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph Company. This was done because of the nature of the feature and because of the invitation which was flashed on the screen at the conclusion of the picture for patrons to send messages home to mothers or other loved ones.

Reading notices in the newspapers also told of the opening of a telegraph booth in the theatre lobby and the statement was made that very few would be able to resist the impulse to send a message home to mother or family.

Wireless Apparatus Installed as Lobby Display

Manager Willard Patterson of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, played "Gilded Lies" recently, for a return engagement, to a highly successful three-day run.

There is considerable business in the picture around a wireless machine, and counting on the curiosity of the "herd instinct," Manager Patterson had a small but complete wireless outfit set up in the lobby of the theatre, with an operator to run it. The crackling and sputtering of the instruments never failed to attract attention, and there was a crowd around the wireless machine for the entire three-day run—a great many of the spectators satisfying their curiosity by going into the theatre to watch the handsome Mr. O'Brien play with wireless in the picture.

Clergymen Attend Special Showing of "Over the Hill"

Fargo, S. D., was recently the scene of an agitation in opposition to motion pictures of a certain sort—in other words, of a demand for more strict local censorship.

Several clergymen had openly denounced from their pulpits the character of certain productions. Accordingly then, with this fact in mind, when "Over the Hill" was booked for the Strand theatre in that town, the management decided to exploit the picture in such a way as to convince all who might have been influenced by the general attack.

To begin with, invitations were extended to all the clergymen in Fargo and in neighboring towns to attend a private view of the picture a few days prior to the opening. In addition, most of the clergymen were spoken to over the telephone and urged to be certain to see the picture. In this way the presence of more than 90 per cent. of them was assured.

Following the showing, many of the ministers who had spoken against motion picture productions volunteered testimonial letters which contained commendation of "Over the Hill." These letters were used in part in the advertisements in the daily papers; and coming, as they did in several cases, from men who were supposed to be unalterably opposed to pictures, they had a double force.

In addition to the newspaper space, heralds were printed containing extracts from the letters and mailed to all the farmhouses within a radius of twenty-five miles of Fargo. This play upon popular sentiment produced the results it set out to accomplish, and the engagement of the picture was one of the most successful experienced by the Strand.

Several window displays were used in the business section of Fargo, and the town was well plastered with the appealing posters.

Bride and Groom Stunt Used at Florence, Ala.

MANAGER FRANK WARFEL, of the Majestic theatre, Florence, Ala., used a novel ballyhoo on "Man, Woman, Marriage." He built a wooden cage, mounted it on a wagon, and placed inside a man and woman chained together. They were dressed as bride and groom, the former being one of his boy ushers dolled up in a lovely gown, satin pumps, silk hose, bridal veil and "her" spouse was in evening clothes. Both were masked and created great interest on the streets. The horses carried theatre banners.

Use Your Title for All It's Worth

"'Don't Tell Everything,' but tell your friends that the New Liberty theatre, Peru, Ind., opens Thanksgiving Day at 12:30."

This was the wording of the knob-card gotten out by Manager Dale Loomis for his new house.

Loomis learned his exploitation lessons well. He wanted a lot of publicity. He didn't want to pay for it. He found the merchants entirely agreeable to co-operative propositions.

Magnificent Presentation for "The Sheik"

The most spectacular of operatic settings was outdone in the prologue to "The Sheik" arranged for the Roosevelt theatre, Chicago, by Manager R. C. McMullen. It cleverly reproduced in flesh one of the scenes of the picture.

As shown by the accompanying cut, the setting for the prologue was Egyptian, with the desert and pyramids on the back drop, pillars at the sides and on the stage palms, fans, rugs and cushions in oriental confusion. The curtain rose on an Arabian dance by a haremite and her attendant. A European girl, dressed as Agnes Ayres, reclined on an oriental divan.

The opening number was a soprano solo, "Allah's Holiday," sung by the European girl. This was followed by a baritone solo, "Kashmire's Song," started off stage and ending in front, sung by an artist in Sheik's costume. This baritone solo is the same as the one sung under the English girl's window in the picture.

As a climax Mr. MacMullen secured Lola Gonzales, an oriental dancer, for a personal appearance at his house. This number won rounds of applause at every performance.

How Herschel Stuart Exploited "Disraeli"

Because Disraeli, Prime Minster of England, was a Jew and the first of his race ever to become Premier of the British Empire, Herschel Stuart, managing director of the Palace theatre, Dallas, Texas, appealed directly to the Jewish people of Dallas in putting over "Disraeli."

Mr. Stuart induced the two local rabbis to announce the picture and the date of the engagement at each church service ten days in advance of the showing. Jewish Sunday schools also held contests with Palace tickets for prizes.

A ten-inch advertisement set in Jewish type was run in the local newspapers, being the first time such a thing ever was done. Because of this the ad created much comment and was noticed by many persons who otherwise would not have seen the announcement. The Jewish type also got a lot of free publicity when it was reproduced in the news columns, with a special news feature story bringing out the fact that Disraeli was one of the greatest Jewish statesmen.

Mr. Stuart virtually put the responsibility of playing "Disraeli" up to the Jewish people of Dallas. They, in turn, worked hard by word-of-mouth advertising to demonstrate that the Palace management was justified in booking the feature.

Mr. Stuart declares that the engagement was a financial success.

Morrison Pulls Sure Fire Stunt for "The Kid"

On this page will be found a cut showing the Chaplin and Jackie Coogan imitators induced to compete for prizes by J. A. Morrison, manager of the Star theatre, Meadford, Ont., in connection with the showing of "The Kid."

The stunt went over big, with plenty of press notices and interest from Meadford residents as the contestants marched about town. Mr. Morrison competed in the event.

Miller's Teasers Made Fremont Wonder

Fremont, Ohio, recently was threatened with a smallpox epidemic and in consequence theatres and churches went out of business temporarily, and Board of Health signs on Fremont residences were common sights.

About the time everything was back to normal, Carl F. Miller of the Strand theatre booked "The Sign on the Door."

One evening there appeared in the local papers a mysterious line reading "The Sign on the Door," and people wondered what it meant, naturally connecting the phrase with the smallpox scare.

A few days later Mr. Miller explained by display advertising and public curiosity and perhaps fears were satisfied.

Chinese Atmosphere Stressed in Lobby Display

For "Dawn of the East," at the Forsyth theatre, Atlanta, Manager Jack Kaliska built up a beautiful Chinese lobby. The lobby of the Forsyth is peculiarly adapted to this sort of thing, and the Chinese decorations were very effective. Trailing wistaria blossoms about a tea-house of narrow white laths, and sliding paper panels, with plenty of beautiful silken Chinese—as distinguished from Japanese—lanterns added their colorful note, as did a huge bowl of gold-fish mounted on a carved and lacquered Chinese pedestal.

In addition to the lobby, Manager Kaliska worked a street ballyhoo that was, perhaps, one of the best of its kind that has ever played Atlanta.

An elaborately carved sedan-chair, painted with much gilt paint and decorated in dragons, cherry blossoms and such things dear to the Chinese heart was built. A girl on the general type of Alice Brady, and dressed in Chinese garb that as nearly duplicated as possible the costume worn by Miss Brady for her wedding to the Chinaman in the picture, occupied the sedan-chair, which was borne through the streets by two husky bearers, dressed in Chinese costume, and preceded by a third, who carried a bing bell which he rang lustily. The bell attracted attention and the odd equipage held it—so it developed into most successful exploitation.

"Dream Street" Lobby Pleases Gadsden, Ala.

Assistant Manager Snell, of the Imperial theatre, Gadsden, Ala., built a fine lobby display on "Dream Street." A complete Chinese atmosphere was created; the ushers and ticket girls were dressed in correct costume, vari-colored lanterns of all shapes and sizes decorated the lobby; also strips of colored crepe and strings of beads. Several tea tables were used with bowls, chopsticks, etc., borrowed from the local laundry Celestial. several banners in Chinese characters were displayed with cards reading "Answered Inside" on them.

Searchlight Advertises "Over the Hill"

As a novel means of attracting attention to the front of his theatre during the run of "Over the Hill" Manager A. J. Diebold, of the Strand theatre, Waterloo, Ia., constructed a small parapet on the roof of the building on which he rested a 500-watt searchlight.

The searchlight swept the streets and buildings in the vicinity of the theatre and attracted general attention. Banner signs which were placed at various stations within a block of the house were given intermittent illumination by directing upon them the light from the roof.

Manager Diebold also ran a Mary Carr picture contest in the evening newspaper of Waterloo. It started five days prior to the opening of the production's run and aroused the interest of all school children in the community. Prizes of free tickets to the Strand were awarded to a number of winners. The contest was on identification of famous women in American history—a series of pictures for which Mary Carr, the mother in "Over the Hill," posed.

Clever Window Display Devised by Cross

An effective window display was obtained in a local store by Manager G. A. Cross of the Post theatre, Battle Creek, Mich., for his showing of "Dangerous Curve Ahead."

It consisted of a stretch of country landscape with a miniature railroad track in the foreground. A toy railway engine just starting to cross a bridge was being flagged by a toy man. At one side stood a toy wagon hitched up to a toy horse. One of the tracks of the railroad was bent where the road curved, showing that the train would be wrecked if it continued.

One of the "Dangerous Curve Ahead" traffic stanchions devised by Goldwyn to exploit the picture was placed where the track curved. A poster of the picture was shown at the left. In the background, partly concealed by shrubbery, was a house.

This window display received more favorable comment than almost any other picture exploitation stunt that Battle Creek has seen and Manager Cross estimates that it sent hundreds of patrons to the Post theatre while "Dangerous Curve Ahead" was playing.

Cantrell's Ballyhoo for "Gypsy Blood"

Manager Cantrell, of the Knickerbocker theatre, Nashville, Tenn., had good results from a ballyhoo on "Gypsy Blood" by the use of four "gypsy" girls in the uptown streets and stores. These were elegantly and wildly costumed and drew interest everywhere, many people insisting on having their fortunes told on the spot, but the novices were unequal to that. Instead they gave away Turkish cigarettes by the hundreds, wrapped in a neat slip of paper announcing the picture. A tent in the lobby with a kettle and artificial fire carried out the idea and a big cutout of Pola Negri was placed inside.

Setting used during Thanksgiving Week at the Tivoli theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., in connection with the engagement of "Two Minutes to Go"

Cut-out Tiger Used Effectively by Byars

For "Bucking the Tiger" when it played a three-day run at the Alamo No. 2 Manager Byars had built in his lobby an enormous cage, which also filled the space, allowing just a narrow strip on each side for entrance and exit. The cage had iron bars and the floor was covered with sawdust and straw, like a real circus cage.

Inside the cage was a startlingly realistic cut-out of a striped Bengal tiger, mounted in a position as if crouching about to spring.

Over the cage was a sign which read:

"The striped Bengal tiger of the jungles is no more dangerous than the 'tiger' of Chance—for the one only takes a human life, while the other fastens its foul claws on the very soul of its victim."

On one side of the lobby wall was a sign on cream-colored background, lettered in dull blue, with a cut-out of Conway Tearle just beneath it. This sign read "Would you sell yourself body and soul for $100,000? This man did. Why?"

Across the top of the theatre was a banner with several scenes from the advertising paper, cut out, and with such phrases as "See the glory—and the horror—of an Alaskan gold rush." "Thrills and adventure were his—until—but see the picture."

New One in the Street Car Ballyhoo Line

Ballyhooing a show from a street car is so old that it no longer causes the kids to run to curb, but when you ballyhoo the theatre from the only street car the town has ever seen it's a different story.

Manager Otto Schmid of the Ellen theatre, Bozeman, Mont., got a car from a neighboring town and had it towed along the interurban tracks to Bozeman. He put a single banner announcing "The Affairs of Anatol" and let the car drive the length of the tracks within the city limits. At times, when the tracks were clear, it ventured a few miles into the country to deliver its message to the farmers. A convenient spur cleared the road when the regular interurban came along.

Albany Manager Builds Fine Lobby Front

Fred Elliott, manager of the Clinton Square theatre, Albany, N. Y., with the assistance of a Fox representative, built an entirely new front for his house and executed a clever bit of exploitation during the recent run of "Thunderclap."

Decorations covering the front of the lobby gave the appearance of a large, artistically constructed billboard and hid everything but box office, entrance and exits. The large "billboard," had a background of dull yellow and attracted attention for several blocks in three directions, due to the triangular shape of its construction. On it were large, promiscuous letterings designed to give the atmosphere of the racetrack. Cut-outs of horses and judges' stands were superimposed on the background to lend additional color.

For street ballyhoo three men were dressed as jockies and sent through the city's streets astride of spirited horses. On the saddle clothes were canvas signs telling of the engagement at the Clinton Square.

Skinner's Shadow Box Display Finds Favor

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, is using some great shadow-box type frames in the lobby of the big west side neighborhood theatre in exploiting his productions.

For "At the End of the World" Mr. Skinner had a real eye-catcher. It was a maritime scene with a miniature lighthouse striking in the background. In the top of the lighthouse a bright light flashed out. This light caught the eye the moment one entered the lobby and the rest of the frame was so attractive that every one stopped to read it. Recently Mr. Skinner had a frame on "One Arabian Night" which also attracted a lot of attention.

Scenes from the sheets offered at the exchanges on the films are used. Figures are cut out, mounted on beaver board and placed in relief in the shadow box. Varicolored lights are placed at the bottom of the cut-outs. The lights are all hidden from view. The stunt is a departure from the usual placing of one-sheets in frames and gets the message over in classier form.

Thanksgiving week stage setting designed by Manager D. H. Finke of the Bellevue theatre Corp., Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Setter Provides Prologue for "Old Nest"

Manager Setter, of the new Diamond theatre, Bowling Green, Ky., staged a fine prologue on "The Old Nest." The curtain rose on a duplication of the last scene from the feature, with the seven actors appropriately chosen and costumed. A hidden quartet of local talent sang "A Mother's Rosary" as the mother mourned alone with her boy's photograph, and "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," when the father came in; then "My Old Kentucky Home," when the children appeared. Not a word was spoken throughout the prologue which consumed seven minutes. The effort aroused much favorable comment.

Johnson Stages Prologue for "One Arabian Night"

During the showing of "One Arabian Night" at the Rialto theatre, Omaha, Managing Director Julius K. Johnson staged an Oriental prologue which proved a sensation, and undoubtedly added to the success of the week's engagement.

The setting consisted of two beautiful drops, showing the interior of an Arabian palace with a soloist and dancer. The prologue opened with the orchestra playing the introduction to "The Vision of Salome," by Joyce, till the curtains were parted; then the soloist, G. Swanson, sang the old favorite, "Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold," after which the orchestra immediately went into the introduction of "The Dance of the Egyptian Maidens," by Shelley, which was presented by Miss Billert.

Mr. Johnson also planned a very effective exploitation campaign consisting of the pressbook teasers which were used a week in advance of showing, and the Prizma trailer two weeks in advance, with the result that the picture played to a big week's business.

Box Office Remodeled to Resemble Scene in Picture

For "A Trip to Paradise," when it played a two-day run at the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Manager Miller transformed his lobby into a box office such as was used in the picture.

The box office itself was concealed by three canvas "flats" painted a vivid yellow, and lettered in black. The sign, which was painted on the canvas itself, read "Take a Trip to Paradise—price fifteen and twenty-five." On one side was a crudely lettered hand, pointing inside and reading "This Way to Paradise."

A cut-out of Bert Lytell, with his megaphone, was made from a twenty-four sheet and mounted close beside the box office.

The vivid coloring of the canvas and the whole atmosphere helped.

Washington Post Honors Crandall Theatres

The Washington Post is running a series of rotogravure sections devoted to important Washington industries, and for the second of this series gave the six Crandall theatres in Washington and the executive staff of the same two pages of illustrations with appropriate captions.

On Page 6 of the artgravure section were exterior and interior pictures of the Metropolitan, Apollo, Avenue Grand, Knickerbocker, York, Savoy and Crandall's theatres. Down the centre of this page were cuts of Harry M. Crandall, Joseph P. Morgan, general manager; John J. Payette, assistant general manager; Nelson B. Bell, advertising and publicity director; Fritz D. Hoffman, auditor, and George A. Crouch, treasurer of the company.

Page 7 carried the bills for the week of the Post's issue at all of the Crandall string, with cuts of seven stars whose productions were being featured.

The head for Page 7 was "Washington's Foremost Amusement Enterprise."

The layout was artistic and the finest kind of institutional advertising for the Crandall theatres.

Small Town Manager Builds Fine Lobby Display

That exploitation of worth-while pictures pays in tangible box-office results, even in the smallest of towns, is the experience of Ernest Weldon, manager of the Jewel theatre, in Rusk, Texas.

When Mr. Weldon booked "The Girl From God's Country" he decided it was a picture well worth going after. With the aid of a few sheets of compo board he transformed his lobby into a scene from the North Woods. His box office, in the center, was turned into an imitation of a log cabin. Along either side were scenes showing lakes and snowclad mountains, painted on compo board, and on which were mounted cut-outs from the regular paper. For the center of the lobby in front of the box office he made a cut-out of the huge grizzly from a six sheet, which also carried his billing. Rocks, covered with pine needles and moss, added to the realism.

The novelty of the display not only brought out most of Mr. Weldon's townspeople to the showing, but people from many miles out of town, hearing of the lobby display, drove in to see it and to look at the picture.

Topeka Merchants Help Isis on "Man's Home"

The Isis theatre management put across its drive in Topeka, Kan., with an effective twist to the advertising hook-up plan used by many theatres in conjunction with local merchants. "A Man's Home" furnished an excellent title and opportunity to advertise the furnishings and needs of a man's home and the double-truck in the Topeka capital proved how merchants of the Kansas capital took advantage of their oppportunity.

A ticket feature, as a prize offering, gave a "double twist" to the advertising hook-up. An illustration was cut into sections one inch square, and one of these squares was inserted in every advertisement comprising the double-page spread. The trick was to cut out and assemble these sections of the illustrations into a complete picture. Then it was necessary to return with each illustration the names of the twenty-one advertisers in the "spread," together with a mention of what they advertised.

For the first ten correct answers four tickets each were given; for the next twenty correct answers two tickets were offered, and the next twenty approved replies won a single ticket each, making a total of 100 tickets to the Isis for "A Man's Home" engagement. The scattered sections of the illustration made a talking point for the theatre management —and "A Man's Home" was mentioned in every one of the merchant's advertisements, being appropriately worked into the text of the announcement.

Free Passes Still a Bait

You can still bribe a small boy on passes. Joseph D. Schwarz, manager of the Universal theatre, Auburn, N. Y., got a whole boy scout patrol to parade for "Experience" during the four-day run of the picture.

Each boy carried a stick holding a card making up one of the letters of the title.

Unemployed Used to Exploit "Man from Lost River"

Giving work to the unemployed and adapting it to the exploitation of a picture is the unique method that Manager Henry J. Gould of the Hippodrome, Ft. Worth, Texas, adopted for "The Man From Lost River."

He engaged seven men out of jobs and sent them through the town carrying a large banner, about thirty feet long by three wide, which read: "We are unemployed, but the Hippodrome gave us a job advertising 'The Man From Lost River.'"

The Star-Telegram gave Mr. Gould a three-column picture of this banner stunt in its Sunday issue of November 6, the men having been posed for the photograph, carrying the banner, in front of the Hippodrome.

Mr. Gould also obtained for "The Man From Lost River" one of the most attractive window displays seen in Ft. Worth. It was in the main window of the Veihl-Crawford Hardware Company, and consisted of a log cabin on the right, with a campfire at the left, with guns, cartridges, cooking utensils, photographic enlargements of stills of the photoplay. There were crowds about the window all day long.

Novel Style Show Presented at Cleveland

George Dumond, managing director of Loew's State theatre, Cleveland, took advantage of the time, the place and the opportunity to stage an effective style show in conjunction with a local ready-to-wear store, the Oppenheim Collins Company.

Through the Oppenheim Collins Company Dumond secured the mannikins and the fashion exhibits that had been displayed at the local clothing manufacturers' style show at the Winton Hotel.

The style show opened with the stage looking exactly like the exterior of the Oppenheim Collins store on Euclid avenue. Windows with display figures, background, and sign over the windows, all as Clevelanders are used to seeing it on their regular shopping expeditions.

The window set was a tableau. The heavy velvet curtains were pulled. Then to snappy music the models came out from the wings, one at a time, walked to the center of the stage, then out on a runway that was built over the orchestra pit right out into the audience. The runway was well lighted, of course, and the effect was similar to a musical comedy.

Occasionally the display of gowns was interrupted by a vocalist, whose songs came as a pleasant interlude.

As a grand finale, the models again appeared in the window set.

The women elbowed each other out of the way all week to get down in front to see the beautiful gowns. Manager Dumond says that he had hundreds of women come in for the style show alone.

Paper Sacks Sell "After the Show" for Steege

Will Steege, of the Capitol theatre, Grand Falls, Mont., saw to it that practically every grocer and marketer in town ran their paper sacks through a press printing advertisements for "After the Show."

Suggestions by an exhibitor on establishing close relationship with the public

By HARRY L. NEWMAN

THE second of the "Chats With You" series by Harry L. Newman, designed for use by exhibitors as institutional advertising, is presented on this page.

The articles are compiled from programs used by Mr. Newman while manager of the Victoria theatre, Ossining, N. Y.

The Mailing List

Would you keep it if it reached you in your morning mail?

Of course you would, and that is what hundreds of enthusiastic patrons of ——— ——— are doing. The management will be pleased to mail to you our program regularly every week if you will leave your name and address at the box-office. So, if you are not already one, become a regular program reader. Get the latest information regarding film plays and players, news about screen favorites, etc. If you already are on our mailing list you may enter the name of any friends who you think would like to receive our weekly program. We will be pleased to send them one and will thank you for your interest in them and the ——— theatre.

Our Aims

The presentation of the photoplay is a study, and we are constantly aiming to improve every feature that makes for your greater enjoyment of our shows. The same great care is also exercised in selecting and making up our musical program. Our attendants show the utmost courtesy at all times—in fact, we make it our motto to cater to your smallest desire. We know the kind of theatre you desire and we run it accordingly. It is yours, use it, for it contains that indescribable something called "Home."

Opportunities

It frequently happens that just a little hint, dropped casually, will set up a train of thought in my mind that will lead to an excellent publicity plan, or to a scheme of house betterment that will work to decided advantage for all concerned. These paragraphs are just little hints intended for that purpose. So with this issue of the "Victoria Chat" we throw open our columns to such of the public as may have suggestions to offer upon any matter connected with the art of photoplay matters and the operation of our theatre or the stars or plays which we announce.

Newman Gives Philly the Once-Over

News Traveling Representative Calls on Quaker City Exhibitors and Exchangemen

HARRY L. NEWMAN who is making a Coast to Coast tour in the interests of Motion Picture News stopped at Philadelphia on the first leg of his trip.

He pens some interesting sidelights concerning the men of Film Row and the exhibitors of the Quaker City.

They are presented herewith on this page.

ON reaching Philadelphia I dropped into the offices of the Stanley Company. In due time I found myself closeted with Frank W. Buhler, general manager of the concern, who is a very enthusiastic prosperity rooter. Mr. Buhler looks after the 48 houses controlled by the Stanley Company. The new Stanley theatre is a palace. It was meant for the Stanley's best and they have accomplished their purpose.

The Karlton is the newest house in the string and is another model theatre. I had the pleasure also of meeting Mr. Einstein, advertising and publicity director for the Stanleys. He handles all the exploitation and advertising for the 48 houses and is a congenial and businesslike chap.

The Aldine is another new Philadelphia house, having opened its doors on Armistice Day. It is under the direction of Fred D. and M. E. Felt and is a dream. The seating capacity is 1,500, all on the main floor. Also met Ray Brown and am not overstating when I say he is one of the finest. The Ambassador is another of the Felt Brother houses. It is located in West Philadelphia and seats 1,500.

Another nice house, also new, is the 69th Street theatre, located in the residential section. D. Berkery is the manager.

Among the film exchange men I met, George M. Dembrow, the Fox branch manager, was first. Mr. Dembrow is a live wire and one of the best known film men in the territory, having been on the job for nine years.

Max Milder, of the Selznick office, is another oldtimer, having been in charge of the office five years. Mr. Milder before coming to "Philly" was branch manager for General Film at Pittsburgh.

Vitagraph's manager here is John P. Bethell, who also is an old G. F. man. He has been with Vitagraph two years, and is a warm friend of the exhibitors and a man of strong personality.

Eli M. Orowitz, the local Paramount exploiteer, and I had quite a chat. We talked advertising and exploitation and didn't fail to agree on what is good stuff.

I have interviewed George P. Arrons, the popular secretary of the M. P. T. O. A., and found him an efficient business man, thoroughly sold with his job and ready to help boost for the good of the industry.

Another exchange manager I have called on is E. J. Smith, of Universal. Mr. Smith has been here a year and a half, coming from Cleveland. His slogan is "Keep going—While You Rest, You Rust," and he lives up to it. M. Lessey looks after the Screencraft Film Co. handling states rights features. The Red Seal Film Co. is managed by W. R. Priest. Another live-wire state rights concern is the Twentieth Century Company, with Gene Marcus in the driver's seat. J. Singer, of the Blue Ribbon Film Company, is having success with a number of big features and is a strong booster for the NEWS. The De Luxe Film Company is headed by A. Luchese. He has a lot of big ones playing solid in his territory.

Educational's exchange is managed by C. S. Goodwin. He is a hustler and Educational's short subjects are well represented in all theatres. Getting back to exhibitors I have met, I can mention with pleasure Mr. Leopold, the energetic manager of the Colonial theatre, Germantown; Mr. Madden, who is in charge of the Great Northern theatre, another Stanley house; W. C. Hunt, who looks after a half dozen houses, among which are the Logan and Auditorium; George T. Cravenstine, the young representative of the Carman theatre; Ben Schindler, of the Victoria and Family; Harry Martin, of the Midvale theatre; Morris Lampert, who is now connected with the Rialto; Sam B. Blatt, of the Owl, and William Weber, a newcomer at the Logan.

Am leaving here for Harrisburg and Pittsburgh.

New Malcolm Strauss Film

"Tears of the Sea," by Author of "The Jest," Features New Star

"TEARS of the Sea," soon to be released by the Associated International Pictures, marks the American screen debut of Miss Isabelle Savory, the noted English actress who will be seen as the featured player. Malcolm Strauss, president of the Associated International Pictures is responsible for the starring of the vivacious Miss Savory.

Those who recognize the name of Malcolm Strauss will recall his varied experience as one of America's foremost artists before his entrance into the motion picture field. Having witnessed Miss Savory's histrionic triumphs upon the spoken stage, coupled with that of her great beauty, Mr. Strauss came to the conclusion that her endeavors would be far more enhanced through the medium of the screen.

In "Tears of the Sea," Miss Savory's forthcoming production, the Associated International Pictures were fortunate in having Sam Benelli write the story with her in mind for the stellar role. Benelli is remembered by New Yorkers as the author of "The Jest," in in which Jack and Lionel Barrymore appeared.

In making an announcement regarding "Tears of the Sea," Mr. Strauss had the following to say: "Tears of the Sea," Means something more besides a motion picture. Nothing has been left undone to give it all the artistry to elevate the standard of the screen. We feel that it will lend dignity, perception and subtlety to a much abused form of drama. We can safely assert that the Associated International Pictures will take every step in the definite hope that it will prove a boon to the industry. In bringing Sam Benelli, the author, and Miss Isabelle Savory as the featured player before screen followers. We believe that we are merely serving as the logical channel to preserve those traditions to which our organization has dedicated itself."

"School Days" Has Preview

Warner Feature, Starring Wesley Barry, is Shown to N. Y. Audience

OVER 1,200 people, ranging from the enthusiastic motion picture "fan," the exhibitor and up to the state official, greeted the preview presentation of Warner Brothers' latest production, Gus Edwards' "School Days," starring Wesley Barry, at the Astor Hotel, December 1, with an enthusiasm that has seldom been accorded a similar occasion. The picture was produced by Harry Rapf, and directed by William Nigh, who also collaborated in writing the story with Walter De Leon.

Long before the curtains were drawn apart to reveal a school room scene which served as a prologue to the picture, the crowds fairly swarmed into the Astor ballroom. The orchestra was capably conducted by Erno Rapee, whose baton is wielded daily over the Capitol theatre musicians. For the prologue, a schoolroom with eight children, four on each side of the room, presided over by a school teacher, Margaret Seddon, one of the principals in the picture, greeted the audience.

As a prologue suggestion for other exhibitors to follow who book the picture, the schoolroom idea is practical and inexpensive. Local talented youngsters can be used to advantage in putting the picture over. The teacher's desk was placed in the center of the room. Behind her was a large blackboard covered with kid scribblings. Over the blackboard was hung an American flag and a map. On either side of the room were two windows close to which were placed photographs of Lincoln and Washington.

Just after singing the "School Day" song, the children stood at attention and pledged allegiance to the American flag. Then the many famous Gus Edwards melodies were sung, interspersed with clever dancing by the youngsters. The revue lasted about twenty minutes.

A review of the production is printed in another section of this issue.

"The Right Way" to Open at Broadway Theatre

Announcement is made this week by the Producers Security Corporation that "The Right Way," the Thomas Mott Osborne feature production, will start its New York run at the Broadway theatre, beginning December 11th.

"The Right Way" is a prison story, personally produced by Mr. Osborne, and adapted to the screen by Basil Dickey.

News Syndicate Publicizes "His Nibs"

ONE of the greatest news-tie-ups offered to a motion picture was arranged between the Division of Exploitation of the Exceptional Pictures Corporation and the Newspaper Enterprise Association. The picture so exploited was "His Nibs," the five-reel comedy in which Charles (Chic) Sale the star, transfers seven of his rural characters to the screen.

A feature article on "His Nibs" was particularly adaptable for circulation by the N. E. A. Service, for one of the most popular cartoons circulated by the N. E. A. is "The Old Home Town" by Stanley, showing the daily happenings of a small rural village. "His Nibs" has a setting similar to that of "The Old Home Town," and James W. Dean, the feature writer for the N. E. A. reviewed the picture, characterizing "Chic" Sale as being the best contemporary mimic of rural and small town types. Mr. Dean's story ran nearly a column in length, and was illustrated by five photographs of Mr. Sale, four of them showing the clever protean artist in the character roles he plays in "His Nibs."

"The Master of Beasts" Interests Buyers

"The Master of Beasts," which is the first release of Hirsh's Jungle Series of four five-reel wild animal pictures, is said to be of extraordinary interest and developed in an unusual manner. In regard to the picture Mr. Hirsh stated: "When I arranged for the production of this series I bore in mind the fact that there are several good animal subjects on the market and I determined to develop my jungle series along different lines. I considered it to be to the best interest of exhibitors to offer them a complete five-reel subject, of which there will be four in this series, each independent of the other. There is a never diminishing lure for every one in the great beasts of the jungle, and the magnificent Hagenbeck collection of these creatures forms the nucleus about and through which stories of perilous adventure, high courage, romance and touches of humor are woven."

Mr. Hirsh stated that numerous buyers of territorial rights are now negotiating for the series.

Board of Review Praises

"The Four Seasons" Listed Among Current Exceptional Photoplays

IN the November Bulletin of "Exceptional Photoplays" just published by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, the Urban Popular Classic, "The Four Seasons," heads the list of the Department entitled "Current Photoplays Containing Points of Exceptional Merit." The reviewer says in part:

"As its title suggests, the pictorial background of this film is the changing aspect of Nature through the cycle of the year. The idea, however, has not been to present Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter as subjects for the scenic, but to indicate each season's significance by the corresponding changes that go on in the forms and habits of all living things.

"In this way the picture of each season becomes the setting for a series of scenes depicting the struggle of each form of life to adapt itself to the circumstances of Nature that enfold it. The forms of life are thus made characters in a real drama, none the less gripping because it has only to do with such widely different folk as the elk, the eves-swallow, the snake and the tadpole.

"It is evidence of the success of the film that each of these beings, as its life comes into play against one natural condition after another, takes on a personality and thereby creates in the spectator an interest in its fate. The episode which first shows the ground hog asleep in its hole deep beneath the snow—so soundly asleep that it appears petrified—and then being placed, apparently still lifeless, within the reach of artificial warmth, where it stirs and wakes as if at the touch of real Spring, while affording true comedy, arrests the attention with that wonderment that accompanies a revelation. It is like watching a purpose, hidden and unsuspected, reveal itself. The picture discloses many of such things to us, sometimes with an amount of very fine detail. . . .

"The sum of it all is that 'The Four Seasons' is a distinct invention in the matter of the instructional-entertainment film."

"Heedless Moths" Bookings

Audrey Munson Picture Starts Run on Two New York Circuits

FOLLOWING its premiere at the Greenwich Village theatre at $2.00 top, and its run at the Frazee theatre on 42nd street at similar prices, "Heedless Moths" starring Audrey Munson, has been booked by Fox and Loew theatres throughout Greater New York and New Jersey.

At Loew's State Theatre, B'way at 45th street, the picture drew thousands who have read of Audrey Munson and her reputation as America's most beautiful, most versatile artist's model who in "Heedless Moths" enacts by far the best picture of her career.

The bookings were completed by Messrs. Mills and Berkowitz of the Elk Photo Plays who are rapidly forging to the front as among the coming Independents in the Metropolitan field. "Heedless Moths" is winning a large number of bookings not alone in the Metropolitan district but all over the State of New York, states Equity.

"Exhibitors who have seen "Heedless Moths" in private pronounce it to be one of the most lavishly staged, best directed and best acted pictures of the present season," announces Equity. "It is unquestionably one of Robert Z. Leonard's costliest photo dramas and reflects in every scene the money spent on this production. 'Heedless Moths' will play one week in Newark, and will be exploited for showings in Paterson, N. J., at the American theatre, also at the Fulton theatre in Union Hill, N. J. The Halsey theatre has also completed booking arrangements for a special showing of this picture."

Reggie Morris to the Fore

Producer of Arrow-Speed Comedies Talks on New Comedy Methods

"ARE Husbands Happy?," is the very appropriate title of the forthcoming Arrow-Reggie Morris Speed Comedy set for immediate release. This is the sixth of the series of twelve comedies made under the direction of Reggie Morris and which Arrow is distributing throughout the world. While Reggie Morris was at work with his band of young and eager funsters on the coast, Frank Marshall, the business leader of the concern, paid a visit to the East, and intermediate cities, to look after the affairs of this growing comedy organization.

The Morris Company was formed last winter and so far has made and released six Speed Comedies, which are meeting with great success.

"Directors of motion pictures are plentiful enough but comedy makers are few," states Mr. Marshall. "The sense of continued humor which you must put on the screen is one of the things that few individuals possess and can commercialize.

"One of the Reggie Morris pictures now in course of release is a burlesque fight picture. It was necessary to have a numerous audience, not quite so big as that which Mr. Dempsey and Carpentier performed before, but big enough to constitute a real fight audience. So out go Morris and his lieutenants into the unemployed sections of Los Angeles and hire no less than five hundred at $2.50 per day with coffee, sandwiches and desert thrown in to go into the studio and see Acroyd, the Morris comedian, wallop the big fellow.

"Reggie Morris Company is unique in many respects. Keene Thompson writes all the stories which are gone over by the company in session. Then again each member of the company in addition to his salary is given stock equal to his salary week by week."

Record Speed in Printing Movie Ball Film

Initiative was displayed Saturday night by Screen Snapshots and the Republic Film Laboratories when motion pictures taken during the evening at the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce Ball at the Hotel Astor were rushed to the laboratory, developed and printed, cut, titled, assembled, and rushed back to the Astor where they were shown in the Ballroom before the Ball was over.

The whole thing required exactly one hour and twenty-seven minutes, not including the "shooting" of the scenes, which was done throughout the evening by Kenneth Carson, Ray Foster and Willard Van der Veer, under the supervision of Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn.

Bible Features to Be Withheld Until Feb.

Louis Weiss, of Artclass Pictures Corporation, which organization controls the super production of the Old Testament, has announced that this subject will not be presented on the screen as a feature entertainment for legitimate theatres until the New Year. It had been proposed to present this film in one of New York's leading theatres during the Christmas season as a particularly appropriate entertainment for that period of the year. Due to the extraordinary amount of work necessary to whip the several thousand feet of negative into feature length, however, it has been found impossible to finish the task in sufficient time.

At the present moment it is believed that the Bible film will be ready as one of the new season's attractions about the middle of February.

"Mother Eternal" to be Sold Solid Shortly

According to the number of sales made on state rights for Ivan Abramson's feature, "Mother Eternal," starring Vivian Martin, which had an extended run at the Casino Theatre, conditions throughout the independent field are gradually becoming better, states Abramson. Independents have been quick to realize the box-office value of this production, and to date it has enjoyed splendid bookings. Negotiations for territories unsold indicate that "Mother Eternal" will shortly be booked solid.

Mae Murray Will Take Scenes in Cuba

Mae Murray and Robert Z. Leonard are on their way to Cuba for the Spanish shots of the next Tiffany Production. Mr. Leonard and his staff crowded into a few weeks months of preparation, and trunks of costumes and props are on the same train which is speeding southward to Key West with Miss Murray and the Tiffany director general on board.

A title for Miss Murray's next offering has not as yet been determined. The picture will be from an original story by Edmund Goulding, who will also write the continuity.

Brandt-Davis Offer New Feature

"LIFE'S GREATEST QUESTION," the new George H. Davis-Joe Brandt special feature which has been heralded as a successor to these producers' popular "The Heart of the North," is offered on the States Right market this week.

Mr. Brandt and Mr. Davis who produced the picture, have personally started the sales campaign and already, it is reported, are receiving numerous inquiries from franchise holders on "The Heart of the North" requesting first view of this feature in their territory.

There is an added interest in this picture in that, like its predecessor, a Harry Revier Production, it is announced as a "double-edge" attraction in that it is both a story of the great Northwest with its setting in the heart of the open places, and at the same time, a problem play of the so-called "society drama" type which could have its setting anywhere. Billed as "an emotional play of a woman's problem should she have told?"

The story revolves mainly around four people—the husband, played by Harry von Meter; the wife, Nan Cumberland—Louise Lovely; the Man in the Case, played by Roy Stewart; and the Girl—Dorothy Valegra—and it is of interest to those who admired Roy Stewart's work in "The Heart of the North" that he is again seen in the romantic role of a member of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police.

The title of the picture lends itself to special teaser and feature exploitation and special work is to be done along these lines.

Acclaim Skinner's Return

Exceptional's Announcement of "Mister Antonio" Excites Trade

INNUMERABLE commendatory messages have been received by Alexander Beyfuss, president of Exceptional Pictures Corporation, following the announcement of the signing of Otis Skinner for a photoplay version of his most successful play, "Mister Antonio," by that company.

From every department of the industry have come words of congratulation for the progressiveness of Exceptional Pictures in bringing back to the silent drama one who will lend to it dignity and artistry such as will always find a ready place within it.

Exhibitors have shown a keen interest in the announcement of Otis Skinner in "Mister Antonio," as it is an assurance of one of the worthwhile productions upon which the theatres may base their hopes for the upbuilding of patronage. It is pictures of the type of "Mister Antonio" that draw new patrons to the motion pictures, and through them are held as future devotees of the silent drama.

No detail is to be spared by Exceptional Pictures in the arrangements for the actual production of "Mister Antonio." The sincere endeavor which has characterized its past achievements will be placed behind everything that goes toward the making of Otis Skinner's production. No effort will be neglected to make it the outstanding light of the coming season. Plans are already being laid for the careful working out of every feature which will go into the completed "Mister Antonio." From the original continuity to the final cutting, the sincerity of effort for which Exceptional Pictures is known, will be imparted to every factor.

Mystery in Jungle Serial

Col. Selig Promises Some Weird Scenes in His "Jungle Goddess"

COLONEL WM. N. SELIG, in making "The Jungle Goddess," the new fifteen episode animal-jungle chapter picture which the Export & Import Film Company will market, is said to be shooting a good many scenes in which mechanical contrivances add greatly to the air of mystery and weirdness predominating the serial.

"In heightening the effect of mystery in 'The Jungle Goddess,'" says the Colonel, "I am proportionately increasing the box-office value of this serial. I have made a close study of movie audiences. I have found that it is the unusual in settings and action which helps to intensify the audience's interest.

"The script for 'The Jungle Goddess' calls for action, plenty of action, taking our leading characters in a swirl of complications across three continents. The speeding train, the submarine, the airplane and the radio are all called upon to play their parts in furnishing thrills for this chapter-photoplay.

"But I am going further than anyone has ever gone before, to make a real animal-jungle masterpiece serial. I am putting wild animals into scenes hitherto thought impossible. I am coupling the terrors of the jungle with the actualities of modern life.

"To top this off I am introducing in 'The Jungle Goddess' some mystery figures which will score a knock-out with serial audiences. In one weird jungle city set there will be a monster figure of a jungle god. By a carefully built up mechanical contrivance it is possible to move the giant arms of this grotesque form."

Publication of Stories Acts as Sale Spurs

The film industry, remarkable for strange combinations which many times aids ventures, has just handed the Alexander Film Corporation one of the most profitable Xmas presents of 1921.

In buying the American rights to the "Sherlock Holmes" fifteen 2-reel features each a complete subject some months ago, the Alexander Corporation laid out an exhaustive plan for exploiting and selling the series. Then several weeks ago the W. R. Hearst publications started a nation-wide public interest in the great fiction detective by beginning a new series of "Sherlock Holmes" in their Hearst Magazine which covers the country to an extent of approximately over two million readers.

Without appreciation of the conflagration of a new interest in Sir Conan Doyle's hero that the Hearst stories had started, Mr. Jack Levy of the Alexander Film Corporation, last Wednesday was all packed and ready to start on a Coast to Coast selling tour when incoming mail, 'phone and wire inquiries regarding the "Sherlock Holmes" features began to pile into the firm's headquarters. After the inquiries had been assayed and their sales percentages estimated, Mr. Levy instantly unpacked and decided to sell the product comfortably from the home office instead of overland main lines.

Allene Ray Campaign in Full Swing

Substantiation of the talk of a brightening market comes in the announcement of Bert Lubin, president of the Western Pictures Corporation, producers of the new series of six Allene Ray features, that the sales campaign on these pictures which opened a week ago has already resulted in the sale of two territories.

Lester Scott, traveling representative for Lubin, has closed a contract for the six pictures with the All Star Features Company of Detroit, for Michigan territory. Mr. Lubin personally closed with Mr. Chadwick of the Merit Film Company of New York for New York State and Northern New Jersey for the entire series of six Allene Ray pictures.

Weiss Brothers Control New Producing Unit

LOUIS WEISS, one of moving spirits in Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation and Artclass Pictures Corporation, announced this week that Weiss Brothers has taken the entire control of a new producing unit formed recently under the name of Clarion Photoplays, Inc., George Merrick and Max Cohen, formerly associated in the above mentioned organization, have withdrawn and Clarion Photoplays, Inc., is now officered as follows: Max Weiss, president; Louis Weiss, vice president, and Adolph Weiss, treasurer.

Harry G. Kosch, attorney for Weiss Brothers' various interests, has been appointed secretary of Clarion Photoplays, Inc., which controls a considerable number of stories from the pens of well known authors. It is stated that this new organization holds the photoplay rights to more than seventy-five stories written by such well known authors as Jack London, Rex Beach, Rupert Hughes, Gertrude Atherton, Mary Roberts Rhinehart, Sir Gilbert Parker, James Oliver Curwood and others. Plans are now in course of construction for the production of a star authors' series of pictures, four in number each year.

New Female Lead for Monty Banks

Thelma Worth, cousin of Betty Compson, has been engaged by Jack Warner, of Warner Brothers, to play the leading feminine role opposite Monty Banks in the forthcoming new series of Banks comedies.

Miss Worth is a protegee of Miss Compson, having studied the technique of acting before the camera under the personal supervision of her talented and renowned cousin.

"Nature's Babies" to Run in Philadelphia

"Nature's Babies," the Urban special which ran for eight weeks at the Criterion theatre during the run of "Peter Ibbetson" has been selected by Frank W. Buhler, of the Stanley Corporation in Philadelphia, to run indefinitely at the new Carlton theatre there during the engagement of Cecil De Mille's newest picture, "Fool's Paradise."

"Nature's Babies" is only one of the tremendous collection in Mr. Urban's "Animal Kingdom" series. They are all produced by the Kineto Company of America, Inc.

Interest in "Pasteboard Crown" Grows

Beginning with the preliminary arrangements for making a screen production of "A Pasteboard Crown," an unusual interest has been evidenced in all branches of the industry. Possibly this is due, primarily, to the fact that it is the first novel written by the great emotional actress of a past generation, Clara Morris, and the initial attempt to dramatize her book, for the screen.

The original adaptation, in the document of a synopsis, was written by Eve Unsell, just after she returned from abroad some months ago, and previous to her present affiliation with R-C pictures. The scenario and continuity was compiled by Thomas F. Fallon.

"A Pasteboard Crown" offers admirably as a screen play. It is an example of the clean, wholesome type of entertainment Messrs. Nathan & Semerad believe the public want. Yet it is equipped with all the requisites of entertaining value, heart interest, suspense and tangible plot.

Since the picture has been complete the producers have been agreeably surprised and gratified at the number of inquiries had from all parts of the country, regarding the distribution of their picture, and as to when it will be available.

Sees England's Return to Pre-War Conditions

William Alexander of the Alexander Film Corporation now in London to pilot the popular English screen player, Billy Norwood, to this country, has just cabled to his associates a message putting a new aspect on film conditions in London and Great Britain generally.

The situation Mr. Alexander finds at present is prognosticative of a swift and substantial return of the United Kingdom's post war film patronage. Only in Ireland are things still discouraging.

"The Price of Youth" Neva Gerber's Latest

Arrow-Ben Wilson's star, Neva Gerber, is completing work on the coast, in her newest and latest production, "The Price of Youth," a title of course tentatively selected, as all titles are and must be these times.

Hoxie Working on New Arrow Picture

Arrow's Western cowboy star, Jack Hoxie and Company are at work on the third release of the special series of which the renowned Jack is the bright, particular star. "Under Orders" is the tentative title and the direction is in the hands of Roy Clements.

"Oh, Mabel Behave" Is Sold Abroad

LAST week one of the quickest foreign deals ever recorded was closed when Nathan Hirsh, president of Photocraft Productions, Inc., sold the Great Britain rights of "Oh Mabel Behave" to M. P. Sales Co., of London. The American representative, after viewing the picture, cabled Mr. Nichols to lose no time in securing the rights of this attraction and the next day Mr. Hirsh received a cable from Mr. Nichols requesting the contract to be forwarded for signing.

An unusually large number of state right buyers were in town the past week, all of whom called at the Photocraft offices to see this much talked of production, and negotiated for their respective territories.

Johnny Hines Finishes New Torchy Comedy

Johnny Hines, the young American comedian, and star with the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., has completed his fifteenth Torchy comedy under the title of "Torchy's Luck." According to Mr. Burr it is the most elaborate of the series. Several well known people were engaged for this special film, among them being Louise Lee and Ace Hamilton, the 425-pound comedian, who is well known for his work in several big features. Mr. Hamilton makes a good comedy partner for Mr. Hines, and the two have some fine comedy situations. In one of the scenes a trained rat is used, and twenty-seven cats. A number of street scenes were built, which is something unusual for a two-reel picture. George Peters, one of the best camera men of the day, was especially engaged.

Warner Buys Rights for "Out of the Inkwell"

The exclusive distribution rights for California of Max Fleischer's famous cartoon series, "Out of the Inkwell," were purchased recently by S. L. Warner, and the rights for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey by Warner Brothers, it is announced.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Assd. Exhibs Announces Coming Releases

ASSOCIATED Exhibitors offer for release on December 11th, Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven in "Marry the Poor Girl." It is a six-reel comedy drama, taken from Oliver Morosco's stage success by Owen Davis and directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

"The Unfoldment," a George H. Kern production, will be the initial feature released by Associated exhibitors for the new year, it being scheduled for January 1st. It is in six reels and is a powerfully dramatic photoplay, based upon truth as the highest incentive toward human happiness. The cast includes Barbara Bedford, Florence Lawrence, Lydia Knott, William Conklin, Murdock MacQuarrie, Charles K. French, Albert Prisco and Raymond Cannon.

Author's Representative Opens Offices

Carl G. Milligan, the past year manager of screen story sales department of the Robert H. Davis Corporation, has taken over the entire business, and opened offices in Aeolian Hall under the name of Service for Authors, Inc., Milligan will continue to represent a number of well known authors in placing their material for picture, stage and publication purposes. Davis will resume his former position as managing editor of the Munsey publications on January 1st.

Circuits Book Stone Film

"The Duke of Chimney Butte" in Many Big Houses, Reports R-C

FRED STONE'S return to the screen in productions distributed by R-C Pictures is being made an event of great importance by hundreds of exhibitors throughout the country who recognize the personal popularity of the star among all classes of theatregoers, according to Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for R-C.

The star's first R-C release, "The Duke of Chimney Butte," is already entertaining picture audiences in many of the big key points and has been booked "solid" by the Keith, Proctor and Moss circuits, embracing many of the leading theatres in the East.

Mort Singer, general manager of the Orpheum circuit, also placed his stamp of approval upon the "Duke of Chimney Butte" and it will be shown in the theatres of the Western chain following its pre-release showing in Chicago, where Mr. Stone is appearing in his current musical comedy smash, "Tip Top." Other lesser circuits have seized the opportunity to cash on the popularity of the famous entertainer, New York State and Western territories giving "The Duke of Chimney Butte," a particularly heavy play, according to Mr. Rogers.

"The Duke of Chimney Butte" is a Western comedy developed from an entirely new angle. While it has plenty of thrills in the form of dare-devil riding, roping and markmanship, in which Mr. Stone is expert, it possesses also a delightful element of comedy. Stone, in fact, is reported to have by all odds the best role in which he has ever appeared on the screen. Andrew J. Callaghan produced the picture.

E. K. Lincoln Will Support Hope Hampton

After an absence from the screen of nearly a year, Edward K. Lincoln, long a favorite among photoplay "fans" in stellar and leading roles, will be seen in support of Hope Hampton in her next First National picture, "White Faith," now in process of production at Fort Lee, N. J., under the direction of Clarence L. Brown.

With Mr. Lincoln in "White Faith," supporting Miss Hampton, will be Lon Chaney, Edgar Norton and Kathleen Kirkham.

"Woman He Married" Is Nearing Completion

Only a few more scenes for Anita Stewart's next picture, "The Woman He Married," remain to be shot, according to reports from the Louis B. Mayer headquarters. With Fred Niblo directing, the production of this future First National release has gone along smoothly and very successfully. The work is now ahead of the original shooting schedule.

The story is along society drama lines with just enough melodrama and mystery to keep the spectator's interest keyed to a high pitch.

"A Doll's House" to Be of Feature Length

NAZIMOVA has abandoned her original plan of making Ibsen's "A Doll's House" and Oscar Wilde's "Salome" into a dual film program. The famous screen star has decided that the Ibsen subject is entirely too important and elaborate a subject in itself to permit of any shorter treatment than a full program production. Hence "A Doll's House," work upon which is rapidly progressing at the Brunton studio, Hollywood, will be turned out at feature length. Release will be made through United Artists.

Lucille Carlisle Again Opposite Semon

Lucille Carlisle, who was a familiar and attractive figure in many of the Larry Semon comedies until nearly a year ago, has again joined the Vitagraph comedian's company and is the leading woman in his newest comedy which is now nearing completion at the Hollywood studio.

Mix and Russell Pictures Completed

Production at the William Fox Hollywood studio goes on apace. The latest to finish are Tom Mix and William Russell, directed by Edward Sedgwick and Ralph Lewis respectively. Neither of the pictures has been named.

A special one sheet lobby display poster by Henry Clive, for Paramount's "Fool's Paradise"

Special Paramount Posters

Paper Prepared for "Fool's Paradise" of Most Attractive Design

FOR Cecil B. DeMille's special production, "Fool's Paradise," Paramount has prepared a series of special one-sheet lobby display posters, of the same character and quality as those issued on "The Affairs of Anatol," "Experience" and "The Sheik," which have proved immensely popular among exhibitors.

These posters were executed by Henry Clive, who designed those used on the productions mentioned above, and are distinguished by the brilliancy of coloring and the fidelity to the faces and figures of the characters represented that marked his work on the two previous productions.

Paramount is making a special effort to have the paper issued on its big special productions in keeping with the productions themselves, and how well this policy is succeeding is attested in a number of letters from leading exhibitors which were received by the Morgan Lithograph Co., of Cleveland, and forwarded by that company to the Paramount home office. These letters all express the highest praise for the selling value of the "Anatol" paper, and the following are but a few of the messages received:

From C. A. McFarland, Houston, Tex.: "'Anatol' broke all records at the Queen theatre, Houston, and I feel that your paper helped to a great extent to put this picture over."

F. A. Petrich, Loew's Warwick theatre, Brooklyn: "The posters on 'The Affairs of Anatol' are without a doubt the very best I have ever had the pleasure of showing in my twelve years in the show business."

E. T. McCarthy, Orpheum theatre, Fargo, N. D.: "We did a record-breaking business on 'The Affairs of Anatol' and I wish to compliment you on the special one and three sheets. They are some of the most beautiful posters we ever used and certainly brought the desired results."

Harry E. Gardner, Rialto theatre, Pueblo, Colo.: "I have had a number of compliments on the special three and one sheets on 'Anatol.' The latter were especially effective in lobby and foyer while the three-sheets are finest I have ever handled."

In addition to the special lobby display posters now being issued on "Fool's Paradise," a series of outdoor paper in the usual sizes has been prepared, a striking 24-sheet designed by C. E. Millard being especially noteworthy.

Fox News Gets Scenes of Charles' Raid

EXCLUSIVE scenes of King Charles' raid to regain the throne of Hungary are contained in Fox News, Vol. 3, No. 16, announces Fox. Certain of the shots were taken with permission of the Hungarian Government and others at great risk to the cameraman. They include the only close-ups taken of King Charles during his entire campaign to regain his monarchial power. These were taken against military orders and under threat of death, it is said.

New Leading Lady With Bert Lytell

Another promising screen luminary has been unearthed at the Metro studios in Andree Tourneur, a beautiful seventeen-year-old blonde, whom after playing small parts for several months, has been selected by Bayard Veiller to appear opposite Bert Lytell in his new starring picture, "The Phantom Bride," which Mr. Veiller is directing.

An Appreciation from R. S. Cole

THE following statement, addressed to the motion picture exhibitors, has been received from R. S. Cole, president of R-C Pictures:

"A few weeks ago the General Manager for the Distributing Corporation, which I have the honor to serve as President, took up with the selling organization to name the month of November as "R. S. Cole Month." After all of the details had been arranged and the instructions given, the idea was then presented to me in the form of a surprise.

"By this act on their part they have proved to me not only their loyalty and enthusiasm for the corporation they are serving, but I believe their affection and esteem for me personally.

"It has been a rule of this business to name such periods by different organizations when by concerted effort and by the co-operation of exhibitors more satisfactory results have been obtained during that stated period, but in viewing the results which were obtained by this organization during the month of November they have given concrete evidence that R. S. Cole Month was more than an empty phrase, for the results which were obtained have been exceedingly gratifying, and it has become a month which will always stand out in the history of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation.

"It has been endeavored at all times to have our organization realize the ethics of business under which they would operate in coming in contact with the various exhibitors of America, and I cannot help but feel that the extraordinary co-operation and support which our exhibitor friends have given us has to a certain extent shown that they appreciate the efforts we are putting forth to try and live up to the ideals which we hold.

"I cannot help but express to you personally my thanks and sincere appreciation for whatever part you did in making the month of November such a successful one for us, and forgetting entirely the fact that it may have encouraged us for bigger things in the future due to the manner in which the exhibitors have responded, it is particularly gratifying to me for two reasons. First, I cannot help but feel that it is an indication of your friendship and good will toward me and to the R-C organization; and, second, it would seem to indicate that R-C Pictures and R-C Service have the endorsement of you gentlemen.

"We have a definite purpose in view for the future, which is to try and offer a class of product which will deserve your continued support."

Hodkinson December List

"Bashful Suitor" and "Fifty Candles" Scheduled for December 11

THREE productions are announced for release by W. W. Hodkinson during the month of December, according to a report from the Hodkinson offices this week. They are "The Bashful Suitor," second in the series of Triart Great Masterpiece Productions; "Fifty Candles,' fourth in the series of Irvin V. Willat productions, and "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," the second Winnipeg Productions-Ralph Connor picture presented by Ernest Shipman.

The release date of "The Bashful Suitor" is December 11th. Featured in "The Bashful Suitor" are Mary Brandon and Pierre Gendron. It is a two-reel production adapted from the theme suggested in the painting of "The Bashful Suitor," by Josef Israels, which now hangs in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City. It was made under the direction of Dramatic Director Herbert Blaché and Art Director Lejaren á Hiller.

"Fifty Candles," the Irvin V. Willat Production, is also scheduled for release on December 11th. "Fifty Candles" is a story by Earl Derr Biggers which appeared originally in The Saturday Evening Post. It is a mystery story done in Mr. Biggers' best style of mystery writing, and is said to contain a number of unusually startling developments. The cast includes Marjorie Daw, Bertram Grassby, Dorothy Sibley, Edward Burns, William Carroll, Wade Boteler and Ruth King. Dorothy Sibley was the winner of the recent beauty contest conducted by Mr. Willat through The Movie Weekly.

The release date of "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" is set for December 25th. The story is by Ralph Connor. Included in the cast are Gaston Glass, Irving Cummings and Vivienne Osborne. It was directed by Henry MacRae.

"The City Feller" to Be Ready Soon

Julien Josephson's first Goldwyn photoplay will soon be completed at the Goldwyn studios. It is called "The City Feller" and was directed by William Beaudine, his first Goldwyn picture, and is now in the final stages of titling.

"The City Feller" is a story of Western small town life and is full of first-hand observation on the manners and customs of small town people.

Cullen Landis, a strong favorite in Goldwyn productions, portrays the lead in "The City Feller." Youthful Patsy Ruth Miller plays opposite him.

Others in the cast of "The City Feller" are Bert Woodruff, George Pierce, Raymond Cannon, Gus Leonard, Henry Rattenbury, Joel Day, L. J. O'Connor, John Cossar, Lilian Sylvester, L. H. King, Cordelia Callahan and Alberta Lee.

Changes in Wid Gunning Field Sales Force

A number of changes and additions have been made in the field sales force of Wid Gunning, Inc., in the interests of greater efficiency in putting across the special pictures which that corporation is now distributing.

George W. Sampson, for the past three years Pathe exchange manager in Detroit, has taken over the management of the Detroit Wid Gunning exchange. George A. Faulkner has been added to the Wid Gunning forces as manager of the Buffalo exchange, and E. A. Westcott, well known for years in the Minneapolis territory, has been appointed manager of the Wid Gunning office in that city.

W. R. Wilkerson, until now resident manager in the Wid Gunning New York office, has been appointed a special representative with the Pacific Coast as his field of activity. Albert W. Edon has been appointed a special representative and has gone to Kansas City.

Owen Moore Comedy Is Nearing Completion

With production on the forthcoming Selznick picture starring Owen Moore nearing completion, the word is going out among the Selznick working force that great things are expected of the photoplay and that great things are to be done with in the matter of bringing it to the attention of motion picture exhibitors throughout the country.

The new picture, like its predecessors, will be a comedy of feature length, constructed along farce lines. Among the Selznick releases it is listed as a Henry Lehrman production because it is being personally directed by Henry Lehrman who was engaged by the Selznick company for this particular task. As the work of making the picture has progressed there has been thrown into it by its director a number of big incidents which will add much to Mr. Lehrman's reputation as a director who is awake to every opportunity that develops.

Vignola Is Completing "Beauty's Worth"

Robert G. Vignola, director of special productions for Cosmopolitan, is now engaged at International Studios, New York, in putting the finishing touches to "Beauty's Worth," the Sophie Kerr story starring Marion Davies. This is Mr. Vignola's second production with Marion Davies in the star role, his first being "Enchantment" which is reported a big success all over the country.

"Beauty's Worth" was made for the most part in Los Angeles but there remained several important scenes which required the resources of the New York studio and these were held up until the company returned to New York. The adaptation was made by Luther Reed, and the camera work was made under the supervision of Ira Morgan. Forrest Stanley who played the male lead opposite Miss Davies in "Enchantment" plays an important role in "Beauty's Worth."

Mae Murray Features for Metro

"Peacock Alley" to Be First of Series of Four

METRO has completed negotiations for the release of four special productions in the coming year starring Mae Murray. The arrangements were concluded by William E. Atkinson, general manager for Metro, and Robert Z. Leonard, director general, and M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager for Tiffany Productions, Inc.

The first picture to be released will be "Peacock Alley," which scored a sensational success at a recent special showing at the Hotel Commodore. "Peacock Alley," by Edmund Goulding, is based on a story by Ouida Bergere It is presented by Robert Z. Leonard, its director. The production is titled by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, authors of "Lombardi, Ltd." and "The Walk-Offs," which were produced by Metro.

"I am pleased at getting Miss Murray under the Metro banner," said Mr. Atkinson, in commenting on the contract. "It has not been Metro's custom to take productions other than our own for distribution, but, in the case of these Tiffany productions, I feel we have obtained something of super-excellent quality.

Mae Murray

"You can count the pictures of other producers that Metro has distributed on one hand. Recently we made an exception in going out of our own fold to take 'Figbtin' Mad,' the William Desmond production, and its wildfire success has justified our action.

"I think 'Peacock Alley' is going to be one of the greatest hits of many years. Those who saw it at the Hotel Commodore showing unanimously, as far as I can find, agree with me. Miss Murray who has had so many notable successes, has surpassed herself in this picture. It's a great story and Metro is proud to have obtained the right to distribute it.

"We are not yet ready to announce the three other pictures in which Miss Murray will be seen, but they will be up to the standard that Tiffany Productions has set with its magnificent work on 'Peacock Alley.'"

The story of "Peacock Alley" deals mainly with the night life of Paris and New York, in contrast with village life in Normandy and in Indiana. Miss Murray appears as Cleo, a young Parisian dancer who falls in love with an Indiana boy, who is in Paris on business.

The cast of the picture includes Monte Blue, as the husband, Edmund Lowe, W. J. Ferguson, Jeffrys Lewis, Anders Randolph, William Tooker, Howard Lang, William Frederic and M. Durant.

"Molly O" Captures New York

Mabel Normand Picture Completes First Week of Run

"MOLLY O" has rounded out the third week of its scheduled four week New York run at the Central theatre (Broadway and 47th St.) and New York has 'taken' to this latest comedy drama of Mack Sennett's featuring Mabel Normand, directed by F. Richard Jones.

That the New York press has agreed as to the merits of "Molly O" can easily be seen from the following excerpts of the leading dailies:

Daily News said: "Normand fans are going to take this to their separate hearts with a wild whoop of joy, because it is just exactly the sort of thing in which they like to see their own Mabel. She is funny and pretty and abused, and finally triumphant. No one could wish for more. A sight for tired eyes is Mabel Normand."

Charles (Chic) Sale as "the boy" in "His Nibs," produced by Exceptional Pictures Corp. Colleen Moore is "the girl"

Evening World: "Molly O" with Mabel Normand as the bright particular star, is the outstanding feature. This latest, by the makers of 'Mickey is a treat. If you like Mabel Normand, you will be crazy over 'Molly O.' And almost everyone does like Mabel. Don't they? The "ayes" have it. Mabel makes an ideal 'Molly O.'"

Evening Mail: "Mabel Normand has always done her best work under the banner of Mack Sennett, and in 'Molly O' this truth is again demonstrated. The vivacious Miss Normand has never been better than in the title role of 'Molly O.' The picture ends with a sensational scene on a dirigible in midair that is excellent.

Evening Globe: "Mabel Normand has evolved a role which delighted an audience of admirers. She was graduated from the pie throwing motif in the silent drama, and has made a success of plots, which neatly combine slapstick and sentiment."

Evening Telegram: "Laughs and sighs mix deliciously with Cinderella-like romance in 'Molly O' the dashing cinema starring Mabel Normand. There are serious moments in which havoc is played with the heart strings. And for thrills, a battle amid the clouds on a palatial "air-roadster" is only one of the high spots. 'Molly O' sparkles as one of the most fascinating cinemas of the screen.

New York American: "'Molly O' is a revel of fun and excitement. Miss Normand in the title role shows that she has lost none of the art of pantomime that made her one of the first famous film comediennes. The picture is staged on a big scale.

Morning Telegraph: "The opening night audience laughed at 'Molly O' until the orchestra chairs shook, for it abounds with the same laugh making quality which made Finley-Peter Dunne and Mark Twain famous."

Sig Schlager Appointed to Hodkinson Staff

Sig Schlager has been appointed assistant to General Sales Manager A. W. Smith of the Hodkinson office, according to an announcement this week. In his new capacity Mr. Schlager will specialize on the exploitation of certain Hodkinson releases.

Claire Windsor Signed by Goldwyn Pictures

Claire Windsor has been engaged under a new Goldwyn contract as a result of her good work in "Grand Larceny." Miss Windsor will next appear in the leading role of Brothers Under Their Skin," based on the South Seas story by Peter B. Kyne. E. Mason Hopper will direct the production.

Naval Film at Annapolis

"Battle of Jutland" to Be Shown Before U. S. Middies January 7th

THE special showing of "The Battle of Jutland," which Educational is to give at the Naval Academy at Annapolis has been set for January 7 by arrangement with Admiral Wilson, superintendent of the Academy.

Through the courtesy of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto theatre, New York, where "The Battle of Jutland" was given its American premiere, the musical score prepared and used by him at the Rialto has been sent to the Academy for use by the band there in connection with the presentation of the picture.

The Secretary of the Navy and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy will be invited to be present at the showing, and probably navy and army officers in Washington will also be invited.

A complete program of Educational Pictures will be built around "The Battle of Jutland," furnishing a whole evening of diversified entertainment for the officers and students present. One of the Selig-Rork Photoplays, a two-reel Christie Comedy, a Robert C. Bruce Scenic and a Kinograms news reel will be supplied by Educational's Washington branch for the entertainment.

Another showing of "The Battle of Jutland" at the Marine Barracks at Washington will be given just before or just after the Annapolis entertainment, and a third screening at the Naval War College at Newport, Rhode Island, is being considered.

New Truex Comedy Offered

Pathe Announces "Stick Around" as Heading Program for Dec. 18

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces the new two-reel comedy, "Stick Around," from the pen of P. G. Wodehouse, the well-known musical comedy and magazine writer, as the leading offering of the short subject features and one serial episode which have been scheduled for release the week of December 18. Julia Mills is the leading lady. The picture was produced by the Ay Vee Bee Corporation.

"Neck and Neck" is the title of the thirteenth episode of the new Pathe serial, "Hurricane Hutch," starring Charles Hutchison.

"Two-Gun Gussie" is the current reissued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd, with Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard prominent in the cast. In the offering Lloyd suddenly departs from his usual characterization and becomes a bad man of the wild and wooly west.

"Shake 'Em Up" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. The offering has a Mexican setting and is a satire on melodramas of the border. "The Wolf and the Kid" is the current "Aesop's Film Fable," produced by Fables Pictures' Inc., and created for the screen by Cartoonist Paul Terry.

Pathe Review No. 134 presents a series of interesting subjects, perhaps the most remarkable being "The Casing of Chivalry," which was photographed in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Pathe News Nos. 102 and 103 and Topics of the Day No. 138 complete the program.

More Hughes Pictures Soon

Three More of Famous Author's Stories to Be Completed Shortly

RUPERT HUGHES has already figured largely in Goldwyn's fifth year product. And he's going to figure still larger. Three Rupert Hughes' photoplays have already been released by Goldwyn—"The Old Nest," "Dangerous Curve Ahead" and "From the Ground Up." The first two were Goldwyn specials—two of the biggest and most human pictures yet produced in America. "From the Ground Up" was used as a starring vehicle for Tom Moore and gave him one of his best roles—as good as the one which Mr. Hughes supplied him with in "Hold Your Horses" last year.

The three Hughes pictures nearing completion and which will be included in Goldwyn's fifth year product are "The Wall Flower," "Sent for Out" and "Remembrance," the two latter being working titles. Mr. Hughes not only wrote the scenarios directly for the screen, but himself prepared the continuities and aided in directing and casting. In fact, he is in absolute charge of every detail of "Remembrance," making his emergence as full-fledged motion picture director with the latter.

"The Wall Flower" is another big Hughes real life drama with Colleen Moore in the leading role. Richard Dix plays opposite her while others in the cast are Gertrude Astor, Laura Laplante, Tom Gallery, Rush Hughes (son of the author), Dana Todd, Fanny Stockbridge and Emily Rait.

Colleen Moore also plays the lead in Mr. Hughes' new Irish photoplay temporarily called "Sent for Out." Alfred Green directed this picture with the author as assistant. Ralph Graves acts the leading man's role. Others in the cast are J. Farrel MacDonald, Kate Price, James Marcus, Kathleen O'Connor, Florence Drew, Harold Holland, Mary Warren, Elinor Hancock, Monti Collins, C. E. Mason and C. B. Leasure.

For "Remembrance," Mr. Hughes selected an all-star cast headed by four well-known screen personalities—Claude Gillingwater, Kate Lester, Patsy Ruth Miller and Cullen Landis. Other important roles are portrayed by Nell Craig, Dana Todd, Richard Tucker, Esther Ralston, Arthur Trimble and Lucille Ricksen. James Dugan has been assigned to Mr. Hughes as his assistant in directing this picture.

Records Broken in Detroit

"Over the Hill" Draws Big Crowds in Simultaneous Run in 26 Houses

FROM the office of William Fox comes announcement that the experiment of playing "Over the Hill" in twenty-six Detroit houses for the week ending November 26 proved an unqualified success. By placing the picture in twenty-six houses Fox established a new record for simultaneous showings of an attraction.

The result was far more gratifying than expected, it is said. In fact, is was so satisfactory that arrangements have been made to play "Over the Hill" in Detroit again in January, when forty theatres have booked the attraction. The theatres participating in the engagement of "Over the Hill" the week of November 26 were: The New Home, the Gratiot, the Lakewood, the Ritz, the Arcade, the Stratford, the Grand Victory, the Farnum, the La Veeda, the Acme, the Merrick, the Fernda the Dix, the Crescent, the Delray, the Duplex, the Medbury, the Myrtle, the Fleur de Lys, the Dawn, the Park, the Central, the Crystal, the Drury Lane, the Majestic and the Strand.

"It must be remembered, too," states Fox, "that this was not the first run of "Over the Hill" in Detroit. For seven weeks it had been playing at the Washington theatre with people flocking to see it at every performance, with the biggest business reported in the history of Detroit theatres.

"Despite the seven weeks' run at the Washington theatre, and in the face of the general let-down in industrial business with many thousands of workmen idle. 'Over the Hill' played during the week to an aggregate of 151,000 persons.

"The average seating capacity of the 26 houses was 600 and the average price of admission during the run was thirty-five cents. Word of the tremendous success of the run quickly reached the ears of exhibitors who had failed to book the picture. A survey of the situation impelled them to believe that the pulling power of 'Over the Hill' was not yet exhausted in Detroit, and that so great was its appeal to the public that it was capable of still greater things."

Big First Run Houses Run Gunning Picture

The biggest first run exhibitors of the country are rushing to book Lois Weber's "What Do Men Want?" it is declared at the offices here of Wid Gunning, Inc., distributors of the picture.

Among those who have recently signed contracts are S. Barret McCormick for the Allen, Cleveland; the Pantheon, Toledo; Jensen and Von Herberg, Portland, Ore.; Miller's California theatre, Los Angeles.

J. Parker Read Starts Work on "Pawned"

With Tom Moore and Edith Roberts as the leading figures of an all-star cast, Irvin V. Willat at the directorial helm and Frank L. Packard, of "Miracle Man" fame as the author, J. Parker Read, Jr., this week launched into production "Pawned," his initial special feature for Associated First National release.

Strong Cast Assembled by Christy Cabanne

CHRISTY CABANNE, who recently completed "At the Stage Door," has started work on his new subject titled, "Beyond the Rainbow." The picture is an adaptation of two stories, "The Mirage," by Eustace Hale Ball and "The Price of Fine Feathers," by Solita Solano.

Mr. Cabanne is assembling a particularly strong cast for "Beyond the Rainbow." Included in the line-up are such well-known players as Courtenay Foote, Lillian ("Billie") Dove, Virginia Lee, Diana Allen, James Harrison, Huntly Gordon, Macey Harlan, Rose Coghlan, Helen Ware, George Fawcett, Marguerite Courtot, Walter Miller, Charles Craig and Edmund Breese. Miss Clara Bow, winner of the recent "Fame and Fortune" popularity competition, is also to be presented in this picture.

21 Paramount Subjects Started Last Week

Monday, November 28, witnessed the starting of two new Paramount productions at the Lasky studio. They are "Beyond the Rocks," the Elinor Glyn story in which Gloria Swanson is to be starred, and William D. Taylor's production, temporarily titled "The Noose," starring Betty Compson.

The Gloria Swanson picture, which is promised to be quite distinctive in the matter of settings and costuming, is being directed by Sam Wood. Jack Cunningham adapted the story.

Miss Compson's picture, which is her first to be made under the direction of Mr. Taylor, is from a story by Constance Skinner which was published in Ainslee's Magazine. Miss Compson's role will be more or less reminiscent of her first big part, that of Rose in "The Miracle Man," for she is cast as a dancer and member of the Apaches of the Paris underworld.

Strong Supporting Cast Seen in "R.S.V.P."

A strong supporting cast is seen in Charles Ray's new picture, "R. S. V. P.," which First National announces for release this week.

The principal female player is Jean Calhoun who takes the role of Betty, a girl who is depicted to possess a certain wistful beauty and whose part was filled only after many actresses were interviewed. Miss Calhoun was previously with Antonia Moreno at the Vitagraph studios. Harry Meyers, who is the principal male support to the star, makes an excellent foil to Mr. Ray's comic situations. William Courtright who plays the important comic role of butler had a similar part in "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway." He is an experienced stage and screen actor. Others in the cast are Florence Oberle, Tom McGuire, Robert Grey and Ida Schumaker.

Gunning Film Scores on B'way

Will Continue at the Lyric at $2 Top; Lauded by Press

THE warm welcome which New York has given to Charles Dickens' "Our Mutual Friend," has insured the continuance of the presentation by Wid Gunning at the Lyric theatre at $2 top.

The almost unanimous enthusiasm with which the New York critics greeted the picture and the manner in which they urged their readers not to miss the production, brought out crowds of people not usually seen at Broadway picture presentations. The number of school teachers and librarians in the first week audiences was especially noticeable. The intense melodramatic appeal of the picture was emphasized in the newspaper reviews, and this brought out great numbers of people who like good drama for its own sake, independent of whether or not it has a classical inception.

An exploitation campaign without ballyhoo features was carried out by the Wid Gunning home office staff on "Our Mutual Friend." A bulletin board notice was distributed for use in libraries and leaflets appealing to book lovers were distributed from book shops. Notification to the Dickens fellowship in advance of the presentation resulted in a 100 per cent attendance by the members of that organization.

A three color store window poster reading "Come in. We consider you Our Mutual Friend! The perfect movie," resulted in more than a hundred window tie-ups along Broadway. This paster is being distributed to the Wid Gunning exchanges for use throughout the country.

The newspaper advertising campaign following the opening was largely made up of quotations from the newspaper reviews.

The motion picture trade press joined with the newspapers and public in fulsome praise of "Our Mutual Friend," and extracts from these reviews follow:

Graf Productions present Hobart Bosworth in "White Hands." To be released by Wid Gunning, Inc.

Motion Picture News: "Whoever is responsible for 'Our Mutual Friend' deserves praise of the highest order. He has taken the salient episodes, the moving incidents and fashioned them into a highly interesting picture—a picture which reveals clearly defined characterization, some samples of quaint humor, and bits of incident—which flow along through a plot and several counter-plots, releasing a fine breath of sentiment, captivating charm, suspensive melodrama, eloquent atmosphere and what must be regarded as exceptional photography."

Moving Picture World: "This story of the famous English novelist turned out to be one excellent material for a moving picture and should serve as a guide to the American directors who persist in photographing life just because they are making a moving picture. . . . It is a mystery story and has all the elements of a corking good melodrama.

"Perhaps the impersonation in the present cast that is the greatest single hit is the Bella Wilfer of Catherine Reese. Anything more charmingly feminine and lovely than this demure little English actress hasn't been shown on the screen."

Wids: "'Our Mutual Friend' contains action, drama, comedy, suspense, mystery—well, all the ingredients for what is known as good movie material today.

"You have a lot of material to work with here. You have the name of one of the world's greatest writers, and the name of one of his best known works—'Our Mutual Friend.' There are thousands and hundreds of thousands of Dickens lovers all over the country, and added to this is the fact that regardless of whether or not your people know or love Dickens they have in this mighty fine picture entertainment.

First Nat'l Releases in Force in Ohio

The popularity of First National pictures with the picture-loving public of North Central Ohio was indicated by the fact that First National's releases were offered by exhibitors in a great many instances as Thanksgiving day attractions.

W. K. Richards, of the New Royal, Findlay, served a vertiable First National banquet with Constance Talmadge's "Lessons In Love" as the piece de resistence. Wesley Price, of Norwalk, formally opened his recently purchased Huron theatre, Huron, on Thanksgiving day, with "The Golden Snare," a First National picture that has been making more than good in the North Central Ohio section.

Saturday Evening Post Story for Wm. DeMille

"Too Much Efficiency," an adaptation of E. J. Rath's Saturday Evening Post story, will be William de Mille's next Paramount picture. The adaptation will be done by Clara Beranger.

More Prints Ordered for "Beggar Maid"

In order to meet the demand for early dates on "The Beggar Maid," first in the series of Triart Great Master Productions, released by Hodkinson, it has been found necessary to order nearly twice the number of prints originally sent through the laboratory, according to an announcement this week from the Hodkinson offices.

A few of the first important houses in the country to book the entire series, on the strength of the drawing-power of the first picture, "The Beggar Maid," are the Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York; Strand in Brooklyn; Strand, Albany; Strand, Buffalo; Strand, Syracuse; Park, Boston; Grauman's Rialto, Los Angeles; Stanley, Philadelphia; Ascher's Capitol, Cincinnati; Allen, Cleveland; Star in Rochester, and Rialto in Washington.

These theatres, following the presentation of "The Beggar Maid" have already arranged playdates for the second picture in the series, "The Bashful Suitor," to be released by Hodkinson on December 11th.

Syndicating "The Son of Wallingford"

Newspapers in many of the larger cities of the United States and Canada are publishing in serial form "The Son of Wallingford," the George Randolph Chester story, upon which has been based the motion-picture version made by Vitagraph under the same title. The Bell Syndicate of New York City reports unusual interest in the newspaper fiction version.

Among the additional newspapers which contracted for the publication of "The Son of Wallingford," within the past few weeks, are the Buffalo News, the Cleveland News, the Lima, Ohio, News; the Oswego, N. Y., Palladium; the Lewiston, Me., Journal; the Boston Telegram, the Lynn, Mass., Telegram; the Columbus State Journal, the Worchester Telegram, the Waterbury Republication and the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

"Received Payment" Is Ready for Release

"Received Payment," starring Corinne Griffith, has been completed and is now awaiting release by Vitagraph. Officials of the Vitagraph organization who have seen the picture express the opinion that it is the best picture of Miss Griffith's career. The picture is based on a story by John Lynch and was directed by Charles Maigne. The supporting cast includes Kenneth Harlan, David Torrance, William David, Charles Hammond, Henry Sedley, Dan Duffy, Regina Quinn, and Dorothy Walters.

"Received Payment," as a story, has the elements required by Miss Griffith for a picture of her making. She has the opportunity to appear both as a struggling young actress living in a typical theatrical boarding house, and as the petted, wealthy girl in society. She has the opportunity to act in a light comedy vein, and in heavy drama, even tragedy.

Good Exploitation Aids "Black Roses"

Thorough co-operation of the local publicity department of R-C Pictures with the management of the Delmar theatre, St. Louis, assisted materially in putting over to good business, Sessue Hayakawa starring in "Black Roses."

When the campaign was opened a scenic artist was employed to paint a huge American Beauty rose in black, on a plate glass window, backed by a shadow box. This was lighted brilliantly and attracted the attention of thousands. Only the title, "Black Roses," was printed above the rose, and the initials "S. H." below. It attracted wide attention and tied up with the regular advertising.

Priscilla Dean to Make Burnett Story

Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel, "That Lass O' Lowrie," soon will be seen on the screen again. This time it will be used as a supervehicle for Priscilla Dean, Universal-Jewel star.

Seven years ago it was a five-reel sensation. Universal made it with Harry Carey and Helen Ware in the leads, supported by Ella Hall, Harry Carter and Jack Curtis. Robert Leonard directed the production at Universal City.

Important Engagement Announced by Famous

The engagement of Al Green to direct Thomas Meighan in his next Paramount picture, temporarily titled "The Proxy Daddy"; and the appointment of Sonia Levine, well-known magazine writer and more recently associate-editor of the Metropolitan, to write specially for Penrhyn Stanlaws, were announced by the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters during the week.

Mr. Meighan's vehicle is an adaptation by Olga Printzlau of a story by Edward Peple. Production is scheduled to start this week at the Lasky studio.

"Man to Man" Ready for Release Soon

"Man to Man," Harry Carey's second Universal-Jewel production, has been completed at Universal City and will shortly be ready for release. It is an adaptation of Jackson Gregory's novel of the same title and was directed by Stuart Paton.

A range fire "shot" in the San Francisquito Valley, California, and a cattle stampede, views of which were taken in Calabassas, Cal., are said to prove unusually thrilling. Carey is said to have risked his neck several times both in the fire and stampede scenes.

Lillian Rich, Willis Robards, Charles LeMoyne, Otto Meyers, Harold Goodwin, Harley Chambers, Alfred Allen, and little Mae Giraci are also in the cast.

Youngsters Thank Rothafel for Treat

During Armistice Week at the Capitol theatre, S. L. Rothafel acted as host to 350 children of Public School No. 42 of the Bronx, New York City. Since then Mr. Rothafel has received about fifty letters from the youngsters thanking him for the treat and describing their pleasure in being entertained at the big Broadway house. One wrote: "I was struck by the beautifulness of the place, and later when the orchestra started to play I thought that angels were playing." Another was impressed by the ushers. "I noticed particularly how clean they were dressed and how the uniforms fitted just right." Another with an eye to the interior decorations adds, "The statues along the walls were beautiful."

"Musketeers" Sets New Record in Cleveland

Showing simultaneously in three Cleveland neighborhood theatres at more than double usual prices, Douglas Fairbanks' "Three Musketeers" played to capacity on the first seven-day booking ever made by either of the three houses, had a "lock-out" on Sunday, and set new box office records for each of the three.

This United Artists release was booked at the Lucier, the Manhattan and the Capitol theatres, for seven days at each house.

"Never Weaken" Breaks Record at Symphony

At the completion of a seven-weeks run of Harold Lloyd's "Never Weaken," at the Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, H. B. Brockwedel, managing director of the Symphony theatre, wrote the following letter to Mr. J. E. Storey, sales manager of Associated Exhibitors:

"Since finishing the run of 'Never Weaken' at this theatre we thought perhaps you would like to know. . . .

"'Never Weaken' ran for 44 days and could have been held for at least another week to excellent business had not other bookings demanded a showing.

"That within 44 days the picture played to approximately 120,000 people and that the seating capacity of the Symphony is 645.

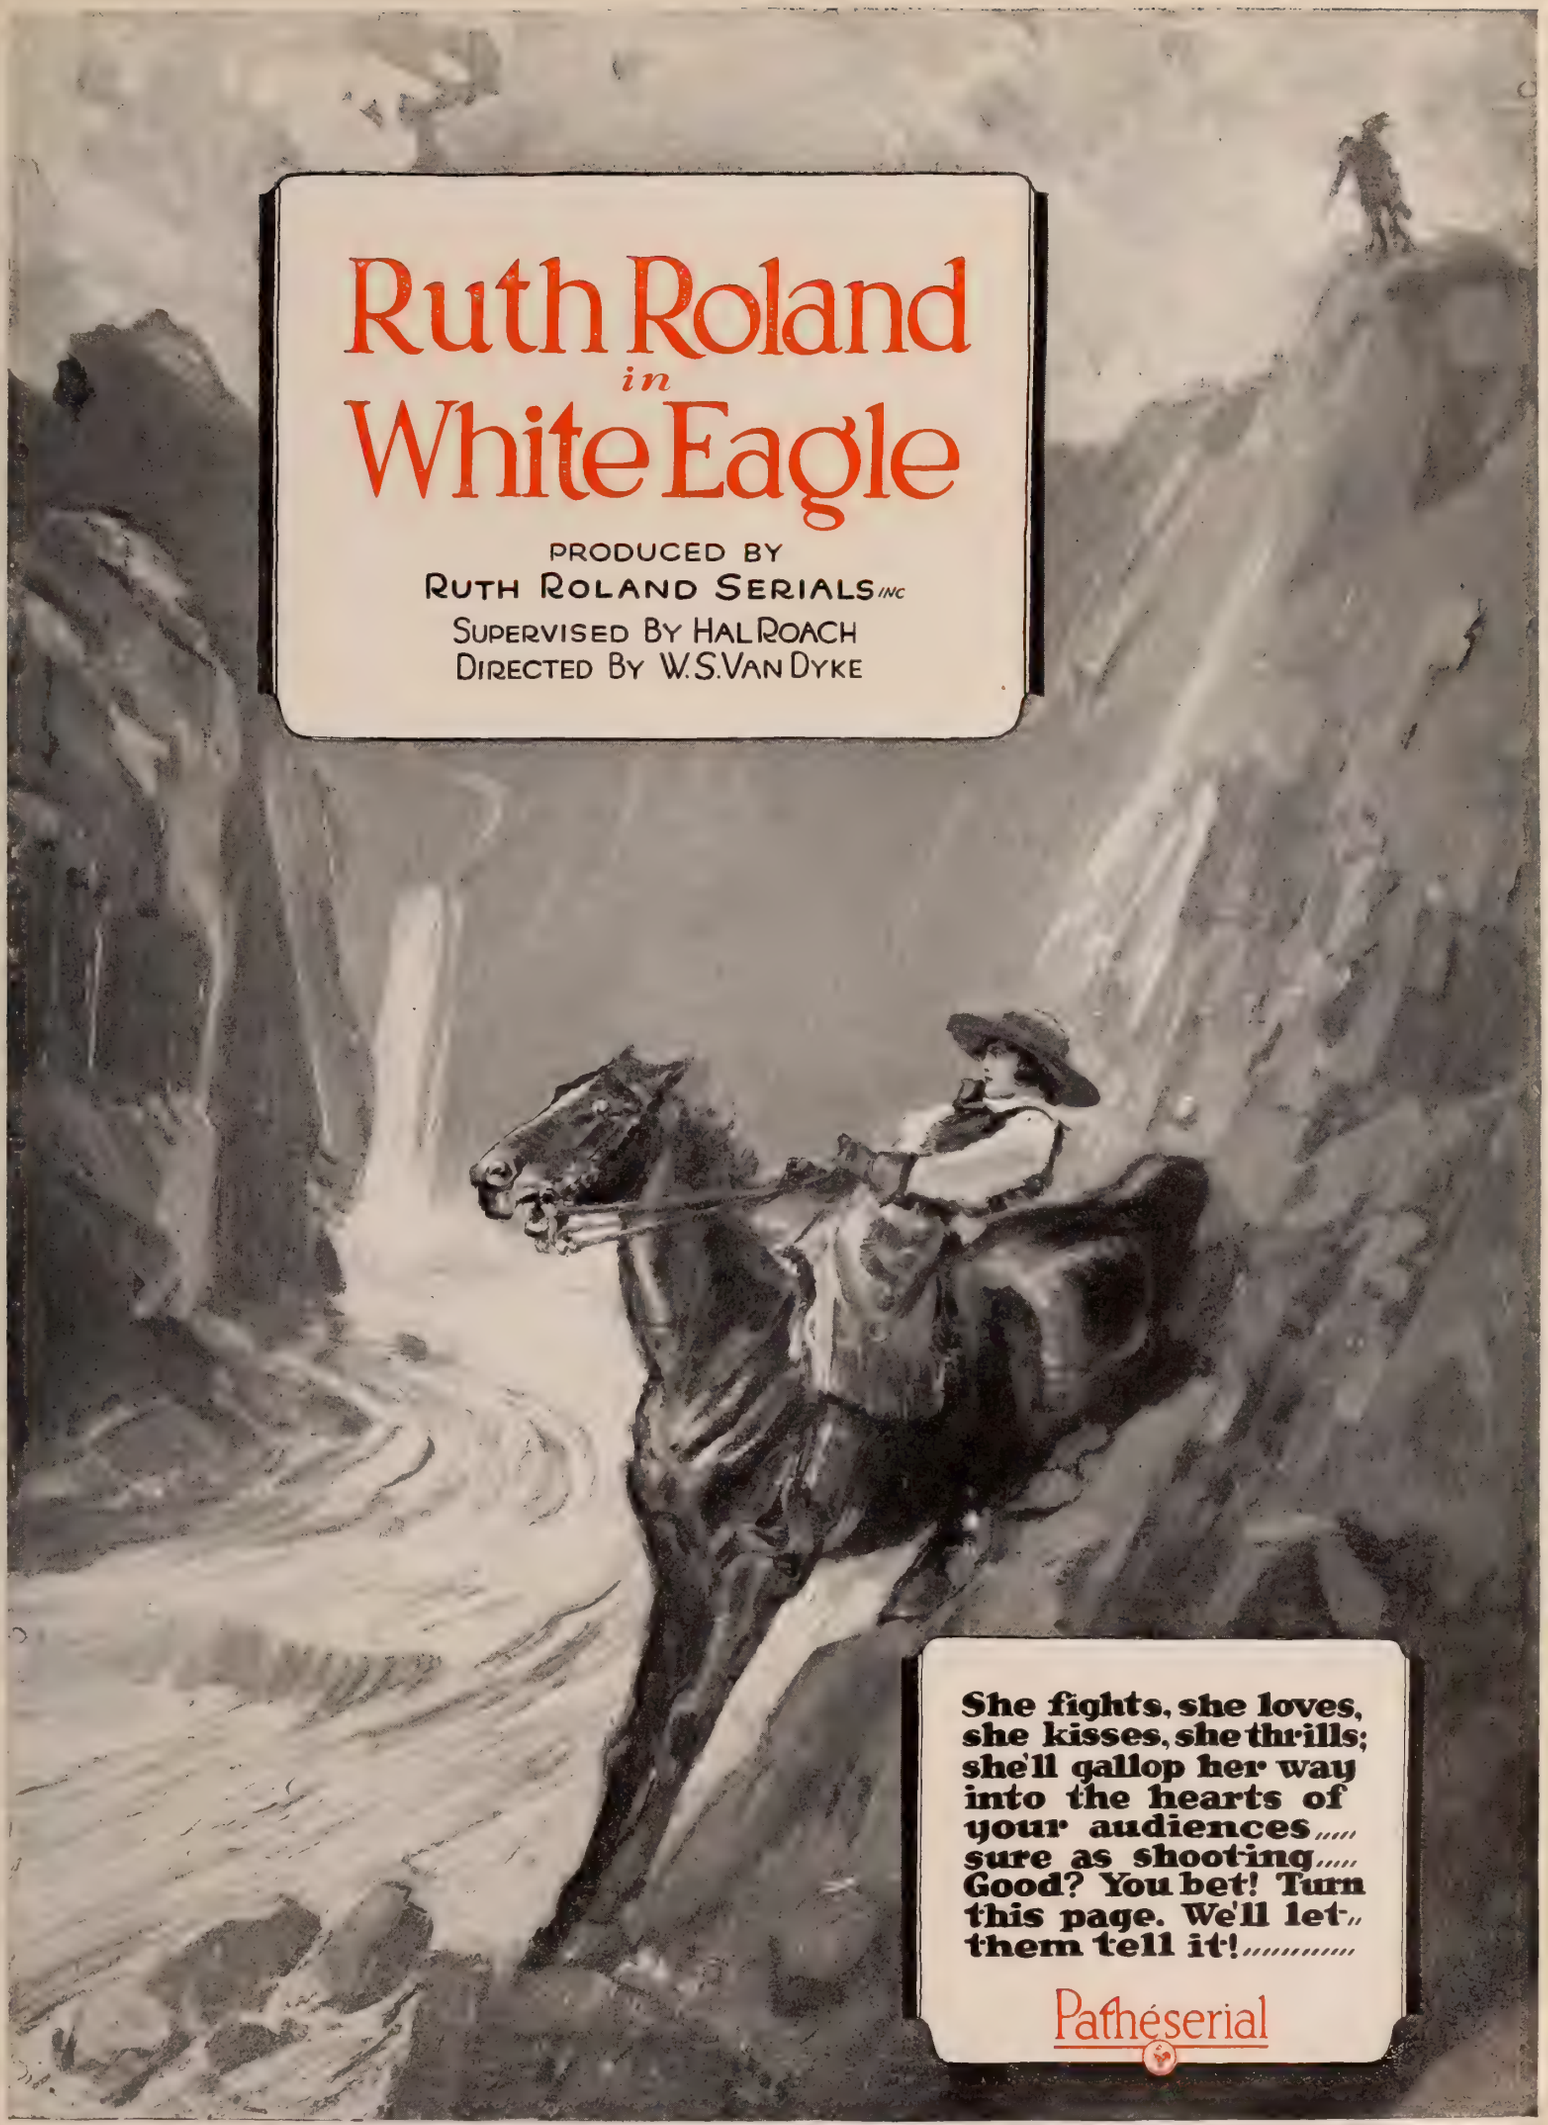
"That 'Never Weaken' was the longest subject on the bill.

"That out of 120,000 people only 7 were heard to say they did not like the show.

"And finally, that the Symphony is going after the 'The Sailor Made Man' just as strong as it did after 'Never Weaken.'"

Nat'l Geographic Body Honors Film Explorer

A well-deserved honor was tendered to Harold H. Horton and Prizma, Incorporated, producers of Prizma master pictures in color, by the National Geographic Society of Washington, D. C., in their invitation to Mr. Horton to address the Society, Friday, November 25, 1921, at Washington, D. C.



Mr. Horton, who has recently returned from a 36,000 mile trip to the Far East and the less well known islands of the South Seas, brought with him so many unique records and moving pictures of life and customs in this always interesting part of the world, that the Society sought him out to address it on the results of his explorations.

His address was supplemented by the exhibition of his five-reel travel-feature story, "Bali the Unknown," made in Prizma color. This is the only travel feature-story of Bali or the South Seas made by color photography, and its presentation before the National Geographic Society met with an enthusiastic reception.

Work Progressing on Irene Castle Film

Work on the second Holtre Production, starring Irene Castle, for release through Hodkinson, reached the half-way mark this week at the Estee Studios under the direction of Edwin L. Hollywood, according to an announcement from the Hodkinson offices. The name of the production is "The Rise of Roscoe Payne," a Joseph C. Lincoln Cape Cod story.

The first of the series of Holtre Productions starring Mrs. Castle, "French Heels," has been cut and titled and prints are being shipped to the various Hodkinson exchanges for release on January 8th.

"Sketchografs" Subject Highly Endorsed

FOLLOWING up its letter to E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, in which it indorsed "What's the Limit?" the latest issue of Sketchografs by Julian Allendorff, the motion picture committee of the Council for Limitation of Armament has written to practically every exhibitor in the United States and Canada urging them to book this picture, which is based on the world's great need for reduction in armaments. The letter, which went to approximately 7,000 exhibitors, says:

"The co-operating and participating organizations shown on the attached list, who are affiliated with the National Council for Limitation of Armament, have a gross membership of about seven million people.

"The National Council for the Limitation of Armament representing this great affiliation have indorsed a motion picture titled, "What's the Limit?" produced by Julian Ollendorff in his December release of 'Sketchografs,' which is to be released by the Education Film Exchanges, Inc.

"The membership of the National Council of the Limitation of Armament and also the membership of all co-operating and participating organizations are being notified to watch for the exhibition of this motion picture, "What's the Limit?" and bring their friends to see it and urge you as a 100 per cent American citizen to book this picture for your theatre, thereby aiding a great movement for the betterment of the world."

One Million in U. S. See "Over the Hill"

More than 1,000,000 people in the United States have seen "Over the Hill," the Fox special-super production, according to statistics compiled from the composite reports of Fox exchanges throughout the country. This is true in face of the fact that this great picture, which played one solid year on Broadway, New York City, is yet to be shown in hundreds of smaller cities in a majority of the states in the Union.

Letters are received daily by the Fox offices from persons in all sections of America and Canada and in all stations of life, lauding the efforts which produced this super-picture.

"Over the Hill," is now being shown in the British Isles, and will soon appear throughout continental Europe—even in Russia, for which territory arrangements are being made via England. Shanghai and Singapore, in the Far East, also will witness the Fox feature in the near future, if plans now under way are consummated.

"Foolish Wives" Shipped East

Precautions Taken in Transit; Premiere About Jan. 1st

THE long heralded print of "Foolish Wives," Carl Laemmle's million dollar picture, written and directed by Erich von Stroheim, has arrived in New York. In its trip across the continent, Universal safe-guarded the fragile fortune in film with every possible precaution, including a special car and armed marines. During the journey, four film cutters and a title writer worked night and day, with special equipment set up in the car, to complete the film by the time of its arrival in New York.

Definite plans for the presentation of "Foolish Wives," has not yet been announced. It is expected, however, that it will be shown to the public on the first of the year, in the Central Theatre, Broadway and Forty-seventh street, New York.

The picture arrived in New York about 15,000 feet in length. It had been reduced more than 3,000 feet during the trip and several hundred titles had been written and revised. Ripley asserted that because of the smoothness of work on the train and the lack of interruption, he had accomplished six days' work in three days. As soon as he and his crew had snatched a few hours sleep in New York, they set to work again and by midnight on December 5, had finally cut the picture to 12 reels, which it is expected, will be the exhibition length of the Monte Carlo feature.

No film ever had a more auspicious trip from Los Angeles to the East. Its departure was made an occasion of celebration "bon voyage" at the Los Angeles station, by the principals who worked in it. Because of the novelty and innovation of the laboratory work done in transit, the Universal "cutting car" was met by city officials and newspaper men at many important points along the route. Officials of the Union Pacific road, aboard the train to which the special car was attached, co-operated in every possible way with Harry Reichenbach, in charge of the Universal force, to facilitate the work of the film cutters.

So important did Universal executives consider the safe arrival in New York of the first print of "Foolish Wives" it was insured for $1,078,000 for the trip. This protection embraced fire, railroad wreck, theft, and other loss or mutilation. The premiums alone for this insurance which was divided among a number of companies, totaled to more than $12,000.

The unique installation of a cutting laboratory outfit aboard the train was a last minute move to enable Arthur D. Ripley, in charge of cutting the picture, to deliver the first print in completed form by December 5. By working in shifts, day and night, during the transcontinental run, Ripley and his force was able to do six days' work. More than three thousand feet were cut from the film, and an entire new set of titles, written or edited, as a result of the train laboratory experiment. So impressed were officials of the Union Pacific with the stunt, that the railroad will equip a special car for film cutting, to be rented to producers faced with film cutting in transit.

Charles Pike, passenger agent of the U. P., accompanied the Universal laboratory car from Los Angeles to Chicago. By constant conference with the engineer and with train dispatchers along the route, he kept the train at maximum speed over the entire distance. It actually arrived in Chicago ahead of time. He saw to it that every convenience was placed at the disposal of the Universal working force and co-operated with them in publicity and liaison work at all stops. Eyre Power, chief of the Union Pacific Press Bureau, also accompanied and aided the Universal representatives.

Von Stroheim did not accompany the film train east, having preceded it by several days. After cutting the huge feature from 295 to 30 reels during the last few months, the well known director took a vacation, leaving Ripley the final task of trimming the feature to exhibition length.

A detachment of U. S. Marines guard the first film of "Foolish Wives" when it is transferred from train to train at Chicago, during its journey to New York. The picture was partly edited and cut while en route from the Coast

Selznick Studios Active

Conway Tearle, Eugene O'Brien, and Elaine Hammerstein Units at Work

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN, Selznick star, who has just finished "Why Announce Your Marriage?" is getting ready for another of her star-series productions which is scheduled to go into work within the next ten days or two weeks. Ralph Ince will probably direct the next picture just as soon as he finishes with Eugene O'Brien in "Channing of the Northwest." The title of the next Hammerstein release has not yet been announced.

Selznick also announces that while "The Man of Stone" is running as the current attraction in the Conway Tearle series of six pictures for this season the Selznick forces are preparing, as the January 10 release, "Shadows of the Sea" to be the third attraction on the promised schedule. Showmen are finding an active public response to their advances on "The Man of Stone" thus far in its progress since being released.

When "Shadows of the Sea" is released Doris Kenyon will be seen as Tearle's leading woman in this Frank M. Dazey story. Besides Miss Kenyon the important players in Tearle's support will be Arthur Houseman, Crawford Kent, J. Barney Sherry, Jack Durimer, Harry Lane, William Nally and Miss Frankie Mann.

For "Channing of the Northwest," starring Eugene O'Brien, states Selznick, a cast has been selected that not only perfectly fits the various roles but is calculated to greatly enhance the production in box office value.

Norma Shearer, a dark eyed young beauty who has been steadily working her way to prominence on the screen for the past year and who is claimed as another "discovery" by Myron Selznick, has been cast in the leading feminine role opposite Eugene O'Brien. Gladden James is playing as "heavy" role in "Channing of the Northwest." Martin Faust has been cast in the important role of a half-breed.

A scene from the Cosmopolitan production, "Just Around the Corner," from the story by Fannie Hurst. A Paramount picture

Successor to "Humoresque"

"Just Around the Corner" is East Side Story by "Humoresque" Author

"ANOTHER 'Humoresque,'" is the prediction made for "Just Around the Corner," a Cosmopolitan Production presented by Paramount. Several factors contribute to the assurance of the producers and distributors that this picture will more than equal the success of "Humoresque" which recently won the Photoplay Gold Medal as the best photoplay of 1920.

First of all, the original story is the work of Fannie Hurst, who wrote "Humoresque." Secondly, the scenario was written by Frances Marion, who did the script of the first Fannie Hurst picture. Miss Marion also directed "Just Around the Corner." A third point is that the locale of the story is again New York's East Side. Another strong factor is that "Just Around the Corner" was created by Cosmopolitan Productions and is said to bear all of the fine touches and high finish that that production company claims for its products.

"Just Around the Corner" is based on a short story of Miss Hurst's entitled "Superman" which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. In the first volume of the writer's short stories which was published under the title of "Just Around the Corner" this notable short story was included. Cosmopolitan Productions used the title of the collected short stories for its picture because Frances Marion has crystallized in this East Side drama the spirit of many of Miss Hurst's stories.

"Just Around the Corner" does not claim distinction because of elaborate settings and gorgeous gowns—the East Side has none of these. But the East Side has real people and the players in this picture are flesh and blood men and women. The story tells of the trials and misfortunes of a poor family and the ultimate triumph of a mother's ideal—protection of a good man for her young and beautiful daughter and guidance and strength for her loving son.

The cast is a well-rounded one, each man or women being in character for his or her part. Margaret Seddon, who had an important role in "The Inside of the Cup," plays the mother. A young actor of great promise is Lewis Sargent, who is seen as Jimmie Birdsong, an awkward but charming messenger boy who is strongly devoted to his mother and sister and who can stand up for his right whenever necessary. Sigrid Holmquist, called the "Mary Pickford of Sweden," plays Essie Birdsong. Fred C. Thompson, Edward Phillips, Peggy Parr, Mme. Rose Rosonova and William Nally round out the capable cast.

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL productions predominate in a list entitled, "The Best Family Pictures Released in 1921," which has been compiled by the National Committee for Better Films of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. The selections appear in Film Progress, the organ of the committee, in the December issue.

Nearly all of the larger motion picture concerns are named in the list. The eleven First National pictures listed are: "All for a Woman," All-Star; "R. S. V. P.," Charles Ray; "One Arabian Night," Pola Negri; "Woman's Place," Constance Talmadge; "The Idle Class," Charles Chaplin; "Peck's Bad Boy," Jackie Coogan; "Bob Hampton of Placer," James Kirkwood, Marjory Daw, Wesley Barry; "The Sky Pilot," John Bowers and David Butler; "Scrap Iron," Charles Ray; "The Kid," Charles Chaplin; 'Dinty," Wesley Barry.

Gunning Has New Feature

"White Hands" Featuring Hobart Bosworth for Wid Gunning Release

WID GUNNING announces that he has taken over for distribution "White Hands" in which Hobart Bosworth is featured. The picture is the first one made by Max Graf in the new San Mateo studios. The story is by C. Gardner Sullivan, and Lambert Hillyer directed.

In "White Hands" Bosworth takes the part of Hurricane Hardy, a hard fisted sea captain adventuring into the Sahara desert in search of goods. The picture is said to give Bosworth the most dramatic opportunity he has ever had. It abounds with thrills, including the killing of a man by sharks and a fight in which Bosworth bests an entire band of Arabs.

The cast selected by Mr. Graf includes many of the best known people in pictures, among them Robert McKim, Elinor Fair, Freeman Wood, Muriel Frances Dana and Al Kauffman.

Lambert Hillyer, the director of "White Hands," has for the last few years been directing William S. Hart. C. Gardner Sullivan, the scenario and continuity writer, is known as the highest paid man in that branch of the industry. The photography was done by J. O. Taylor.

The Wid Gunning staff is making elaborate preparations for putting over "White Hands."

Mr. Graf himself brought the master print of "White Hands" to New York and turned it over to Mr. Gunning. He returned this week to San Francisco to start work on his second picture.

"White Hands' is the first big picture to be made in the new studios erected at San Mateo, in the suburbs of San Francisco.

Sales Drive for Century

Week of December 25 to January 1 Will Be Observed as Century Week

Baby Peggy, two year old Century Comedy star, appearing in "Chums"

AS a tribute to Julius Stern, president of Century and newly-appointed vice president of Universal, salesmen handling the Century product, have pledged themselves to put a Century comedy in every theatre in the United States and Canada during Christmas week. This period from December 25 to 31 will be known as Century week and a concerted effort is being made by the bookers in the various Century exchanges to arrange play dates for this week.

During the past few months there has been an increasing demand for Century comedies on the part of exhibitors all over the United States and Canada, declares a statement from the century film headquarters. Lee Moran, the newest Century star, who has projected a series of super comedies dealing with conditions of modern life, will contribute one picture a month to the company's output. His first release, "The Straphanger," which has to do with suburban life, will be followed immediately with "The Touchdown," the theme of which is college sports.

The Century Film Corporation reports it has been forced to double the number of prints of its comedies during the 1921-1922 season in order to supply the increased number of first-run accounts, now featuring its stars as important parts of their program.

Special arrangements are being made to rush late December prints to exchanges in time for Century week. Among the new pictures which will be available to exhibitors during the holidays are "Chums," with Baby Peggy and Brownie; "The Dumb Bell, with Harry Sweet; "Shipwrecked Among Animals," with Sweet, and "The Straphanger," with Lee Moran.

Balanced Cast for "At the Stage Door"

William Christy Cabanne has selected a carefully-balanced cast for the production of "At the Stage Door." This will be released by R-C Pictures on December 11th.

Lillian ("Billie") Dove, late of the Ziegfeld Follies, who made a decided hit in "Sally" has the leading female role. Huntly Gordon plays the leading male role. Elizabeth North has the ingenue role, and William Collier, Jr., has the young man part. Charles Craig, screen comedian, supplies the comedy relief. Billy Quirk also plays a light role that brings many laughs. Vivia Ogden plays the exacting role of a theatrical boarding-house keeper. Little Miriam Battista, Frances Hess, Margaret Foster, Katherine Spencer, and Doris Eaton are also included in the cast.

Universal Short Subjects for December

A COMPREHENSIVE schedule of short subjects is announced for release by Universal during the closing weeks of the old year. The list includes six two-reel Western dramas, four two-reel comedies, four one-reel comedies, one two-reel newspaper life drama, and the opening of a new serial.

The Western dramas feature such stars as Eddie Polo and Eileen Sedgwick. They are "The Yellow Streak," with Eddie Polo; "The Dream Girl," with Miss Sedgwick; "The Heritage of Hate," with Polo; "The Alarm" with a special cast; "A Ride for a Rancho," with Polo, and "A Battle of Wits," with Miss Sedgwick. "Ned of the News" has been filmed at Universal City, with Percy Pembroke in the featured role. It will be released during the third week of December.

One reel Star Comedies to be released in the coming few weeks are, "Heart Breakers," "Show Me Your Samples," "Fur Coats and Pants" and "Oh Nursie!" In addition to the foregoing short subjects, the first episode of Eddie Polo's latest serial, 'The Secret Four," will be released.

Second Selznick Special Ready

NEW YORK theatregoers will pass upon the first of Selznick's six special productions for this season when "A Man's Home" occupies the screen at the Capitol theatre week starting Sunday, December 18, and before that time there will be pre-release showings of "Conceit," the second feature in the Selznick series in some of the larger cities outside of New York. The appearance of "A Man's Home" at the Capitol during the week before Christmas will be a test of drawing power in the worst period of the theatrical year.

"Conceit" is based upon entirely different lines than "A Man's Home" with vastly different phases of human nature under consideration—but the Selznick forces declare that more exciting events and a wider appeal to sensationalists will be disclosed in the latest special. "Conceit" was shown to representatives of the trade press during the past week and the first critical opinions that have, as a result been printed point to a substantiation of the Selznick faith in the new offering.

Michael J. Phillips wrote, for Munsey's Magazine, the story on which Edward J. Montagne based the scenario of "Conceit" from which Burton George directed the presentation. Myron Selznick, vice-president in charge of production, sent Director George and his company to the Canadian Rockies to make headquarters at Banff, Alberta.

A scene from "Conceit," the second of Selznick's Supreme Six

Thus were scenic backings secured that promise to make "Conceit" distinctive for its settings of natural grandure. Much of the action takes place out-of-doors and in every one of these scenes are different "shots" of mountains, snow capped and creased with rugged fissures of rocks and ice; forests that disclose miles upon miles of tree-tops; roaring cataracts and rushing streams—all forming a natural background for ferocious combats, man to man and struggles with wild beasts.

Banff and its surroundings have brought fame to the Province of Alberta because of the wonders of the Canadian Rockies, and the natural beauty of its scenery summer and winter. "Conceit" is declared to be the only photoplay that has carried practically its entire action into that rugged country bringing to the screen, in this way, scenery that will be a revelation to theatregoers who may have glimpsed the Canadian Rockies only in news reels or educationals.

In the matter of cast, Myron Selznick made individual selection of players best equipped to play the several roles. Thus William B. Davidson became the lead, representing the type of character that embodies the characteristics of a man who tipifies "Conceit"; Mrs. De Wolf Hopper is leading woman and Betty Hilburn figures prominently in the crux of the plot. Charles Gerard, Maurice Costello, Patrick Hartigan and Warren Cook are other players of importance to the presentation.

"Conceit" is an immediate release among the Selznick attractions. Prints are now in the several Select branches and contracts for presentations have already become operative in the various territories.

"Behold the Man" in Demand for Holidays

With the approaching holiday season, Pathe again finds exhibitors demanding in even greater numbers than last year, its beautiful hand colored masterpiece, "Behold the Man." This story tells the life of Christ in the most exacting manner, and never digresses from the Bible.

Bookings have been increasing so steadily for the past month, that few open dates are left now on any of the prints, and exhibitors desiring to play the subject, are urged by the Home Office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., to make immediate applications for play-dates.

"Sailor-Made Man" Acclaimed

Trade Press in High Praise of Harold Lloyd Comedy

A VERITABLE flood of praise from the trade press has greeted the pre-release showing of Harold Lloyd's "A Sailor-Made Man," which is scheduled as a Christmas release by Associated Exhibitors. This is Harold Lloyd's first four-reel production, and all the publications agree that "A Sailor-Made Man" will be a tremendously successful attraction for the exhibitors.

Lawrence Reid, of the Motion Picture News declares in his review that it is "certainly a gem of a comedy." He says that "Harold Lloyd has employed all the original ideas which are associated with a sailor's life, and has presented them in such a clever manner that one funny scene follows another with lighting rapidity," also that "Hal Roach has spent a snug sum in getting a comedy which is correct in its realism, which contains original sets, and never relies upon worn-out hokum. Lloyd is constantly doing the unexpected and the comedy is a sure laugh getter."

The Exhibitors' Trade Review remarks that "A Sailor - Made Man "is very likely to result in an avalanche of dollars at the box office, and without a doubt will widen the smile on the face of the wise exhibitor who likes to hear his audience laugh and is not adverse to taking in the dollars." The Trade Review write up concludes with the remark that "there is a point of appeal in every foot of this film. It appeals to everyone, man, woman or child.

Arthur James, editor of the Moving Picture World, declares that "A Sailor-Made Man" is continuous, fine, well - presented, most amusing and thoroughly complete and satisfying entertainment. The picture is expensively made and looks it." Mr. James concludes his article with the following advice: "The attention of the exhibitors is especially directed to this picture as a box office number that can be cashed in upon heavily." Elsewhere in the Moving Picture World, Mr. C. S. Sewell says: "'A Sailor-Made Man' is in several respects Harold Lloyd's best effort and, at the same time, his most ambitious offering. Besides being an excellent comedy, it is marked by an elaborateness of production such as big Oriental sets, as is seldom seen in comedies."

Wid's Daily says: "Lloyd again demonstrates in 'A Sailor - Made Man" the possibility of straight, clean comedy, without resorting to slap-stick or smutty effects. As a matter of fact this is probably one of the strongest reasons for Lloyd's great hold upon the American public. His comedy is clean, straight and decent."

Associated Exhibitors say that every branch has wired in to New York praising in highest terms this production and declaring that there is no question about it being one of the most tremendously successful comedies the exhibitors have ever shown. Practically every big first-run theatre of the country will show "A Sailor-Made Man," many of them using it as a Christmas week attraction.

New Tom Mix Picture Is "Arctic Trails"

Tom Mix and Lynn F. Reynolds are authors of Tom's new picture just started at Hollywood and being made under the working title "Arctic Trails." Eva Novak is playing the feminine lead. It is the Fox star's first picture with a prologue.

Paramount Announces Dec. 11th Releases

FOLLOWING close on the heels of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," another Cosmopolitan Production, "Just Around the Corner," is scheduled for release by Paramount December 11, sharing the date with the special Production, "Don't Tell Everything!"

Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson and Elliott Dexter have the leading roles in "Don't Tell Everything!" which is one of Paramount's multiple-star special productions. The picture is from an original story by Lorna Moore, with scenario by Albert Shelby La Vino. Sam Wood directed and Thompson Buchanan supervised the production. In addition to the above-mentioned players, the cast includes Genevieve Blinn, Sam Wood's baby daughter, Gloria, and the de Briac twins.

"Just Around the Corner" is an adaptation of "The Superman," a story by Fannie Hurst. Frances Marion, who wrote the scenario of "Humoresque," not only adapted this latest production but directed it as well.

The leading feminine role is played by Sigrid Holmquist, known as "the Swedish Mary Pickford," who here makes her debut in an American production. The most important male role is in the hands of young Lewis Sargent. Margaret Seddon plays the mother, and other prominent roles are played by Fred C. Thomson, Miss Marion's husband; Edward Phillips, Peggy Parr, Mme. Rose Rosonova and William Nally.

"White Eagle" Has Many Advance Bookings

Pathe branch exchange reports up to three weeks before the announced release date for "White Eagle" show that the latest Ruth Roland serial has broken all advance booking records. With leading exhibitors in different parts of the country sending telegrams of congratulation to the Pathe Home Office, anticipations of greater returns from "White Eagle" than from any previous Pathe serial are considered justifiable.

The intense vitality and picturesqueness of the action, together with its fascinating "White Rider" note of mystery are referred to with notes of admiration in these expressions from exhibitors on reviewing the opening episodes of "White Eagle."

Fine Support for Constance Binney

Three well-known picture-players have been signed for the principal supporting roles in Constance Binney's fifth Realart picture of the season which has just gone into production under the direction of Edward Le Saint. Jack Mulhall plays the male lead.

Six Ince Features Coming

Four in Production, One in Cutting Room and Sixth Announced

Thomas H. Ince

SIX big pictures are on the production schedule of Thomas H. Ince for the first three months of 1922 to follow "Hail the Woman" under his recently negotiated distribution contract with Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

At the Ince studios at Culver City four pictures are in the course of production, one is in the cutting room and the sixth has been announced. For 1922 Mr. Ince has laid down a "big year" production policy and his plans include definitely, for the first quarter of the year, the following specials: "Face Value," Florence Vidor, Milton Sills, Marcia Manon Joe Singleton, Frank Campeau, Charles Clary and Winter Hallin in the cast. Direction and scenario by Lambert Hilger, director of most of Bill Hart's best. Charles Stumar at the camera. Original story by Marc Edmond Jones. It is the story of a tin-cared, broken-nosed crook who receives a new identity at the hands of a noted plastic surgeon. Mystery, romance and thrilling adventure and a drama with many unusual twists and exploitation possibilities.

"The Hottentot," from Willie Collier's recent stage success, Douglas MacLean in the role of Sam Harrington, the man mortally afraid of horses who is mistaken for a daring steeplechase rider. Madge Bellamy in the feminine lead, Raymond Hatton, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Lillian Worth, Sam Armstrong and others in support. Story by William Collier and Victor Mapes. Scenario and direction by Del Andrews, the veteran Ince scout who at last "condescends" to wield a megaphone after many years.

"Jim" Milton Sills, John Bowers and Marguerite de la Motte in the leading roles. An original story by Bradley King. Directed by John Griffith Wray, who directed "Lying Lips" and "Hail the Woman."

"Wooden Spoil," directed by Irving Willat. The story is from a popular novel by Victor Rousseau. Scenario by Joseph Franklin Poland. All-star cast.

"Finding Home," timely and absorbing drama of immigration with the Colorado mines as locals. Featuring an all-star cast. Direction by Lambert Hillyer. Story by "Bellboy 13." Another Douglas MacLean comedy to be released after "The Hottentot."

"Someone to Love," a drama of a Canadian trading post, a girl and elephant and a musician, written by C. Gardner Sullivan and to be produced with an all-star cast.

Ince Sees Demand for Realities

THE motion picture public demands drama dealing with the actualities of life and has grown tired of namby-pamby stories, according to Thomas H. Ince whose forthcoming drama of American life, "Hail the Woman," is ready for release by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

In an interview at Culver City, where the executive office and studio of Mr. Ince are located, Mr. Ince expressed his determination to give the public what it wants in picture entertainment.

"From the outset of my career as a producer, I have realized that it would be folly on the part of the motion picture industry to ignore any of the demands of the all-powerful public," he said.

"Therefore I have made a careful diagnosis during the past year as to what constitutes a 'better picture' in the opinion of that severest of all critics, the American public. Motion picture audiences have grown tired of namby-pamby plots, of impossible characters, of sensations founded on sand and of weird situations existing only in the exhausted imaginations of hack writers.

"What the public demands now is motion picture drama dealing with the actualities of life which are in themselves a hundred times stranger than the figments of dreams.

"In producing 'Hail the Woman,' I made it in conformity with my observations of what the public really wants in screen entertainment and an answer to the public demand for 'bigger pictures.'

"The public has been getting educated rapidly as to what constitutes a good picture and what does not. The industry must keep pace with such development of the public mind. It cannot stand still for stagnation means ruin."

"Someone to Love" Is New Ince Feature

Thomas H. Ince announces the production of another special feature for distribution by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., "Someone to Love," the latest original screen story by C. Gardner Sullivan, author of "Hail the Woman."

The new story is declared to be one of the most unusual dramas ever prepared for the screen. The entire story is laid in a north Canada settlement and trading post and features the elephant girl in a circus, an elephant and a young musician who has drifted into the wilds.

Sullivan has long been known as master screen writer and has been at work for month on "Someone to Love," which, upon completion, met the enthusiastic approval of Mr. Ince.

North and South Book Negro Comedies

Just as Harris Dickson's "Old Reliable" stories in the Saturday Evening Post captivated all readers without regard to race or color, so it appears evident at the Pathe Exchange branches, both in the North and the South that the Dickson screen comedies "of color" are welcomed by exhibitors for the pronounced novelty they present in the way of characterization and laughter-making dramatic action.

The Pathe branch exchange at New Orleans reports owners and managers of the best theatres in that territory booking the Dickson filmed stories as a matter of course, while theatres in typical Northern sections evince the same attitude.

Betty Blythe to Appear in Rex Beach Story

That Betty Blythe has been engaged to play the leading faminine role in the next Rex Beach picture is the announcement made by Whitman Bennett of the Bennett Pictures Corporation through United Artists. It is also announced that work on this production will begin in the week of December 12.

The second Rex Beach feature on the United Artists program will consist of an elaborate adaptation of Mr. Beach's story, "The Net," the script of which has been prepared by Miss Dorothy Farnum.

The character to be portrayed by Miss Blythe is that of an Italian Countess around whom is woven a thrilling story of Sicilian vengeance. "Vengeance" may be chosen as the title under which the feature will be released, but this has not been definitely decided upon.

"At the Stage Door" for December 11 Release

William Christy Cabanne and his staff are engaged at the Sixty-first street studio, in New York, in the big task of cutting the negative of "At the Stage Door," the final shots of which were taken last week, reducing the finished production to approximately 6,300 feet.

"At the Stage Door," the working title of which was "Women of Conquest," is to be presented by R.-C. Pictures for release December 11.

Salesmen to Furnish Exploitation News

S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has evolved a scheme whereby each exhibitor will be furnished with all the known exploitation news on the Paramount pictures he buys.

As soon as the division of exploitation receives reports of stunts from the exploiteers, these reports are made into news stories, printed on separate sheets, and distributed to the salesmen. In this way every salesman can place at the disposal of the exhibitor all the known information on what has been done thus far to sell any individual Paramount picture to the public.

Fresh Talent Seen in "Prisoner of Zenda"

Rex Ingram, whose latest picture for Metro, "The Prisoner of Zenda," adapted by Mary O'Hara from Anthony Hope's book, now is in full swing of production, has made it a custom to bring new talent to the front in each of his big features. As in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," he placed in the leading roles, Rudolph Valentino and Alice Terry—both obscure players at the time—so in "The Prisoner of Zenda" he has used in important parts two young people who hitherto have been little known to picturegoers.

They are in this instance Lois Lee Ramon Samaniegos, who respectively play the parts of Countess Helga and Rupert of Hentzau. Alice Terry again fills the leading feminine role, that of the Princess Flavia, this time with Lewis Stone sharing honors as the King and Rudolph Rassendyll.

All-Star Cast in Ince Special

PLAYERS selected for their particular ability to portray the roles of the drama as well as for their popularity with the public and their past performances on the screen constitute an "all-star" cast, in the opinion of Thomas H. Ince whose dramatic masterpiece, "Hail the Woman," for the First National release is portrayed by twelve widely-known artists.

Florence Vidor, takes the leading role, that of "Judith Beresford." It is that of a highminded, sensitive daughter of the New England hills, whose soul rises in revolt against man's immemorial cruelty and injustice to woman. In her matchless devotion she consoles the weak, cherishes a forlorn childhood, and brings redemption to the erring souls of those she loves. Miss Vidor's expressive type of womanhood is exceptionally well suited to the part, which she carries through the entire production with that vivid interpretation which is the exclusive gift of those who actually "live" their roles.

Playing opposite Miss Vidor is vivacious little Madge Bellamy. Miss Bellamy was until recently a popular actress on the New York stage. Here Thomas H. Ince "found" her when she was playing in "Dear Brutus" with William Gillette. Miss Bellamy takes the part of Nan, the loyal, abused girl-wife of David Beresford. Always preferring strongly dramatic roles, Miss Bellamy has given to the part a whole-souled devotion ensuring its most vivid and emotional interpretation. Her acting throughout is described to be superb, and especially in the great death scene, when Nan wearily lies down the burden of life and commends her child's future to the loving care of Judith, does she attain a dramatic power of intense pathos, according to those who have viewed the picture. Miss Bellamy's personal appearance is in complete harmony with the part. One dramatic critic has described her as "the beautiful child with wonderful eyes, enchanting youth and grace, and everything fairyland could give a girl."

Theodore Roberts, masterful interpreter of character roles "par excellence," takes the part of sour and grim Oliver Beresford. To no other actor, either on the motion picture screen, or on the speaking stage, has such remarkable talent been given for the portrayal of sharply defined characters such as that of old Oliver Beresford, pillar of the church, impatient of human frailties, and bigoted advocate of the immemorial, man-made law "men and their sons first."

Lloyd Hughes gives a splendid characterization of David Beresford, it is stated. His interpretation of David's obedient acceptance of his father's commands, effacing his own personality, and of the spiritual transition to the point where David "finds" himself in the great Church scene, indicate his complete absorption in the part.

Tully Marshall is in his element portraying the role of the vicious "odd-jobs man" in which he is quite as successful as when he recently took the part of Chan-Chang in "The Cup of Life," the preceding Ince production. He gives an excellent interpretation of the mingled elements of cupidity and vicious malice which sway the character.

The part of gentle, self-effacing Mrs. Beresford, who yet finds courage to defy her masterful husband for the love of her children, is interpreted with great fidelity and truth by Gertrude Clair.

Vernon Dent makes an excellent Joe Hurd, the bucolic, crude and vindictive suitor for the hand of Judith Beresford.

As Wyndham Gray, Edward Martindel, is a typical, nonchalant man-of-the-world, wise in the ways of women yet good-natured and interested in Judith's career and character.

Charles Meredith is a suave type of the wealthy New Yorker, who falls in love with Judith in the course of her work among the poor of the metropolis.

Mathilde Brundage makes a dignified matron—a great lady of New York society. She has been aptly styled the "greatest Grande Dame in pictures," and was formerly on the New York stage.

Four-year-old Muriel Dana makes a splendid "little boy," as pathetic little David Junior, and Eugenie Hoffman is a chubby, delightful little thing in the part of "the baby."

John Griffith Wray has scored a great success as the director of "Hail the Woman." His previous notable effort, likewise under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, was "Lying Lips."

Wray is not a believer in an overdose of technique for pictures. This, he holds, frequently results in producing works that are stilted and over-formal.

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

CANADA

A relief bureau at the Pantages theatre, Toronto, Ontario, has resembled a pawn shop for several weeks past because of the announcement by Manager N. K. Miller that he would present a pass for two persons for any performance for each contribution of an overcoat, suit of clothes, pair of shoes or other bundle of wearing apparel for the benefit of local unemployed. Mr. Miller has arranged to turn this stuff over to the Toronto command of the Great War Veterans Association for distribution. Scores of overcoats, suits and boots have been received and Mr. Miller has secured very favorable publicity in the newspapers.

Vancouver, B. C., has still another new moving picture theatre, this being the Star theatre at 330 Main street. This is a medium-sized house in the downtown district. The policy adopted is to change programs twice weekly. The Star has a ladies' orchestra.

The Catholic Art Association of New York has opened headquarters for Canada in Montreal, Quebec, with John J. Walsh, A.B., A.M., LL.D., of Montreal as president. There are already ten branches of the Association in the United States and the company, according to announcements, is primarily a moving picture producing company which was organized some time ago to make pictures embodying some Catholic belief and portraying a moral lesson.

Carl Chamberlain, formerly with the Canadian Corps with which he served for many years in Europe, has blossomed forth as a suburban theatre owner in Winnipeg, Manitoba. Chamberlain decided to make a specialty of small neighborhood houses and already has a chain of three moving picture theatres in the outlying districts of the city.

The latest house to be added to the circuit is the Chamberlain theatre at Roseberry street and Ness avenue in the St. James district. This theatre, which has a seating capacity of 400, was recently completed and has been opened by the former soldier. It was opened under auspicious circumstances and is doing good business. Another theatre operated by Chamberlain is the Elm theatre, situated on Talbot avenue in Elmwood. These houses are prettily decorated, well ventilated and completely equipped.

KANSAS CITY

Ralph Simmons, Kansas City branch manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been transferred to Chicago to take charge of the branch in that city. While in Kansas City, Mr. Simmons established a splendid record and leaves many friends behind. As Chicago is his home town, the change was welcomed by him.

An announcement was recently made that "The Sheik," a Paramount production, had been rejected by the Kansas State Board of Review. Press notices to that effect were published. According to R. S. Cole, manager of the Kansas City Paramount branch, the picture, which is now showing at the Newman theatre, Kansas City, was not rejected and will be shown in Kansas.

Sam Stoll has been appointed representative of Associated Producers productions for First National, in the Kansas City district, by E. C. Rhoden, Kansas City branch manager.

M. R. Fink, general manager of Peacock Productions, Inc., has sailed for a six weeks' tour of Europe. The board of directors of Peacock voted Mr. Fink the trip in recognition of his services. The trip will be a combination of business and pleasure.

The Crescent Film Company and the Federated Film Exchange have merged, according to M. A. Kahn of Kansas City, manager of the merged companies. Both companies have been owned and operated by the same interests for some time.

Stanley Mayer, Kansas City Paramount representative, has been awarded a gold watch as a prize to the high salesman in the Kansas City territory for sales during Paramount Week.

H. H. Murphy, Kansas City cameraman for Fox, has been awarded a bonus for his work during the American Legion convention in Kansas City, according to a letter from the home office last week. The amount of the bonus was not mentioned.

The following changes in management and opening of new theatres during the past week in the Kansas City district, have been announced:

Colonial theatre, Kansas City, reopened under the management of H. H. Barrett; Gem theatre, Appleton, Kas., purchased by Joseph H. Peet; Victory theatre, Kansas City, owned by Archie Josephson, being remodeled and redecorated; Regent theatre, Newton, Kas., opened by O. K. Mason; Circle theatre, Kansas City, formerly the Emerald theatre, opened under the management of I. Wienshienk and B. Belove.

WESTERN NEW YORK

With economy in view, Harry Marsey has doubled up his managers. In the future Harry Dixon will manage both the Central Park and Star, Jim Wallingford the Allendale and Circle and John Stevens the Ellen Terry and Marlowe. Herman Lorence and Adam Pleuthner have resigned from the General Theatres organization.

W. A. V. Mack announces that the Buffalo Pathe exchange broke all collection records during the month of November. Mr. Mack reports that "Buck" Taylor, former Pathe manager, is now in charge of short subjects for Universal in Philadelphia.

George Falkner and William M. Myers have arrived in Buffalo to take charge of the Wid Gunning, Inc., office in the Warner building. Mr. Falkner will be office manager and Mr. Myers will have charge of sales and exploitation.

"Doc" Wilson has resigned as exploitationist at the Buffalo Metro exchange to accept a position with the Robbins Amusement Company at Utica. "Doc" formerly handled the publicity for the Mark-Strand in New York City.

Doraldina comes to Buffalo in person the week of December 12 to appear at the new Loew State in connection with the showing of her picture, "Passion."

H. Hirsch, Arrow Film representative, is in the Buffalo territory for ten weeks to aid Charlie Saunders exploit "Thunderbolt Jack." Mr. Saunders opened his Albany office last Monday at 676 Broadway.

Buffalo exhibitors are aiding the sale of Christmas seals by flashing reasons on the screens of the city why Buffalonians should purchase the stickers. The seals are sold to aid the Buffalo Tuberculosis Society in its fight against the white plague.

A. C. Hayman of Niagara Falls and Harold B. Franklin and J. H. Michael of Buffalo, are members of the new First National advisory board for western New York. They were elected at the recent get-together meeting of franchise holders in Syracuse last week. H. L. Levvy won the first prize in the F. N. state sales competition last week.

A. W. Moses, Buffalo R-C Pictures manager, denies that Charlie Faust will leave his organization to take over the Albany exchange of Screen Attractions Distributing Corporation. Mr. Faust will remain with R-C Pictures. E. H. Arnold has Mr. Moses' company to cover northern New York.

ST. LOUIS

Clarence Philley, of St. Joseph, Mo., of the Crawford-Philley-Zehrugh circuit of theatres, was a visitor to the St. Louis exchanges this week. Announcement has been made that the Philley combination has purchased and will operate all of the theatres in St. Joseph with the exception of the Tootle, a tabloid burlesque house. The deal involves $1,000,000 and includes the Lyceum, Crystal, Electric, Colonial, Royal and Orpheum theatres in St. Joseph. The Lyceum will operate as a home for road shows, the Electric as a vaudeville house and the others as picture houses exclusively.

Reeves Espy, formerly with the Famous Players Company, is the new publicity promoter for the Skouras Brothers Enterprises in St. Louis, succeeding John Baker.

Managing Director William Goldman of the Missouri theatre returned this week from an eastern visit during which he called on the producers in New York, Chicago and elsewhere.

Plans have practically been completed by the Selznick interests for the erection of a motion picture house in St. Louis, on Grand avenue, to cost in the neighborhood of $1,500,000.

DETROIT MICHIGAN

Henderson M. Richey, general manager of the Michigan Motion Picture Theatre Owners, and other officers and directors of the strong Wolverine unit are planning to attend the organization meeting of Ohio exhibitors to be held in Toledo, December 12 and 13.

Detroit salesmen for the Paramount exchange were in Cleveland last week attending a sales conference called by District Manager Harry Ross. The object of the conference was to discuss new selling methods outlined at the recent New York gathering of district managers.

William Lendon, chief traveling auditor for Universal, is in Detroit on his semi-annual trip. He is accompanied by Sidney Lehman, of the New York office.

"Rip Van Winkle," the Hodkinson release, had its first run in the state last week at the Isis theatre, Grand Rapids.

J. H. Kelley, former house manager of the Kunsky Madison theatre, Detroit, has taken over the lease on the Gladwin Park theatre at Jefferson and Parkview avenues and will operate it personally hereafter.

Teitel and Greenbaum, well known Detroit theatrical firm, have leased the Holbrook theatre from Minter and Slepski. Teitel and Greenbaum also operate the Warwick theatre. They will take charge at once.

SAN DIEGO

The Sawyer-Lubin Film Company, which has been down from Los Angeles doing some special scenes in Balboa Park and other sections of this city and vicinity, is considering the construction of a small studio at Grossmont, a few miles from San Diego, according to A. H. Sawyer. Working in the picture here have been Gareth Hughes, Grace D'Armond, Tina Modotti and Herbert Hays, with George D. Baker directing.

William E. Jones, who was house manager of the Superba theatre for several years, but who for the past year or more has been located in Los Angeles and other northern cities as manager of motion picture houses, has returned to San Diego and is again in charge at the Superba, succeeding George Mathison, who has been house manager for the past three months.

OKLAHOMA CITY

The name of the Wiley theatre at Desdemonia, Texas, has been changed to the American.

A convention of Texas exhibitors has been called to meet at the Oriental Hotel, in Dallas, Texas, December 13-14.

Announcement has been made that the Southwestern Film Corporation will open a branch office at Oklahoma City, Okla., about December 1, with Henry H. Bass as manager. Don C. Berry will travel eastern Oklahoma and W. E. Shotwell in Texas territory with another traveler to be added soon.

The Dallas, Texas, branch of United Artists, under the leadership of Joe Luckett, sales manager, will start a drive for Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma business in the near future with "Way Down East," "The Three Musketeers," "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and other high grade feature films as leaders. No town, big or little will be missed while the drive is on.

John Collins of Hope, Ark., is erecting a new theatre at Paragoulopo, Ark., which will open soon.

The Empress theatre at Roff, Okla., with Mr. Matthews as manager, opened for business last week.

The Buffalo theatre at Pawnee, Okla., has opened for business. The theatre is modern and seats 350.

Fred Knipp is booker for Educational Film Exchange, Dallas, Texas, succeeding John Miles, who was transferred to Oklahoma City, Okla.

Selznick salesmen in Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas report a huge success in sales for Selznick week, November 13 to 19 inclusive.

W. J. Neblett, chairman of the censorship at Houston, Texas, has resigned assigning as a reason that he was not upheld by the City Commission.

INDIANAPOLIS

The Dreamland Theatre Company, of Michigan City, has been incorporated with capital of $15,000. Directors are Jacob Wallerstein, Abraham Wallerstein and N. N. Bernstein.

Observers of the local theatrical field are watching closely for further announcements from the Shuberts about their proposed location of one of the Shubert vaudeville houses here. A representative of the new variety outfit declared several days ago that Indianapolis is sure to have Shubert vaudeville. Chief interest of the movie men lies in where the Shubert's are going to operate. A new house is being erected in North Illinois street by the Stegmeier Brothers, who formerly operated a restaurant on the site, but it will not be large and it generally has been understood that the house was to show movies.

OPEN THREE THEATRES IN ONE NIGHT

Projection Rooms of Plaza, Supreme and National Well Equipped

Trio of Theatres Outfitted in One Night Are Up to the Minute

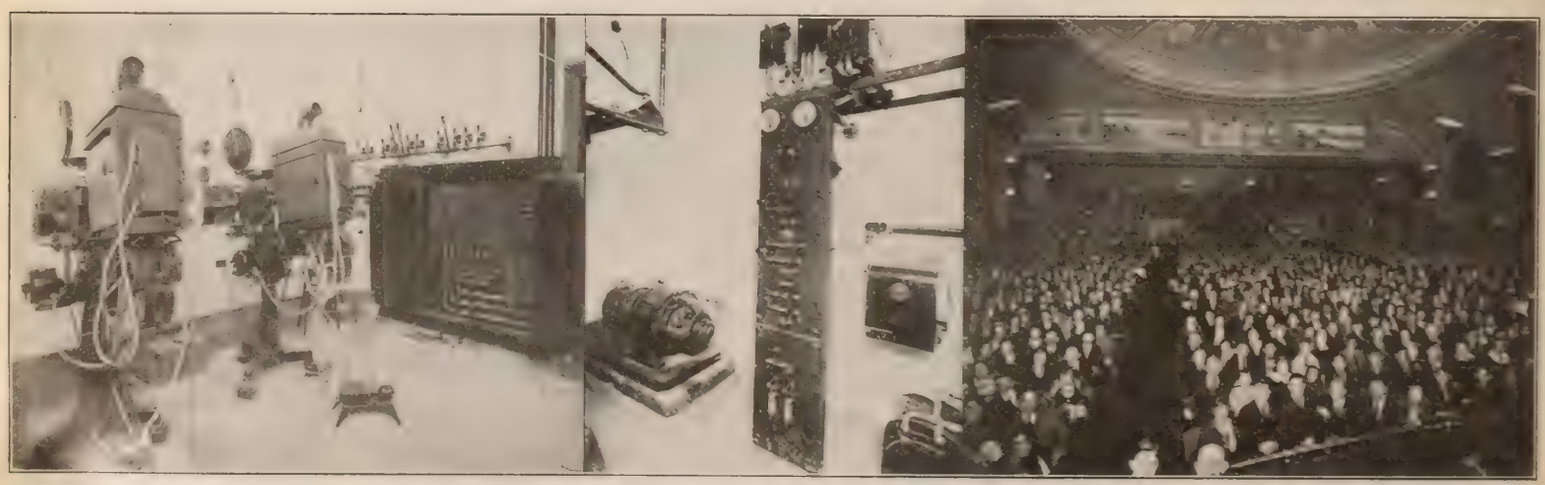
When it comes to speed Joe Hornstein does not let any grass grow under his feet. The other week Joe opened three houses in one night. Furthermore, Joe was on hand in person in all three houses, even though one was over twenty-five miles distant from the other two.

We speak of "Joe" in familiar terms. Everybody in the industry, especially around New York, knows Joe. He is the successful general manager of the Howells Cine Equipment Co., and it is said he never sleeps, but is always on the job.

Some time ago Mr. Hornstein secured the orders for equipping the Supreme theatre, Livonia avenue and William street, Brooklyn; the National theatre, Washington avenue and Park place, Brooklyn, and the Plaza theatre, Union and Redwood avenues, Paterson, N. J. All three of these houses were finished about the same time, and, as luck would have it, they decided on opening all in the same night.

Manager Hornstein makes it a rule to be on hand on the opening night of a house where he has supplied the entire equipment. He supervises his men in assisting the house employees to put on their initial show. Three houses in one night was "going some," especially when you consider that Paterson is just about twenty-five miles from Brooklyn.

Joe got busy and sent his assistants to the three houses. He then mapped out a schedule that made a jump from Paterson to Brooklyn look like a new aeroplane speed record. Nevertheless Joe put it over. He was with Manager Harry Grossman when the lights were on in the Plaza. It was evident that Joe had never met the Hon. William L. Dill, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles of New Jersey, for his driving time from Paterson to Jersey City was nearly "nothing flat." In New York Joe jumped the "sub" and from then on he had taxicab drivers looping the loop to be in two places at the same time.



Looking over the installations that were made by the Howell Cine Equipment, one can well realize how Manager Hornstein is able to land the enormous number of orders that come to his firm. In all three instances the work was more than commendable. Neatness and correctness marked each equipment. In addition, nothing was missing.

Manager Hornstein knows just what is needed to put over a good picture, and he is not satisfied unless he can install a job that will fill the bill. He realizes just what the projectionist is up against, and the layout of the three projection booths in these houses shows he "has a heart" for the lad who mans the projector.

Equipment of the projection rooms of the three new houses which opened on the same night is complete in every detail. In the two thousand capacity Supreme theatre the pictures are shown on a Gardiner velvet gold fibre screen, 17 by 22 feet.

Three Simplex machines, a Kliegl 100 ampere spotlamp, three Peerless automatic arc controls and three Feaster rewinds and Snaplite lenses are in the equipment. The Westinghouse motor generator of double 110 ampere capacity, with a special panel board, takes care of the four arcs individually or collective-

MERITORIOUS MOVIE MERCHANDISE

Howells Cine Equipment Co. Makes Many New Records

Have Equipped 64 Theatres This Year

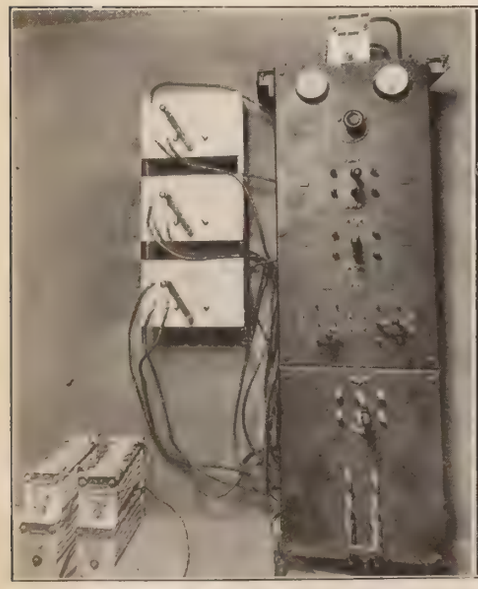
Since its organization, just over two years ago, the history of the Howells Cine Equipment is unusual in the number of records that it has broken. Making installation in practically all quarters of the globe, the company is noted for the precision and carefulness of their work in equipping theatres.

David P. Howells, Pres.

In September 13, 1919, David P. Howells and J. C. Horstein organized the firm, which has grown to be the largest distributors of Simplex machines in the world.

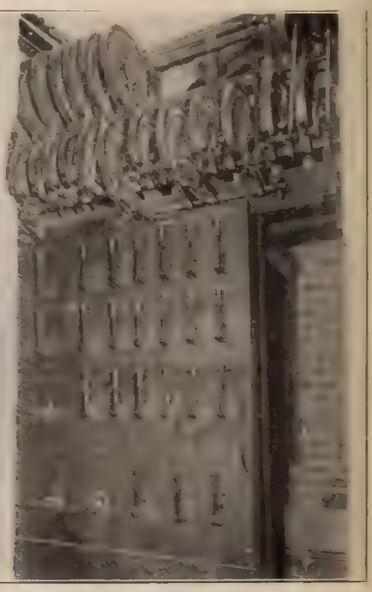
Its expansion was speedy, and now we find them distributing and making theatre installations from New York State to China and Japan. It sells Simplex machines in the Dutch East Indies, the Philippine Islands and the Strait Settlements. All of Central America with the exception of Panama is covered by Howells Cine Equipment Company. It also acts as distributor in Brazil, Venezuela and the West Indies.

Many other devices are handled by Howells Cine Equipment Company besides Simplex machines. It is the exclusive handler of Westinghouse motion picture equipment for the East, and acts as distributor of the Gardiner velvet gold fibre screen, the Peerless automatic arc control and the Acme motion picture projector.



Other meritorious movie merchandise handled by Howells are Snaplite lenses, Haftone Screen, National carbons and several other devices.

Time after time the company has set new records in the number and speed of theatre installations. One of the feats is the number of installations which they made this year—sixty-four, which probably sets another new mark. The "three in one night" installation is perhaps its greatest achievement. Howells' record in this—the equipping of the Supreme and National theatres, Brooklyn, and the Plaza, in Paterson, N. J., will probably stand for a long time.



The personnel of the company is composed of the following: David P. Howells, president; J. C. Horstein, vice-president; Chester E. Sawyer, secretary. Some of the members of the board of directors are Karl G. MacDonald, Benjamin F. Howells and Chester E. Sawyer.

An Important Message to Movie Men

To the Exhibitor:

Just to show that the carbons are not least in importance among your stock in trade, listen to this:

A Chicago house advertises that the quality of its screen-illumination makes the pictures all the more enjoyable—no eye fatigue, no details lost by unclear presentation. This message has gained increased patronage and prestige.

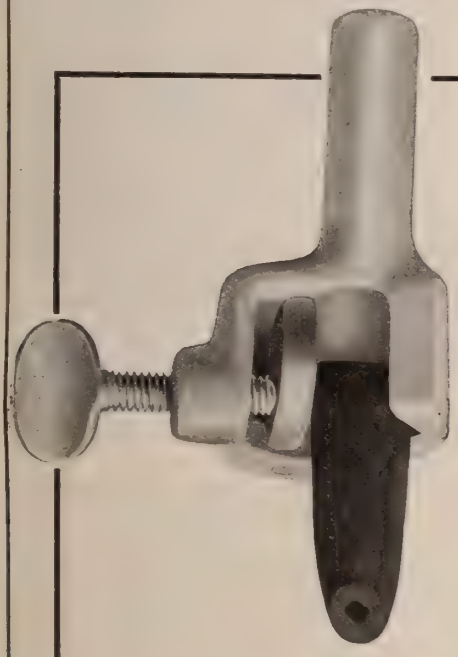
This same exhibitor gives full credit to Columbia Carbons for the remarkable performance. He knows, as many other exhibitors realize, that Columbia Carbons kept his theatre open during the war and have kept his box-office busy ever since.

When buying Columbia Carbons think of them in terms of the high light power you get for the least expense—not as so many "sticks" of carbon.

To the Projectionist:

It certainly makes a great difference when working with good projectors and poor ones, doesn't it?

With a set of Columbia Projector Carbons, for instance, you can work magic on the screen. These carbons allow you to vary the intensity of illumination to fit the scene on the screen—something that cannot be equalled with other light sources. Such control over projection is to be had only with the carbon arc and best of all with Columbia.



Why not be master of the screen at all times? Get brilliancy—tone—softness—steadiness with this silent, safe and sure-burning arc from Columbia Carbons.

If you've never tried Columbia Projector Carbons obtain a set at your supply house. Simply tell them the kind of current (D. C. or A. C.), the amperage you draw, and the name and address of the theatre, and they can give you a correct combination. There is a Columbia trim for every current requirement.

Another Factor of Economy and Better Operation

The Silvertip Adaptor (shown to the right) is a vise-like holder for use with the Columbia Silvertip (lower) carbon. It gives maximum life to the carbons and full current carrying capacity. It takes all sizes of Silvertip Carbons, namely, the $\frac{5}{16}$", $\frac{11}{32}$", $\frac{3}{8}$" and $\frac{7}{16}$".

The Columbia Carbon Saver (shown to the left) saves time, money and trouble. As a holder for carbons up to and including the $\frac{7}{8}$" size, this device burns the carbon to an extremely short stub, and lends full carrying capacity to the current.

Westinghouse Placed in Trio of Theatres

Westinghouse motor generators were installed in all three of the houses equipped by Howells Cine Equipment Company on their record breaking night. The largest of the trio, the Supreme Theatre of Brooklyn, has a motor generator of 110 ampere capacity; the National of Brooklyn, a double 75 ampere motor generator, and the Plaza of Paterson, a double 55 ampere generator.

Columbia Carbons in the Three Theatres

Columbia carbons are used in all the projectors in the three houses equipped in one night by the Howells Cine Equipment Company. Carbon projection is used in all of the seven machines in the Supreme, National and Plaza theatres. The carbons were manufactured by the National Carbon Company.

The motor generator room of the Plaza, Paterson, N. J., is located to the left of the projection room

Simplex in All Three Houses

The Supreme and National theatres, Brooklyn, and the Plaza, Paterson, New Jersey, are all Simplex equipped. In each case the managers insisted on this projector. The Howells Cine Equipment Co. are distributors for this popular projector.

The three projection rooms are well laid out and the new Simplex batteries certainly look fine. The projectionists are very proud of their equipment.

Gardiner Screens in All Three Houses

Patrons of the two Brooklyn theatres and the Paterson Plaza will view their pictures on Gardiner velvet gold fibre screens. The moving pictures are thrown on a 17 by 22 foot Gardiner velvet gold fibre screen in the Supreme theatre, and on 12 by 16 foot screens in the National and Plaza houses.

Peerless Arc Controls Installed

Peerless Automatic Arc controls were installed in the projection rooms of the Supreme National and Plaza. In keeping with the high standard of the other projection equipment of the Howells Cine Equipment installations, the J. E. McAuley Manufacturing Company's product was selected.

Snaplites in National, Supreme and Plaza

Snaplite lenses score again in being placed in all three of the houses equipped by Howells Cine Equipment Company in their "three in one night" installations. Reports from the theatres indicate that Saplite lenses are proving their value.

All in one night!!

In New York District

The successfull opening of three representative theatres in one evening is an achievement which truly reflects the splendid efficiency of the organization which made this accomplishment possible.

~and as builders of the Simplex Projector we are proud to announce that seven of our popular projectors figure in this remarkable triple opening.

ly. The Supreme was the largest of the theatres to be installed by Howells Cine Equipment on the one night, and the manager of the house expressed himself as being well pleased with the results obtained by the installation of the above equipment.

In the 1,500-seat house of Rosenzweig & Katz — the National — two Simplex type "S" machines are used to project the picture to a Gardiner velvet gold fibre screen. The size of the screen is 12 by 16 feet. Two "Peerless" automatic arc controls, two Feaster rewinds and Snaplite lenses and a Westinghouse double 75 ampere motor generator with special panel board and spotlamp complete the equipment of the projection room of the National.

Unusually fine projection equipment is in the Plaza theatre, Paterson, when it is considered that it is but a 1,000-seat community house. Charles Chadwick, the chief projectionist of the Plaza is indeed proud of the effects he obtains with his equipment.

Howells Sell Many A. D. C. Curtain Controls

Howells Cine Equipment Co., agents for the A. D. C. Automatic Curtain Control, have installed a number of these useful devices in many of the sixty-four theatres they have equipped the past year. The need of an automatic curtain control is well realized by the exhibitors today. The A. D. C. machine is entirely automatic. The pressing of a button or turning of a switch causes the curtain to open. Not only that but it stops automatically when the curtain has fully opened. They are remarkably simple and therefor there is practically nothing to get out of order.

Maximum Results at Minimum Cost with Mazda

Some Pointers on Mazda Adapters

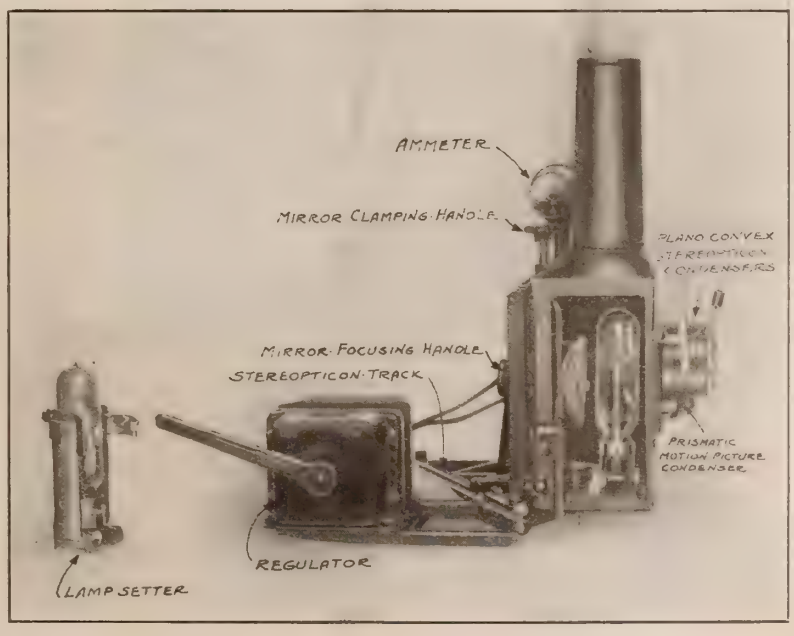
By Robert L. Hosmer, Gen. Mgr., Eastern Theatre Equipment Co., Boston, Mass.

Maximum results at minimum cost means increased satisfaction and greater profit. To keep step with progress you must adopt the newer and more progressive ideas. Few exhibitors today appreciate the amazing and wonderful results that can be accomplished by the use of the latest type of Mazda lamp equipments. It has opened up new fields and has literally revolutionized projection. Success has been obtained.

Looking back over the development of Mazda adapters one is not surprised at the attitude that was generally taken some two or three years ago. Frankly, motion picture projection has not progressed to the same extent as other kindred industries and to inaugurate such a radical departure in light source as a Mazda lamp naturally brought about considerable skepticism.

There have been many devices and so called "adapters" placed on the market during the past two years the majority of which use the 900 watt 30 ampere 30 volt lamp. This lamp has been the result of exhaustive study of light sources, dimensions, optical systems and lamp performances. We have conducted extensive tests with several of the Mazda lamp houses now available on the market and have also experimented with various "adapters" which are designed to adapt the incandescent lamp to motion picture projection. Our experiences have led us to believe the latter class were intended primarily, not for the average theatre, but for the smaller throws and for non-professional use. We used various lamps of 600, 900, and 100 wattage, of both barrel and monoplane filament, and with various controlling devices. Although very good results were obtained in some cases, accurate alignment and adjusting was absolutely impossible.

Condensers used with the arc when employed with the Mazda lamp were found to be entirely unsuitable as they were too long a focus or filament images were reproduced on the screen. Uniform screen illumination was obtained only by use of the prismatic or corrugated condenser. Furthermore, it was impossible to use the 1000 watt 110 volt lamp either in the barrel or monoplane filament. In order to get a maximum amount of light, we found it necessary to fall back on the 900 watt T 29 lamp. This necessitated the addition of a control equipment including an accurate ammeter as this type of lamp must be used only at 30 amperes. Increased amperage will no doubt give increased light but will materially decrease the life of the lamp. Add the cost of this extra equipment to that of the so-called adapter and you are approaching the cost of professional equipment designed for Mazda lamp projection.



There is no doubt in our minds but that it is necessary to use a separate lamp house designed especially for this and the very latest type 900 watt lamp. There are four essentials, the right type of lamp, prismatic lens, special mirror and an efficient regulating device. Should any of these four essentials be altered the screen result is seriously impaired. The lamp house must be properly ventilated, and so constructed that the various parts may be quickly and easily focused. For simplicity and economy in operation, we have found it extremely important to have arrangements whereby all adjustments are made, outside the lamp house, that it may not be necessary to open the door for lamp adjustments, etc.

One large manufacturer of Mazda lamp equipment has greatly simplified this condition by the use of an entirely new device. With the use of a lamp setter it is possible to adjust the lamp, both vertical and lateral adjustments, in the socket before it is even inserted in the housing. With this attachment it is possible to have any number of lamps ready before hand for quick insertion and use in case of emergencies. Too much emphasis cannot be laid on the proper setting of the lamp in the lamp setter. To get the maximum amount of light on the screen the lamp must be accurately focused and when properly set can be introduced without change in mirror setting and there will be no occasion to change its focus during the life of the lamp.

It is paramount that condenser lens be at right angle to optical axis and that light thrown by the condenser be centered on the aperture. When once properly set however, all additional lamps after being set up in the lamp setter should now automatically come in correct position when placed in the lamp housing, that is, the centre of the filament of the lamp must be in line with the centre of the condenser lens, on the optical axis.

To the exhibitor using an alternating current carbon arc, present day Mazda equipment is a solution for all his projection troubles. There is a big saving in electric current bills which will soon pay for making the change. The light source is perfectly steady, there is no flicker and its consequent eye strain; better illumination on the screen, because the quality of light gives proper tone, color, and depth, resulting in a much more pleasing picture on the screen. It will entirely eliminate color bands and "ghosts." There will be no poisonous carbon fumes and dust to injure the health of the operator and wear working parts of the projection machine. Its simplicity of operation will give the operator more time to watch the operating mechanism and improve the picture on the screen. No noise or hum as with the old carbon arc; less fire hazard, no open flames, and no warming up process at end of each reel.

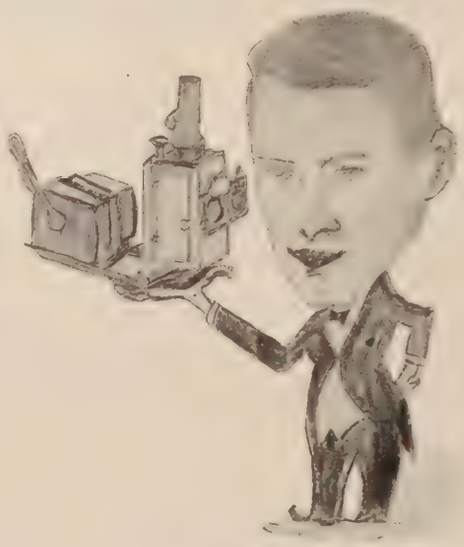
On direct current service there is not as great a saving but on the average, the Mazda lamp equipment is more efficient by at least 1,900 watts each hour. Let us take however, an extereme case, that of a 35 amp carbon arc. It is generally conceded that Mazda lamp projection will displace 45 amp C. current. An arc at 35 amp with its approximate voltage of 55 consumes 1925 watts. However, the line voltage of 110 must be reduced to the arc voltage of 55 and allowing 70% as the efficiency of a motor generator, the total line power consumed by the arc would be 2750. The Mazda lamp operating at 30 amp and 90 volt consumes but 900 watts. By a special hand regulated transformer operating at 90 to 95% efficiency the total line power, or 100% would be at no time in excess of 1000 watts or 1 K. W. as against nearly 3 K. W. of the carbon arc. When only direct current is available it is best to use a small inverted rotary converter to supplement the Mazda lamp equipment so that the transformer may be operated on the A. C.



It is safe to presume that the cost of lamp and carbons are very nearly equal.

Briefly, where conditions are suitable, Mazda lamp equipment is far superior to the arc lamp for motion picture projection. The length of throw is not so much importance as the size of the house, position and dimensions of the screen Given a screen with the proper reflective properties and half size lens, an efficient Mazda lamp equipment will show you brilliant pictures of medium size with added depth of focus, realism and maximum contrast and definition. A reflective type screen is recommended and is coming more and more into use. Every screen has its own reflective characteristics and the proper screen depends mainly upon the house dimensions. Two prominent screen manufacturers are now manufacturing their screens to specifications.

Although large size lens may cost a few dollars more, their result in extra light and better illumination is well worth it and lens equipment should be one of the first considerations.

We have secured a more brilliant picture with the aid of a specially patented shutter which through its curves, has allowed the passing of extra light resulting both by practical and theoretical tests, to the increase of from 10 to 25% more light.

The equipments we installed locally have been operating so successfully that they will convincingly show superiority over the carbon arc. Today we enjoy the mark of approval of several hundred users right here in New England alone and its demand is increasing every day. Why, do you ask? Would you not be interested in any proposition that will enable you to save from 50 to 75% of your operating expense and at the same time result in better projection, thereby increasing your patronage? Hundreds of progressive exhibitors who have adapted this newer equipment have been so thoroughly sold on its many advantages that Mazda lamp projection locally, has permanently displaced the carbon-arc, and this has proven that present day Mazda equipments, properly designed, symmetrical, and easily accessible for adjustments, may be used efficiently in the great majority of picture theatres for longer throws and larger screens than formerly.

Open $750,000 National Theatre

After combing the industry for a suitable production which would appeal to the particular taste of the motion picture patrons in this section of the country the new National theatre, a 2,000 seat house, of Greensboro, N. C., held its premier opening recently with the W. W. Hodkinson super-production "A Certain Rich Man."

This $750,000 house is owned by the National Amusement Company and was built in the heart of the business section of Greensboro, the home of the North Carolina State College for girls.

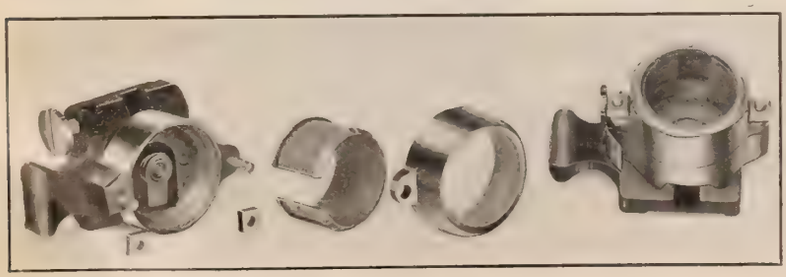
Southern Enterprises Make Changes

Considerable interest in Atlanta film circles was expressed in the announcement, a few days ago, of various changes in the personnel of the house managers at the various Atlanta theatres, operated by this concern.

Perhaps the most interesting chang was that which concerned George J Schmidt. Mr. Schmidt, for two or thre years, was house manager at a litt second-run theatre on the "down-town side of Atlanta. His cleverness in explo tation, his genuine good showmanship an his ability to bring the theatre he mar aged from absolute obscurity and a serie of heavy losses attracted the attentio of Southern Enterprises, and he wa given charge, about four months ago, o the Strand, which is this concern's up town second-run house. And the nev announcement sets forth that hereafte Mr. Schmidt, while retaining control o the Strand, will be exploitation directo for the Forsyth and Rialto, the Southern Enterprises' best theatre, aside, of course from the concern's million-dollar Howard.

Enrico Leide, who came south about a year ago, as conductor of the Howard Concert Orchestra, has been made director of the Howard Theatre, and his ability has already been expressed.

Other changes announced were that Harold R. Kistler, who has been managing the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, had been transferred to Gaffney, S. C., where he will manage the Strand and Cozy Theatres. He was succeeded by Jack Kaliska, who has made an enviable record at the Vaudette, Atlanta.



Wayne Martin, formerly manager of the Vaudette, succeeding Mr. Kaliska, and who was succeeded, in turn, by Mr. Selph, is in the home office, awaiting assignment, and it is an open secret that he has made good, splendidly, so that his new assignment will be worthy of his ability in this line.

J. W. Brown, who has been managing the Duval Theatre, in Jacksonville, will also have charge of the Palace, succeeding George Hickman, who was killed some two or three weeks ago defending the interests of his employer.

Roy L. Smart, who was formerly manager of the company's theatres at Gadsden, is now in another Alabama town—Anniston—and his place at Gadsden was taken by I. C. Holloway.

Two big changes for the company itself will take place soon, in fact, one has already transpired, in which the Southern Enterprises, Inc., took over the York theatre, surrendering to the Independent Theatres, Inc., their Royal and American theatres, in order to get the York. Frank Dowler, supervisor for Eastern Tennessee, and who has been managing the Royal and American Theatres, will transfer his attention to the York.

These changes, denoting such an extensive campaign, are looked to, hopefully, by Southern exhibitors and the film industry in general, as the end of the summer slump and the beginning of some real business. The South and the Southern exhibitor has had rather hard sledding through an unusually hot summer, and they are looking towards the coming Fall and Winter as life-savers.—GADDIS.

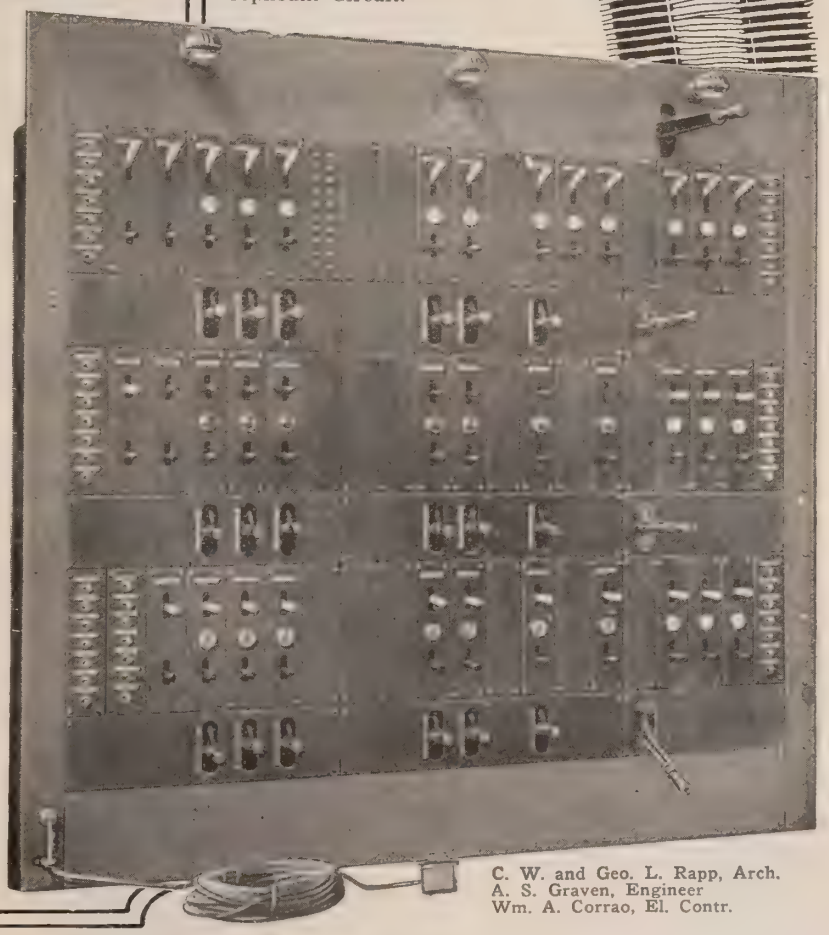
At the End of the Rainbow

There is a "Pot of Gold" for the exhibitor who equips his theatre so that he can give his audiences beautiful lighting effects with his presentations. It is simply a matter of making everything else on your program of more value. The newer palaces of picture play presentation are using

THE MAJOR SYSTEM

Pre-Selective Remote Control



as an aid to their program. The owners realize the box office value of soft blendings of colors as delicate and inspiring as the hues of the rainbow sweeping through the auditorium as the music plays. Light is at least three-quarters of any effective prologue and is indispensable to the modern playhouse. The success depends on the controlling of the lights and there is but one right way to do it—through the marvelously flexible cumulative control known as the Major System.

Regardless of the type or size of your theatre a Major System will fit your requirements. It will save your stage space, eliminate the fire and panic hazard from open switchboards, give you extended remote control and many other advantages. The greatest result of Major installations, however, are the increased box office receipts due to better lighting effects. Send us an outline of your requirements and we will send you some valuable information about theatre lighting. There is no obligation or cost incurred.

Riddle of the Deep to Be Solved by Photography

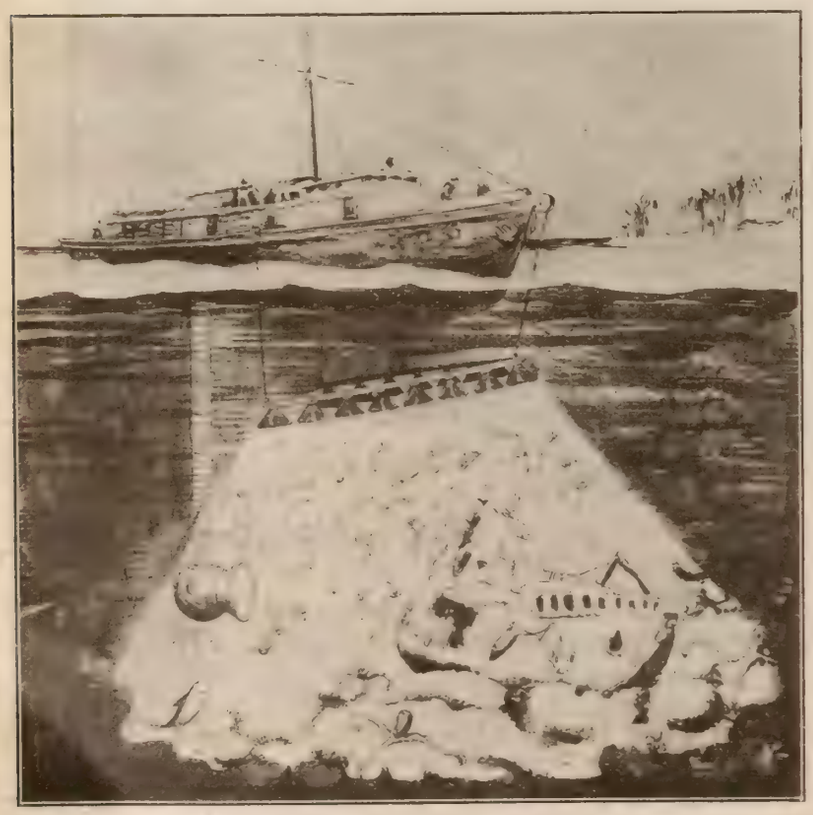
A Paper Before S.M.P.E. by J. E. Williamson and Carl L. Gregory

(The first half of this article is published here, the second half will be in this section next week. —Tech. Ed.)

PART I

About fifteen years ago the navigation of the air was something looked upon with eyes of doubt all over the world. The first flights of the Wrights were hailed with amazement and the newspapers and magazines were filled with accounts of their achievements. At that time it was regarded as a marvelous thing to reach an altitude of a hundred feet and to maintain a biplane in the air for more than a few minutes.

Still, the air had been conquered. The way had been opened for almost unlimited progress in the development of aerial navigation. The desire of man to fly—a desire that had lurked in his breast since he first observed the birds—was about to be gratified.



Today, it is not uncommon to read of new altitude records being made by airmen who have mounted more than three miles above the earth and of flights that have lasted for hours. Even now preparations are under way for an aerial voyage between the Old World and the New, while there is under contemplation a race between air craft around the world. Only a few years ago the first fight across the English Channel was the sensation of the hour.

How strange it seems that while so much brain toil, financial energy and heroism have been expended in mastering the air, so little has been done toward solving the riddle of the sea. Since man first embarked in craft propelled by brawn the struggle to triumph over the surface of the deep has been relentless, and now we have, plowing the ways at express train speed, giant steel liners nearly 1,000 feet long, and carrying enough people to populate the average town. But as they make their way from continent to continent, simply skimming the surface of the oceans, the water goes down beneath them thousands of feet, and this is the part of the ocean that man knows little about.

Except from the lips of divers who have descended on the edges of the coasts to a puny depth of a hundred feet, we are in ignorance of what lies beneath the waves. And the divers, with the limited field of observation accorded them by the crude appliances of their trade, have been able to tell us but little of the nature of things in that vast area beneath the waters which embraces three fourths of the earth's surface. By the weight of a lump of lead on the end of an inanimate wire we have sounded the depths and learned that there are places where the ocean's bottom spreads full five miles beneath the surface. From samples of soil hauled up by mechanical means we know, in a small way, the character of this bottom.

But, could a man have any idea of the beauties of the Yosemite by looking at a handful of gravel in one of its ravines; could he imagine the wonders of the Alps by gazing upon a fragment of rock chipped from some majestic peak and sent to him by parcel post; could he picture the glorious coloring in a tropical garden by seeing the withered leaf of a stately palm?

And now the riddle of the deep is about to be solved.

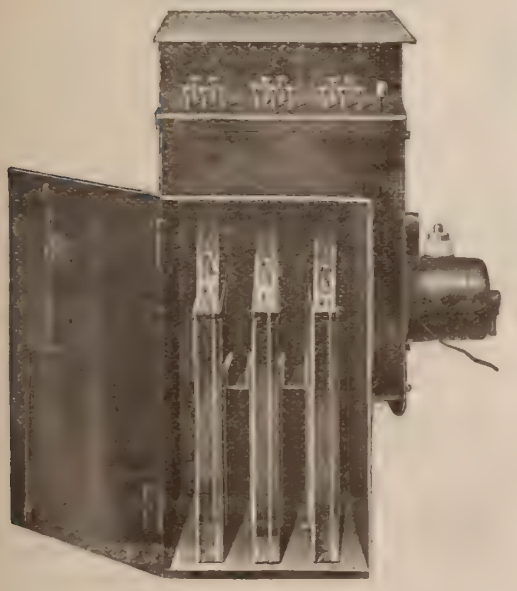
How submarine movies are made

What the initial flight of the Wrights wa to aviation, the experiments just concluded o the ocean's bottom in the Bahama Islands wil be to submarine exploration.

For hours at a time men have sat in comfor within six inches of the bottom and fifty o sixty feet beneath the surface. There they have smoked and talked and breathed a naturally as though they were upon the shore And they looked with ever-widening eyes a the wonders and beauties of subaqueous forests; studied with never ceasing amazement the countless thousands of brightly colored tropical fish; watched with increasing admiration and surprise the panorama afforded by the lacelike length of a coral reef, with hosts of brilliantly hued fish swimming in and out of its pearl caverns, and observed with wonder and awe the skeletons of once proud ships, with backbones and ribs exposed, as they rested where they struck and disappeared from human ken generations ago.

What these men saw beneath the sea they photographed and some of the wonderful pictures they secured are reproduced with this article, giving to the readers of this publication the first authentic views ever taken in the depths of the ocean.

While it is true that the greatest depth achieved by these experiments is not greater than that frequently reached by divers, it was clearly demonstrated that the means for deeper trips into the unknown waters has been found, and that the time is not far distant when it will be easy to go down several hundred feet. The apparatus used in the experiments was subjected to a thorough submarine test and structural analysis at the Norfolk navy yard by officers of the navy, who reported that it would be perfectly safe, in its present form of construction, at a depth of 800 feet. To make it strong enough to go even deeper is simply a mechanical detail.



The experiments in the waters of the Bahamas were made to secure a scientific motion picture film, one that would show the actual conditions on the bottom and the daily life of the many forms of sea life that abound in the waters of the tropics. Before describing the way in which the photographs were secured an outline of the apparatus used will give an insight into the mechanical features of the experiments.

Several years ago Captain C. Williamson of Norfolk began working to perfect an invention that would take the place of the ordinary diving suit. It was his idea that some means should be developed by which a man could go down into the water unhampered by weights and ropes and compressed air and water pressure. His experiments extended over a long time, but finally he was successful and the government granted him a basis patent.

Broadly considered, his apparatus is in three parts: (1) floating vessel of any suitable design; (2) submersible terminal operating chamber in which work or observations can be carried on at the bottom of the water, and (3) a collapsible, flexible tube of metal, connecting the floating vessel and the submersible chamber.

The Successful Show Begins At The Cashier's Window

The long, slow-moving line, always impatient for tickets, is now of the past, gone with the Nickelodeon and the inflammable film.

Patrons are now Au-tom-a-ticketed right through into your theatre and the show starts with everybody in good humor.

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Dear Sir:

Projectionists operating Simplex machines, or any other make for that matter, ought to clip Mr. P. A. Wills' article in last (Nov. 26) week's issue, stick it up in the projection room somewhere so it could constantly remind them of their duty to the manager who owns the projectors, the public and his profession. In my opinion Mr. Wills' letter was a prize-winner.

It is certainly very important that all worn parts be promptly replaced by new ones, and it is a good thing to carefully note other parts of the path taken by the film when replacing one or two worn parts. When installing new shoes, tension spring, or film guide it is necessary that the film guide apron be changed also. If new shoes, new guide and springs are attached and the old worn apron left on, it throws the film out of line causing intense flapping, noise, and strain on the sprocket-holes.

I have seen many Simplex users keep their intermittent sprocket so loose there was fully an eighth of an inch of play in it . . . . . intermittent movement has no support on the one end. All that is necessary is to keep the sprocket clean, and renewed when needed. If it has too much play, loosen the three screws on the intermittent case and tighten the nut with the intermittent case wrench between the sprocket and case. There seem to be so many projectionists who don't even know how to tighten the intermittent sprocket.

Merritt C. Schaub

We get "wails" from so many other fellows about their shutters. They have a terrible time getting it adjusted. From the projection room perhaps it will seem to be perfect, but viewing from the main floor a ghost appears, yet they are unable to get the ghost from the bottom before it appears at the top. The remedy is easy. Many fellows will wrestle with their shutter all day and half the night trying to get it "set" never thinking once to change the distance from the lens. It is almost impossible to eliminate a ghost if it is too close or too far away. Then they ask how is one to know exactly the proper distance to have it. They think there ought to be a set rule with the different projectors, not knowing that the line-up of condensors, etc., has an effect upon it. No definite distance can be suggested with any make of projector. Conditions vary with the current, with the lens line-up and the distance of lamp-house from aperture, etc. The proper distance to place the shutter from the projection lens. With the shutter placed there its adjustment is mighty easily accomplished.

Let me say here that this league with its discussions is the finest thing ever organized for projectionists and we can all feel like one family. Let's hear from all the members, old or new. Everyone ought to have something helpful to suggest. We owe it all to the News fellows! How can we ever appreciate it? With best of wishes,

Most truly yours,
MERRITT C. SCHAUB,

Just a few suggestions to the "Out-of-focus" article of H. H. B., Barnesboro, Pa., in the Dec. 3d issue of the NEWS.

He does not say whether his booth is located off center of screen or not. This of course would produce an out-of-focus effect on one side. He does not give particulars. Are his lenses clean? A little residue on back combination at one side of lens will cause an out-of-focus effect of one side, or by coincidence particles of dirt might have been thrown back from gate if pushed in quickly. Let him first look at his lenses and ascertain if they are clean.

Now providing his lenses are clean,—are they setting in the holder straight? Let him lossen the two screws that hold Part E-101-C, (the escutcheon) and then put in his lenses. This escutcheon would tend to hold lenses from the perpendicular of aperture, or his screen might not be perpendicular to lenses.

Still another cause, the tension on Film Trap Door Pad (P-100-E), might have more tension one one side than other, with the result that one side of film would be closer to lens, thereby causing an out-of-focus effect. I might suggest that he pull his film trap door so that it sets back against the shoes of the film trap tightly.

The above taken in order of their importance, this last hardly probable, but I will write it any way. Dirt might be back of one of the shoes of film trap, or complete film trap might not be perpendicular to center frame of machine. This last paragraph I might say takes in almost improbabilities.

If the above does not help in correcting the out-of-focus effect I would advise the getting of two new lenses. I have seen imperfect lenses that would not focus sharp all over. The company will be glad to replace any lenses found imperfect.

Motiograph Meeting Big Success

Earl J. Ferney, Motiograph's representative, is meeting with big success in selling the new De Luxe Projector to Iowa and Nebraska exhibitors, according to reports reaching the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company's Chicago headquarters. One of the many new installations he made recently is that of the Empress theatre in Omaha, Nebraska.

Mr. Ferney, in a conference with O. F. Spahr, manager of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, said that in all his selling experience he never saw anything that was as quickly sold on its merits as the new De Luxe Projector.

Many sales are also being made in the Wisconsin territory and Mr. Spahr made a flying visit to Milwaukee last week, returning with a contract for the installation of two Motiograph De Luxe machines in the Colonial theatre, one of Milwaukee's popular neighborhood houses.

Riddle of Deep Sea to be Solved

The main feature of the invention is the tube. It is made of steel in sections of varying lengths. Each section is composed of an upper and lower flange and these are connected by a set of steel hinges, so arranged as to open and shut along radial lines to the axis of the tube, but at all times to fit against each other so closely as to be water-tight. Some of the sections have only one set of hinges and when collapsed the flanges rest upon each other. In the longer sections there are several sets of hinges joined to each other between the upper and lower flanges. When collapsed they stand about three feet high; they are eight feet long when extended. The sections can be fitted to each other readily, and by this means the length of the tube is regulated. Because of the collapsible nature of the sections it is possible to submerge the tube. Any one who has tried to push a large bucket bottom downwards into the water will realize what a difficult thing it is to do. With the collapsible tube each section just a little more than displaces its own weight in water at the surface when extended Therefore, it will sink. But deeper down the pressure of the water overcomes this greater displacement. Then the tube automatically collapses, section by section, from the bottom upwards, and as each section closes its weight remains the same, but its volume of displacement grows less. By this mean the continual adding on of sections at the surface forces down the sections below. To the bottom section is fitted the operating chamber.

The idea of taking submarine motion pictures came to the sons of the inventor while watching the projection of a scientific film showing fish swimming in a small glass aquarium tank. These two boys, J. Ernest Williamson and his brother George M. Williamson, had worked with their father in the development of the tube ever since they could remember, and while watching this film they got into a discussion over the feasibility of placing a camera in the apparatus and photographing submarine life in its natural haunts and surroundings. They had both often been down in the tube in the waters of Norfolk Harbor and seen fish swimming about as they looked through the glass ports. They did not let the idea rest. The very next day they set about arranging experiments, and in a few weeks had secured excellent snap shots with an ordinary camera, of fish swimming along the bottom of Hampton Roads.

Using these photographs as an argument they formed a corporation in which several of the most prominent business men of Norfolk are stockholders. These men saw the way to put before the outside world views of that portion of its surface that man had never before seen, and realized the wonderful scientific and educational value of a photographic record of the ocean's bottom.

Although conservative bankers, business and professional men who would not be ordinarily impressed by such an unheard of idea, they were so convinced by these photographs of the ultimate success of the idea, that they gave freely of their time and means to finance and outfit the expedition.

How well justified their foresight was is shown by 20,000 ft. of marvelous film taken beneath the ocean in the West Indies.

It is a fitting coincidence that the first successful motion pictures ever taken beneath the ocean were made at a spot only a few miles from the place where Columbus's ships first dropped anchor in the New World.

The Williamson boys designed a special chamber for the photographic work and also drew the plans for a vessel from which to lower the tube and chamber. This chamber is a hollow sphere of steel with an inside diameter of five feet. From its center a cone of steel five feet long and five feet in diameter at the large end projects horizontally. This cone penetrates the sphere and at its small end, where it is eighteen inches in diametr, a steel bulkhead is fitted. In this bulkhead there are two glass ports, three inches in diameter, and placed one above the other with about five inches between them. They are the eyes for the photographer and the camera. The large end of the cone is closed by a piece of plate glass an inch and one half thick and five feet in diameter. It was manufactured in Germany especially for the purpose and is optically flawless.

To protect this glass from the pressure of the water, gauges and pumps were installed in the sphere. One gauge showed the water pressure against the outside of the glass. The other showed the air pressure within the cone. The pump was used to keep these two pressures equal. The steel bulkhead at the small end of the cone prevented the compressed air from escaping from the cone into the sphere. In the sphere the air was the same as that above the water. It came down the tube just as air comes down into the hold of a ship and the photographer worked under the same conditions he would have experienced were he photographing the inside of a building.

Make Several Simplex Installations

Word comes from the Yale Theatre Supply Company, Kansas City, Missouri of the installation of Simplex Projectors in the new Main Street theatre operated by the Orpheum Vaudeville Circuit. According to reports, this new theatre is considered the largest and finest in Kansas City. The seating capacity is 4,000.

The Exhibitors Supply Co., Inc., Chicago, Ill., also report the opening of the new Orpheum theatre, Jerseyville, Ill., owned by S. E. Pirtle, a well known Illinois exhibitor. The projection room is equipped with two Simplex Incandescent Projectors installed by the above concern along with other equipment.

Simplex Projectors, G. E. Generator Set, Superlite Screen are part of the equipment installed by Lewis M. Swabb & Son, Philadelphia, Pa., in the new Riant theatre, Conshohocken, Pa., built by Harry Schwalbe. It seats 1,000 and will no doubt fill a long felt want in Conshohocken for a real theatre.

San Francisco's newest motion picture palace, the Granada theatre, which opened the latter part of last month, was also equipped with three Simplex Projectors, one Simplex Spotlight and a Simplex Stereopticon by the Western Theatre Supply Company. The Granada Theatre has a seating capacity of 3,500.

Cohoes to Build Another

Reserved Seat Tickets for BIG PICTURES

There are a great many really big productions available today by exhibitors. These are productions that in the past would have been road shows, either not playing your town or playing the opposition combination house. You can give these special productions the proper presentation right in your own theatre. The secret is RESERVED SEATS. "The Birth of a Nation," "'Way Down East," "The Four Horsemen," "Over the Hill," "The Old Nest," and many other unusually big pictures must be played with reserved seats. They are too long for a grind show. They must be presented at advanced prices, and be put on in real showmanship manner. Are you able to handle the big pictures? The Reserved seat policy will make for success.

Advise us your seating capacity and we will be glad to quote you prices and send you samples.

Write for our leaflet "Reserved Seats and Big Pictures."

Music and the Picture

Edouarde Dissects His "Fauntleroy" Score

New York Mark Strand Musical Director Lectures on Photoplay Music

"THERE'S a piece of music somewhere to correspond with every possible human emotion, no matter how fine the shading nor how delicately drawn the phase of feeling that is to be portrayed through sound harmony."

This is the assertion of Carl Edouarde, musical director of the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, and it is from this basis that Mr. Edouarde works when he desires to fit a musical score to a motion picture. That it is not always easy to get the particular music for the particular scene, he readily admits, but he stoutly maintains that exactly the right music can and should be found. His task is to find it. He has a marvellous library and a wonderful system; he is an indefatigable and wholly industrious worker. To these things he lays his ability to find the right music for the emotion presented.

Mr. Edouarde's views were sought in an effort to learn just why his score called for certain music with certain scenes in Mary Pickford's film version of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," then showing at the Strand, and why the old ballad "In the Gloaming" was chosen for the musical theme.

"The proper musical setting is to the photoplay what atmosphere is to the great painting, or local color and realism to the work of fiction," said Mr. Edouarde. "It projects, or draws the audience—and I like the word 'draws' the better—into direct and close sympathetic contact with the scene being shown on the screen. As the artist's brush brings the spectator into sympathy with the theme of a painting, so does the orchestra bring the audience into the atmosphere of time and place in the film-play, and a correct musical interpretation creates an instant and understanding sympathy between the pictured scene and those viewing it. That's all there is to making a musical score for a picture; and that's the reason.

"That old song 'In the Gloaming,' was immensely popular in the early Eighties, the time setting for 'Little Lord Fauntleroy,' and it fits the general idea of the picture. Here is a woman, 'Dearest,' bereft og a dearly loved young husband, cast aside by his family with just enough for a scanty living, but who sees in Cedric, the future little Lord Fauntleroy, the image of the man she mourns, thus deriving an incentive to do and live her best. Not at all a tragic situation, this. She has much to live for, much to work and hope for, and always there is the vision of this little son grown into such a man as his father. Tenderly sad, but ambitiously hopeful—that is the situation. 'In the Gloaming' fittingly expresses the emotion. For her 'The lights have been dim and low,' but there is much of brightness in the future.

"Care should be taken, however, not to overwork the main musical theme of any picture. It should not be played too often nor too long. It begins to get on the nerves of the audience if overplayed, and then sympathy is destroyed.

"Music that is foreign to what is before the eyes on the screen detracts from the picture, creates a divided interest in the spectator who doesn't know whether to listen to the music or watch the film. Hence he does neither. He gets peevish instead. The music should unconsciously blend with the scenes so that the audience will naturally and easily swing into the atmosphere of each.

Jane and Katherine Lee at the consol of a Robert-Morton

"Nowhere in 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' is there a demand for highly dramatic or tragic music. Take, for instance, the scene where Dick, the bootblack is introduced. It is true that Dick is unfortunate; that he is in hard luck, and there is a certain degree of the tragic in his circumstances. But he is brought into the picture only as a medium through which the little Lord may show his bigness of heart and generous nature, and to later create a touch of comedy. So there we play "Sylvan Sketches," a collection of light, rather fantastic, Italian folk songs.

"Again in the case of Mary, the apple-woman. Poverty and ill-fortune ride on her shoulders like a chip on a wave. At heart she's full of fun and Irish gaiety, rollicking and good-natured. So when she comes into the picture we play 'The Shamrock,' a group of rollicking, shoulder-shaking Irish folk songs. Only we switch it into a waltz tempo, to make it a little gayer.

"Take another case, where the Earl's son falls with his horse and is killed. There is actual tragedy, a dramatic scene. But it is certain that there wasn't any orchestra on the spot to catch the atmosphere. So we simply pause for the scene; the orchestra is silent, and the effect on the audience is far greater than if there were an accompaniment of clashing cymbals and heavy drumbeats.

"In 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' there is that scene where Cedric goes into his mother after he has been in a rough-and-tumble fight in the street with the school bully. Dearest asks if he has been fighting, and Cedric answers, 'He did all the fighting.' During the fight scene and the meeting of Dearest and Cedric we play 'The Busy Bee.' This is just a light, rattling, fantastic air, to be played as fast as the musicians can play it. The scene doesn't call for cymbals and smashing drums; but it does call for lots of pep and action. There's nothir tragic or dramatic in a school-boy fight. The why make a battle scene of it with martial airs

"The second movement of the Fifth Sym phony of Schubert is used when Dearest an Cedric arrive at Dorincourt castle. Here is a opportunity for real music. It should not b lost, especially when the music is in keepin with the almost regal atmosphere of the castl as compared to the scenes of Ninth avenue, Ne York City.

"When the little Lord begins his life in th castle we use 'Petite Suite Orchestra No. 1. This is a light, yet stately and dignified march There is no coronation pomp or anything of tha sort, yet there is a distinct change in modes of living, and this light but stately air is in keeping with the castle atmosphere.

"The news from New York that Cedric may not be the real heir to the earldom is serious. It hits aged Earl and all about the castle, a hard blow. It may be true. It must be investigated. It is a tense time, but there is no highly dramatic atmosphere for the Earl and his associates do not seriously believe the story; they are sure in their own hearts that Cedric is the real heir. So there we give a serious, but not dramatic, melody. Fillipucci's 'Adoration' is used when Cedric and the Earl bid good-bye to each other. The reason is found in the title.

"When the real little Fauntleroy beats up the pretender in the castle corridor we cull from 'Novelleten,' by Coleridge Taylor, which gives us light, but slightly dramatic song music. We draw the audience into the real atmosphere when the Earl and the Adventuress are together, and when she is being exposed by taking bits from 'Inspiration,' a temperamental theme more or less fitted to the adventuress type.

"And so it goes through all the scenes, fitting the music so that the atmosphere of time, place and emotion is sent forth to the audience. The theme itself: 'In the Gloaming,' typifies simplicity and sacrifice. Anything in the nature of a grand aria would smother the pathos and sentiment.

"And so it goes. Music can make or mar any picture. For instance, in the case of a light, frothy comedy picture, we play to the audience, and not to the picture; any music that will please and that is light and frivolous. Anything else would detract from the screen views.

Mr. Edouarde went on to say that he liked to have from four to six days in which to work out a score for a film of the magnitude of "Little Lord Fauntleroy." He has a musical library of nearly 50,000 pieces, perfectly indexed so that he can find any piece of music at a moment's notice.

Nikisch Coming Here

Arthur Nikisch, probably the most famous of orchestral conductors of today, has just signed a contract for an American tour. Mr. Nikisch will appear in the United States during the months of March and April, 1923.

Mr. Nikisch was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for several seasons. Recently he has been leader of the Berlin Philharmonic and of the Leipsic Gewandhaus concerts.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

" No Parking "

(Christie Comedy-Educational)

THE worries of "home hunting" are exposed here in this sparkling Christie comedy which details the troubles in searching for suburban real estate. The author has struck off an idea that will be recognized as genuinely real, and he has capitalized the humor engendered from the possibilities of selling a prospective owner a home. Neal Burns and Helen Darling as husband and wife are the parents of a tiny youngster who is constantly exploring the world on his own behalf. Unable to get into a hotel because of the rule forbidding babies and dogs, they buy a lot and decide to build a bungalow. It is out on some suburban property. And the house is of the quick portable kind. When it is completed the baby is missing.

The dog locates the scent and the infant is buried under the floor. So they tear the house down to collect the baby. When they get it up again, a real estate agent informs them they are on the wrong spot. So they put a quartette of auto wheels under it and pilot it through the streets. This is a novel stunt. They arrive at their new lot and discover that they have to possess a building permit. So the house is torn down again. But what of the baby? Well, he has made some mud pies nearby from a spouting oil stream. Oil. Oil. The discomforts of finding a home are compensated for in this new streak of fortune. The picture carries a deal of ingenuity and never once has to rely upon padding or incident. It tells a complete story—one full of invention and reality.—Length, 2 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

" Cleaned and Dry "

(Warner Comedy—Featuring Monty Banks—Federated)

IN this Monty Banks, the driver of a delivery wagon for a cleaning and dyeing establishment, romps with a Ford and gets himself into many ridiculous scrapes. Incidentally he goes to deliver a golf suit in a palatial home, is about to trespass on the velvet lawn, when, in the distance, he spies the daughter of the house playing golf. Her companion is a crook, who is looking at her money as well as her pretty face. She asks Monty to join them, and there is a lengthy sequence of antics with golf clubs.

Thereafter Monty is invited to her "coming out party" and attempts to imitate other male guests, who are more used to dress clothes than the delivery boy. One or two good exterior scenes. Endeavoring to force low comedy, logic has been completely ignored, which tends to make the short subject silly. However, it may entertain some who are intent upon the purpose of being made to laugh. Two reels. Direction Jack Warner—LILLIAN R. GALE.

" Ice-Box Pirates "

(Star Comedy-Universal)

THAT an ice-man has unusual opportunity to enrich himself at the expense of the landlord is proven in this Universal comedy. It is surprising that the ice-box is left with its eatables and drinkables when one considers that the ice-man has easy access to it. In the comedy Cliff Bowes and Rex de Rosselli are collecting liquor for the annual picnic. Their wagon is nearly filled and to make it complete they attempt to rob a certain refrigerator of its home-brew. However, a stern defender, with shot-gun in hand, is on the job. But he loses just the same. The remainder of the comedy presents a few bathing girls disporting about the beach with a rescue act as the conclusion. It is fair comedy—good for some laughs, and since it does not pretend to be anything extensive is quite certain to please. Length One Reel. —Lawrence Reid.

" There's No Place Like Home "

(Screen Snapshots-Federated)

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS No. 14 is one that will be of interest to two classes of motion picture goers, those interested in seeing the stars they read so much about in more or less intimate views, and again those who do not believe all they read in damaging publicity, and by these snapshots are privileged to see the homes and home life of many picture stars.

Included in actual scenes of home life are Wallace Reid, his wife Dorothy Davenport and "kiddie," "Billy Reid." Lester Cuneo, a neighbor, who "drops in" their swimming pool.

Elsie Ferguson, in private life, is a farmerette. She proves it.

Harry Carey prefers his California ranch to a Fifth avenue mansion.

The boon companion of Mary MacLaren is her mother. They are shown spending a "gay" evening, with a book.

Did you know Dick Barthelmess did not always play "make hay," in pictures? He is caught driving a lawn mower for diversion.

The Fairbanks are acknowledged home lovers. They claim the world offers nothing better.

Hobart Bosworth seeks his pleasure in books, paintings and the like—with a few prize guns for hunting purposes.

A new star, Baby Peggy Jeon, already manifests a preference for home entertainment.

When Constance Talmadge settles down for a "reading spell," it takes all the professional persuasion of Norma to induce Connie to join her in some "home made exercises."

One of the greatest home protectors is "Pal," the human-minded dog belonging to Harry Lucenay.

Bessie Love "loves" making the house tidy more than making a "killing" at a ball.

All in all, these film folk live the life the "doctor orders" when the tired wall street magnate suffers with insomnia.—LILLIAN R. GALE.

" Square Deal Cyclone "

(Cyclone Smith Series of Western Dramas —Universal)

THIS is a western of an honest gambler who gets religion and through his forceful personality enables the sky pilot to settle in the community and reform the settlers. Eddie Polo, who is portraying the vivid character of Cyclone Smith, puts plenty of spirit into the role. It is a fighting, smashing two-reeler with enough action to please the biggest "leatherneck" who ever lived. Cyclone sees the crowd having fun with a traveling evangelist and compels them to fork over their winnings. He cleans up the roost and turns over the saloon to the pastor. There is some hard riding and quick shooting and Cyclone comes through the winner. Yes, he falls in love with the sky pilot's daughter. The western is characteristic of a glorious period in the country beyond the Rockies. You will like it and so will your patrons.—Length 2 Reels.—Lawrence Reid.

" White Eagle "

(Fifteen Episode Serial-Pathe)

RUTH ROLAND has heard the call of the serial again. This star is carrying on as usual and is easily ahead of the field in regard to her sex. There is no rival who may be compared to her at present. She no sooner rides, and escapes, and executes miraculous stunts in one serial, than she accepts the duties attached to its successor. Ruth Roland, seemingly, does not believe in vacations. Perhaps that's why she is constantly in the public eye. The patrons don't have time to forget her. One's screen memory is short at best.

Now the personable star is here in her latest serial, which is as good as anything in which she has heretofore appeared. It carries all the action one demands, plenty of suspense, plenty of novelty, plenty of photographic appeal, and plenty of stunts and incident to please even the spectator who diets on RAW MEAT. Listen, folks. It concerns a girl reared among the cliff-dwelling Indians until she approaches young womanhood. Tattooed on her hand is a peculiar design which symbolizes that she is the high priestess of the tribe. She has become a product of civilization when the opening episode is introduced. And the cunning Indians cunningly led by a white man scheme and plot to possess her for mercenary reasons. She is kidnapped in thrilling fashion and rescued in a scene which is startlingly vivid. Earle Metcalfe, who assumes the burdens of the rescuing hero, wins applause for his courage here.

The picture indicates from its early episodes that it is going to send them away completely satisfied. There are thrills in abundance. The exteriors are highly picturesque, and the plot and incident flow along building novel surprises, a line of snappy suspense, and plenty of melodramatic fire works. Most every serial has its exploitation possibilities. This more than others on account of the snappy title, the Indian atmosphere, etc. W. S. Van Dyke, the director, has started the story off with a bang. He has shown painstaking care for detail, the sets being reproductions of the pueblos of the Arizona Indians. Are you all set? Let's go! —LAURENCE REID.

" As Old as the Hills "

(Bruce Scenic—One Reel—Released by Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

A GOODLY number of the ruins of ancient castles, forts and abbeys of England, Wales and Switzerland are presented for inspection by Mr. Bruce in this scenic. These impress the audience very vividly with the antiquity of European art and civilization as compared with that of America. Only the walls of many of the ruins remain. The roofing and the interiors have fallen a prey to the ravages of rain and fog and wind. Yet those portions which have survived, by their strength and massiveness, illustrate the virility and grandeur of the mediaeval civilization. In all, the reel is of goodly interest.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"CONCEIT"
(Selznick)

Exquisite Backgrounds and Likely Story Spell Entertainment

A STORY of characters recognizably real, told against the most impressive backgrounds ever collected from the Canadian Rockies, makes this picture stand out as something really conspicuous. The title may not mean much in the long run, and its delineation precludes any possibility of suspense in understanding the theme. It is all about the making of a man—a man who in this case might be called one of Fortune's darlings. Blessed with wealth, but given to boasting, he proves a physical and moral coward until brought up sharp with realities.

He is a social lion whose pet hobby is the detailing of his ability to kill bears. He takes a large group of parasites to his hunting lodge in the Canadian Northwest, and their object is to talk behind his back and ridicule him. Unsuccessful in his attempt to kill a bear he is determined to remain. He is alone far up in the mountains and the eloquent appeal of these backgrounds stimulates one into an appreciation for nature's handiwork. You somehow feel that this grandeur of scenery is going to mould his character. The coward and boaster becomes lost, but succeeds in shooting a bear. A group of primitive people come into his life, but when he urges the wild mountain girl to accompany him back to civilization her guardian steps between them and taunts him on his cowardice. He goes back a beaten man—a man who is not aroused until he is provoked into defending himself by sheer muscular strength. This transition is a trifle too abrupt to appear entirely convincing. But it serves the purpose of the plot.

Returning to the vast open spaces he fights to protect the honor of the girl. And the natives who sneered at him are forced to respect him. These characters are made really convincing. Through the agency of the scenario writer, Edward Montagne, and the director, Burton George, they are made to appear like every-day people and never like stage puppets. The picture should be booked for its scenery if for no other reason than it unfolds new vistas. The Lake Louise and Banff regions are revealed in all their impressive grandeur. There are some thrills in the drama. The camera catches some real bears and a hefty fight between the hero and a trapper whose idea of law is based upon the right of possession.—Wm. B. Davidson, Charles Gerrard, Hedda Hopper, Betty Hilburn and Maurice Costella round out a cast that has been chosen for its adaptability for the correct interpretation.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A smashing, crashing picture of elemental nature and the elements that are continually at strife in a man's nature is "Conceit," the Selznick special which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. In this picture is recorded the battle of a man to find himself—to develop his character. Given to boasting—a man who might be called fortune's darling—so blessed is he with a good physique and plenty of wealth, yet so cringing that he might be called a weakling—this hero is recognized as an everyday character. What would we do in his circumstances?

The answer is found in five reels of compelling drama which takes the spectator to the impressive backgrounds of British Columbia—up in the region surrounding Banff—that picturesque spot in the great northwest. It is a picture acted with eloquent persuasion by Wm. B. Davidson, Hedda Hopper, Charles Gerard, Betty Hilburn and Maurice Costello.

PROGRAM READER

An invigorating picture of the great outdoors through which an interesting plot unfolds itself is "Conceit," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a Selznick Special.. The magnificent appeal of the scenery which has been collected from these regions in which Banff is located—high up in the Canadian Rockies is stimulating—backgrounds which are as enchanting as they are picturesque. The story is one that finds a parallel in everyday life—the story of a physical and moral coward who finds his character through being compelled to face facts. In the cast are assembled a cast of competent players.

SUGGESTIONS

After you get through informing your patrons of the magnificent appeal of the backgrounds which compose this feature you can feature the plot as one that finds it parellell in everyday life. Bring forth that the scenery has never been surpassed—that most of the exteriors have been taken hugh up in the Canadian Rockies—in the region surrounding Banff, the tourist resort. Mention that the plot is a compelling drama of character development. Mention the cast which includes Maurice Costello, Hedda Hopper, Wm. B. Davidson and Charles Gerard—all competent players. The title is a catchy one and should come in for some snappy exploitation.

He thought himself superior until brought in contact with the primitive elements of man and the primitive elements of nature. See "Conceit."

CATCH LINES

See the picturesque drama, "Conceit"—a vivid document of the Canadian Northwest.

"GET-RICH-QUICK WALLINGFORD"
(Cosmopolitan-Paramount)

This Is Going to Please Them

DON'T let anyone tell you that the adaptation of George M. Cohan's play, founded upon the famous Wallingford stories is not going to please them. There have been few sparkling lies which carried the broadsides of humor exposed here. The colorful figure of Wallingford is genuinely American in character, and his frenzied financial schemes are certain to be appreciated everywhere. That the picture is an exceptionally faithful adaptation of the play does not matter. Who among the patrons cares—just so long as there is unfolded an interesting plot, clever characterization, and plenty of incident and humor. The point is—the story proceeds to acquaint us with the schemes of the colossal fraud, Wallingford, and his less colorful partner, "Blackie" Daw, in a manner which commands constant attention.

If you don't follow the picture closely you are apt to miss some quaint touch of humor—some character sketch provocative of real laughter. Take for instance the group picture of the directors of the company incorporated by the irrepressible Wallingford. Frank Borzage will probably be asked where he dug up such picturesque types. They sit there like the visiting firemen—one of the natives being compelled to have a head adjustor attached to keep him in focus. Wallingford rides up to the hotel in the only carriage. He comes to fleece them but his scheme turns out to enrich him and his associates. No one penetrates his identity—that he is a confidence man—except the stenographer. She appeals to him so romantically that he decides to square himself. He had intended to make a quick getaway but stays on and the Covered Carpet Tack proves a great invention. A perfect boob is sent out on the road, and he returns with thousands of orders. The two sharps have no alternative but to cash in on their success.

The picture is exceptionally well constructed, there being the right emphasis on every scene to bring it out in bold relief. The rustic settings, the figures, the capable acting, the rich humor penetrating through the scenes and subtitles—these are brought forth with splendid appeal. The picture is certain to get over. It carries contrast and romance and there is plenty of rare humor and Main Street touches to embroider it with homespun detail. Sam Hardy is clever enough comedian to grasp every impulse that entered the shrewd head of Wallingford. Norman Kerry plays "Blackie" Daw and makes of it a sketch in the background. Doris Kenyon is the attractive heroine. We'll say it is snappy and filled with bright touches.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is said to be one of the screen treats of the current season is "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," a picturization of George M. Cohan's famous play, which will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. This is said to be a delightful comedy, directed by Frank Borzage, who made "Humoresque," and how Wallingford and his buncombe associate, "Blackie" Daw, made a fortune for themselves and the people of the town of Battlesburg. It is an enthralling story well adapted to the screen. The details of the two sharpers' schemes present enough complications to make the story a series of laughs from start to finish. The spectator is certain to be delighted with the innocence and at the same time the hospitality of these people of Battlesburg.

PROGRAM READER

Ever hear of J. Rufus Wallingford, famous confidence man? Of course you have. He has made fiction history. He has shown us all how to make money—that is, if one wants to succeed by one's wits. No matter whether you are acquainted with him or not, he is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— and you will have a chance to see him in person in "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford." He will introduce you to his associate in crime, "Blackie" Daw. Come and see the comedy hit of the year, adapted from George M. Cohan's famous play, which in turn was based on the Wallingford stories which appeared some years ag

SUGGESTIONS

This adaptation of a well-known play needs little exploitation to put it over. In the first place nearly everyone has read the famous stories which appeared in the popular magazines some years ago. So play up that the picture is made from these stories which formed the idea for Cohan's play. Mention should be made that Frank Borzage, the director of "Humoresque," is the director here. Play up that a distinguished cast interprets the offering. Bill it as a hilarious comedy, clean and invigorating. If the cast is known to your crowd, mention their names. Put on an all-comedy bill for the week.

"ALL FOR A WOMAN"
(First National)

Impressive Achievement—Well Acted and Staged

THE patrons who see "All for a Woman" will undoubtedly compare it with "Deception" and "Passion," and probably will remark to themselves that the picture is not so spectacular in its appeal. When they discover that it concerns the French Revolution they may become disappointed to see that this stirring period is presented as episodic to the main theme—the conflict between Robespierre and Danton for power. These central figures dominate every scene, but so vitally are they a part of the dramatic canvas that, after all, the episodes given up to pillage and plunder with thousands of people storming the streets in their terrifying crusade will not be missed if they respond to the sweeping conflict which endured until Robespierre, in his moment of triumph, sent Danton to the guillotine.

You catch an intimate view of these central figures and they are made compelling through the sheer artistry of the players, Emil Jennings as Danton, and Werner Kraus as Robespierre. The first-mentioned lives up to the fine testimonials uttered in his behalf for his Henry VIII, and the latter gives another of his cameo performances—the first being his Dr. Caligari. Danton is the friend of the people. He would bring peace and harmony to a distressed people. He would do away with the guillotine as an instrument of torture. Not so Robespierre. This relentless, stern figure would destroy his enemies and the friends of his enemies. He would maintain the guillotine. And he dreams for more power. The picture builds dramatically with ever-increasing suspense, the background of the Revolution although being detached, lending fitting atmosphere to the tragic symphony.

Danton frolics and lives to regret that he so misjudged the character of his enemy. He is the friend of the people but they are hungry, and Robespierre is shrewd enough to feed them. Thus they forget the man who is lifting them from the depths. He calmly walks to the guillotine and shouts: "Save the rope for Robespierre, and show my head to the people!" Perhaps history might have been obeyed to better effect if the cruel ruler had been exterminated. That he is to perish is well indicated. The direction is capable in realizing the key of tragedy. The director's intimate scenes suggest a reflection of Lubitsch, and the romantic scenes are highly suggestive of the search for pleasure in a world bowed down with terror. The players, customary with German ideas, allow a too heavy make-up, but they never forget that they are pantomimists. Kraus and Jennings are superb in their respective roles. The former is made up in an uncanny manner as if to suggest the man of ice. He succeeds wonderfully. There is a wealth of subtitles, and these become too descriptive at times. Yet a historical drama needs them to emphasize the episodes.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A highly spectacular achievement in motion picture drama is offered in "All For a Woman," which has been described as a European sensation. This production which features Emil Jannings, who will be remembered for his artistic interpretation of Henry VIII in "Deception," and a corps of clever assistants, including Werner Kraus, whose performance in "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," was so exceptionally fine, will be presented at the ———— theatre next ————. It offers historical appeal through its reproduction of those stirring days of the French Revolution at the time when Robespierre controlled the destinies of the Gallic race. It presents the feud between Robespierre and Danton, the latter misusing his power through the call of pleasure, the former determined to rule through bloodshed. The tragic feud sweeps forward and engulfs Danton. But his prophecy concerning a tragic finish to the stern and unyielding Robespierre is indicated as he goes to the guillotine. The picture s remarkably well acted and staged.

PROGRAM READER

A magnificent spectacular drama based upon the French Revolution—that stirring period which founded a great republic—will be presented at the ———— theatre next ———— in "All For a Woman." This European sensation unfolds a vivid page from history. It presents the tragic feud between Danton and Robespierre—the two figures who held sway for a brief hour, the former's power being usurped by the latter. Danton believed in peace and harmony—Robespierre in hate and bloodshed. And a woman led to Danton's downfall. It is a compelling drama, wonderfully acted by a cast of exceptional ability—a cast that includes Emil Jannings, and staged with a fidelity for the facts of history.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a big picture based upon the tragic feud and the consequences that occurred immediately after the Reign of Terror of the French Revolution. You can arouse a deal of comment and excite your patrons into patronizing the film. Tell them that the gifted player, Emil Jannings of "Deception" fame, is in the picture and that he is surrounded by the cleverest players in Europe. For a prologue you can stage an ensemble composed of figures attired in the costumes of the period, the idea suggesting the outbreak of the Revolution. Your orchestra can cooperate in lending atmosphere by interpreting the selection "Robespierre" by Litolff. Play it up big.

"SCHOOL DAYS"
(Harry Rapf-Warner Bros.)

Gem of a Picture; Sure-fire Box-Office Bet

LIKE the men who made a pathway to the door of the inventor of the mouse trap, exhibitors are certain to make a stampede in booking this gem of a picture. Once they show its audiences are certain to declare it one of the most appealing films ever made. It carries every quality for success. Juvenile interest is its predominant virtue, and the fact that Wesley Barry is the youthful guide who invites spectators on a sentimental journey to the days when "readin' and writin' and 'rithmetic were taught to the rule of the hickory stick," and so overwhelming is the appeal that one is sure to be transported.

Really "School Days" belongs to the class of better pictures. It not only tells its human little story, but there is much of spiritual uplift in its message for the young of the land. The tugs at the heart are finely balanced with the twinkles for the eye. Certainly the director, William Nigh, must feel highly elated over the achievement. He has saturated his story with intimate detail, every touch ringing true—every detail sparkling with humor and pathos that form a part of everyday life. There is not so much plot to the story. Rather does it score for its intimate slice of youth—revealed through charming and highly interesting episodes. Wesley Barry has already made a name for himself. But here he is going to impress many audiences with the fact that he is the most precocious youngster on the screen To watch him cutting up pranks in the little school house—to watch him fishing or taking the advice of some Simple Simon not to collect an education—to watch him attempting to outwit his guaradian—to follow him leaving for the city, the plan of his uncle being to mould character and teach him to appreciate the simple things of life—to follow him bidding goodby to his faithful dog, and watch the lovable pet running after the train—these are quaint little snatches which are going to sink deep into the heart. All of these slices of life are richly appealing. There is much similarity between this picture and Ray's study of boyhood —"The Old Swimmin' Hole." The freckled-faced Wesley in his quaint clothes, wearing a million-dollar smile—his appearance alone will kindle the admiration of audiences everywhere. It is understood that the picture is being trimmed of some superfluous detail. It could easily spare some of its melodramatic moments which composed the final scenes. This will give it coherence and compactness. The city sequences are rich when the contrasts are pointed between the forlorn youngster who dresses like a Broadway "bookie" and the little children of the rich. The rustic scenes are gems of photography—the subtitles, human and expressive. And what exploitation possibilities it possesses! Get this one quick. It means dollars for you and rich entertainment for your patrons.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"School Days, Dear Old Golden Rule Days." That was a song—a very popular one which swept the country a few years ago. The title has suggested a picture which carries a tremendous appeal—an appeal to the heart and the soul. Written by William Nigh and Walter De Leon and directed by the former, the picture takes one on a journey to the years of yesterday. Who is the guide? Wesley Barry, the precocious youngster whose adaptability for the part almost makes one believe that he might have been the inspiration for the song.

It is a picture charged with humanity—one filled with homespun touches. It shows the making of a youth—a boy inclined to delicious mischief, but who develops character by being brought up sharp with realities. He goes to the city and becomes disillusioned with its artificial exteriors. And he returns to the country—the wholesome boy again. A splendid picture with a splendid cast. "School Days" will be at the ———— next ————.

PROGRAM READER

Do you remember that lovable song of a few years ago entitled "School Days?" Of course you do. How could you forget it? Well, it comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a motion picture. This splendid offering is going to take you on a sentimental journey—back to the old district school, back to the old farm—back to the hey-day of your youth. It is a picture filled with the joy of youth, the delight of mischievous pranks and is rich in humor and sentiment. Wesley Barry is the star. Can you possibly think of any player more adaptable for the role of the little hero? Come and be royally entertained. Come and forget the worries of the day and be a youth again.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture suggests all kinds of exploitation. First you have the original song which can be put over with your music dealer. You can arrange for a prologue suggestive of a school-room—the set taking the entire stage. There can be rows of desks with a teacher presiding at the desk back-stage. Each pupil can recite something or sing a song, and there are plenty of juvenile songs on the market to exploit. This idea is practical and entirely appropriate. Bill it as a rich, humorous and appealing story of youth—youth growing up back on the farm, youth going to the district school. Feature Wesley Barry. Use circus exploitation if you think the picture demands it. Any freckle-faced boy can be used for a number of novel stunts.

"THE RIGHT THAT FAILED"
(Metro)

Popular Post Story Developed Along Broad Comedy Angles

J. P. MARQUAND'S S. E. P. story, "The Right That Failed," in picture form becomes farce comedy—so broad that at times it borders on burlesque. The direction pays little attention to anything, except developing the plot and providing entertainment of a not too subtle sort, in the process.

Bert Lytell is cast as a typical pug who, after winning a fight, a round and a half of which is shown, goes to a summer resort near New York there to woo and win a daughter of the rich. The character as portrayed while distinctive lacks the likeable qualities that a reader of the story would visualize and in consequence the culmination of the romance is apt to jar somewhat. No chance to pull a laugh is missed, either in the characterizations or in the titling. Whether or not the effort is successful depends on the point of view. Certain audiences are sure to find the offering uproariously funny; others will probably be only mildly amused.

In support of the star is a good cast. Virginia Valli is Mr. Lytell's leading woman, but she doesn't have much to do. De Witt Jennings is cast in a role that does not fit him any too well, his forte being heavies rather than genteel business men. Bull Montana gets away with another good bit, for which he is a type, and a most finished performance is given by Max Davidson as a Hebrew, by the strange but possible name of "Michael Callahan."

For those who have never read the story, the picture ought to slide by without raising a storm of protest, but the writer can not help but feel that much has been missed in choosing to make a broad comedy from a story that had not only a real plot but a fine thought behind it. The direction and continuity are good unless one may find fault with what might be called a lack of vision.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "The Right That Failed," founded upon J. P. Marquard's Saturday Evening Post story of the same name, adapted by Lenore Coffee, directed by Bayard Veiller and starring Bert Lytell. The popular Metro star has a vehicle here which well expresses his talent and personality. It may be said that it affords him as ideal a role as he has ever had. The picture presents an interesting comedy idea with the star enacting the part of a "young white hope." He is a pugilist.

He suffered an injury to his hand in putting "The Kid" to sleep, which gave him time to pay attention to social duties. Eager to renew his acquaintance with a society girl whom he had rescued from the arm of the law, he goes to a health resort. Meanwhile he had brushed up in deportment. Johnny, our hero, gets in bad when certain people attempt to paint him in wrong colors. But he comes up smiling. The picture offers a deal of originality, carries plenty of sparkle and is well acted by the star and a cast that includes Virginia Valli and DeWitt Jennings.

PROGRAM READER

A highly original and entertaining story is "The Right That Failed," adapted from a popular magazine contribution to provide a picture for Bert Lytell. The popular Metro star enacts the part of a pugilist here—a young man who is forced to use his fists for a living. He may be in a profession which has no social angles related to it, but at the same time this idea does not prevent him from worshipping a society bud. Does he fall in love? Does he entertain the idea that she might not respond to his advances owing to the fact that he is a prize-fighter? We are not going to answer you. This you must find out for yourself. It is a comedy-drama charged with humorous touches and sparkling with life. At the ———— next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a title that is going to wake them up. It is a take-off on Kipling. After you have put out some snappy stuff advertising the title, then concentrate upon the star stating that he is appearing in a new type of role—that of a pugilist. Make mention that the picture is adapted from a well known story which appeared in a popular magazine. Bring forth that the picture is snappy comedy-drama—which carries plenty of humor, romance and incident. A prologue can feature some comedy song put over with plenty of spirit. Play up the other Lytell pictures mentioning that the star is always striving for original roles and that he has one here.

CATCH LINES

See Bert Lytell in "The Right That Failed." A picture of humor and novelty. A picture of romance and sentiment. You will laugh.

A story of a picturesque pugilist.

See Bert Lytelli in the comedy hit of the season.

What is the right that failed?

Carpentier had a right that failed. What about Bert Lytell?

"STRANGER THAN FICTION"
(First National)

Novel "Film Within a Film" Picture

IN this Katherine MacDonald feature, the producers have tried to fool us. They don't quite succeed, and because they fail, the picture proves entertaining. This is not as paradoxical as it might seem. "'Stranger Than Fiction" is one of those "story within a story productions," or more strictly speaking, "a picture within a picture." The surprise is held for the end, when it is revealed that the melodrama which comprises a large part of the footage is simply the work of the heroine, an amateur movie producer. This will not be a shock to any audience, and therefore they will take the hectic action; the wild underworld mystery, in the correct spirit—as mild satire.

"Stranger than Fiction" takes occasion to poke some fun and the insatiable public desire for punch, action, and theatrical thrills in their motion picture fare. And the feature gives the public all of these elements and then good-naturedly satirizes themselves for so doing. Therefore the picture will have an average appeal, for it has an average underworld story, and in addition the saving grace of Katherine MacDonald's beauty. There is also Wesley Barry in a part well suited for him.

The picture opens with the scene of the screening of an amateur photoplay version of "Carmen." There is a lot of fun here, for it is simply a burlesque of an amateur production, with all its prevelant flaws. Ralph Spencer's titles carry the fun along. Then comes the sudden switch to melodrama. The hostess orders that her latest photoplay, "Stranger Than Fiction" be screened, and suddenly the lights go out. When quiet returns many valuable jewels are missing and "the Black Heart," a master mind of the underworld, has left his mark of mystery to show that the deed was his, and to give the police a clew. Then follows an underworld melodrama, with sliding doors and reformed crooks, and a shrewd master criminal, and other familiar characters and elements which go to make up every good crook "meller." It ends with a number of thrilling escapes of the star and Wesley Barry, and for a final punch a very well executed aeroplane stunt. Then we have the hostess explaining to her guests that this is her idea of what the screen public wants. It was all a motion picture. Most audiences realize that it could not have been anything else and will appreciate the satire.

The picture is well acted and carefully directed by J. A. Barry.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Diane Drexel.....Katherine MacDonald
Dick Mason.....David Winter
Freckles.....Wesley Barry

Directed by J. A. Barry.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

For its feature attraction on ———— the ———— theatre announces "Stranger Than Fiction," an unusual story of the underworld, featuring one of the most beautiful actresses of the screen, Katherine MacDonald. Miss MacDonald plays the part of a rich society girl whose house is mysteriously robbed on the evening of an entertainment. In helping the poor in the underworld, she is luckily cast into the life of the "Black Heart," the leader of the underworld gang, and in order to secure his arrest, she poses as a girl of the slums.

The story never lets up in suspense or interest and has been especially well photographed. In the cast are Wesley Barry, the boy star who has himself been featured in many productions, David Winter, Wade Boteler and Jean Dumont. The direction was in the hands of J. A. Barry, and the story is adapted from the work of Charles Richman and Albert S. LeVino.

"Stranger Than Fiction" will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————. For those who like a mystery drama, well acted, and with excitement enough to keep them tense until the final moment, no better picture could be offered.

PROGRAM READER

Coming to the ———— theatre on ———— is "Stranger Than Fiction," a strong mystery story, starring beautiful Katherine MacDonald. This production is regarded as one of the most powerful "crook" stories to reach the screen in considerable time, and in addition it combines a pretty romance and touches of humor supplied by the popular boy star, Wesley Barry. "Stranger Than Fiction" is also one of those pictures which will fool all the wiseacres. It takes a lot to give the public the "surprise ending" they are continually seeking, but "Stranger Than Fiction" manages to do it.

Katherine MacDonald, who is conceded to be one of the most beautiful motion picture stars in America, is supported by a capable cast including David Winter and the inimitable Wesley ("Freckles") Barry. The story is from the work of Charles Richman and Albert S. LeVino. J. A. Barry directed.

SUGGESTIONS

You can bill this as a strong "crook" story and at the same time promise your patrons a mild satire on the motion picture industry. Tell them it will fool them just as O. Henry's stories fooled them. And yet assure them that they will see some exciting melodrama. The story should be, however, subordinated to the lavish display of Katherine MacDonald's name and her portrait. She is recognized as one of the most beautiful screen players and has quite a following. Wesley Barry should share honors with her in your exploitation. Catch lines are suggested by the title and also some good lines for teaser campaigns.

CATCH LINES

One of the most unusual pictures of the year—starring beautiful Katherine MacDonald. A production that combines swiftest melodrama with the keenest satire.

"JACKIE"
(Fox)

Light Story Suitable for Star

THE director who books the Shirley Mason pictures is certainly aware by this time what to expect from her. They must realize that not being an emotional actress that her forte is light comedy based upon youthful sentiment and romance tinged with appealing moments of pathos and heart interest. "Jackie" is cut from the same pattern as some previous studies which featured the star. There is a place for the Shirley Mason pictures for since they don't pretend to be anything extraordinary in plot and incident, the spectator may attend them feeling that no tax is placed upon his resources to discover the why and wherefore of each scene.

"Jackie" may rightly be called an effective little study of a girl who awakens sympathy through being buffeted about in a man-made world. She is again the little orphan equipped with ambitions to be an artist. It is a story of love and sentiment, disillusionment and newfound happiness. The intimate touches provided by the director help a great deal in making it appealing. He has capitalized the star's talent for dancing. And her ability in this direction is going to surprise a lot of people. Here she is a Russian dancer connected with a cheap road troupe. Unwilling to accept the advances of a lustful theatrical manager she runs away. But before she is brought up sharp with realities, a wealthy young American, whose acquaintances she has made previously, intercedes and rescues her in a thoroughly Prince Charming fashion.

There is not much to the plot but the average audience will be unmindful of its obviousness, so responsive will they be toward the charm and appeal of the heroine. The director has emphasized the theatrical manager too harshly. He is too conventional. Otherwise the characters seem real. The little heroine succeeds through the aid offered by the hero. Her ambitions are realized. Miss Mason possesses enough selfish personality to put such a story over. No one can play the waif who smiles in the face of adversity quite as appealingly as the star. It is a good little bet—this picture. It contains enough sure-fire qualities to make it effective with everyone blessed with a little sentiment—a virtue which everyone possesses to some degree. The romance keeps pace with the other elements of the story. Length, 5 reels.. Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Jackie	Shirley Mason

Scenario by Dorothy Yost.
Directed by Jack Ford.
Photographed by George Schneiderman.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A typical Shirley Mason picture will be presented at the ———— theatre next ———— in "Jackie," written by Countess Barcynska, adapted by Dorothy Yost and directed by Jack Ford. It permits the dainty Fox star to show her talents as a disciple of Terpsichore. Miss Mason reveals that she is a gifted dancer in this story of love and sentiment, disillusionment and newfound happiness. It is a story which offers considerable appeal through a sympathetic characterization and the intimate touches provided by the director—which gives the star ample opportunity to flash her youth, beauty and talent.

She plays the part of a Russian dancer who is connected with a cheap show troupe. Unwilling to stand the abuse of the manager she escapes to London. In the English city she encounters an old acquaintance. This young man befriends her and it is his object to punish the theatrical manager when the latter appears on the scene. The picture is well staged and acted with a deal of authority.

PROGRAM READER

Shirley Mason, the dainty, piquant Fox star is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "Jackie," a picture which entitles her to stardom if for no other reason than it shows her versatility as a dancer. The role which the star assumes is that of a ballet dancer and when Miss Mason gets up on her toes and pirouettes about—well you will have to admit that she might have missed her calling. She is talented enough to be with Pavlowa. So come and see "Jackie." It is a human interest story of a girl who learned how to smile through the shadows. She had a friend who come to the rescue and the romance is bright and wholesome. Remember next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is Shirley Mason as a ballet dancer. So emphasize that this star shows a further talent. There seems to be no end to her accomplishments. Play up the fact that she is an accomplished dancer. Use stills of her. Tell that the story is one which features the heart interest element—that it is the story of a stage girl who was buffeted about by evil influences but always managed to smile and make the best of it. For a prologue—what would be more fitting than to feature some toe or ballet dancer—dancing to Chopin, Chaminade or Schubert? Billit as a delightful little story of romance and sentiment, shadows and sunshine.

CATCH LINES

Did you know that Shirley Mason is an accomplished toe dancer? Come and see this piquant star in "Jackie."

She danced her way into romance and happiness. See Shirley Mason in "Jackie."

See the piquant star, Shirley Mason, in a delightful story of romance and sentiment.

"THE GOLDEN GIFT"
(Metro)

Mother Love Theme Serves for Program Offering

ASIDE from the coincidence so manifest in this picture, "The Golden Gift," is quite certain to be accepted because of its mother love theme and the fact that it contains a good romance, plenty of spark and spirit, and enough incident to please most anyone not searching for improbabilities. A mother love story never fails to get over, the sentiment and pathos identified with it, assuring the idea of favorable response. Will the feature make money for the exhibitor? We are inclined to think it will if he stresses the fact that it contains a sure-fire theme. The author and director have emphasized the heart interest and touched a vein of pathos, but some scenes heavy with coincidence do not always make the plot convincing.

The heroine has been victimized into matrimony by a bigamist. Her husband leaves her which forces her to eke out a living as a dancer in a mining camp saloon. She learns that the father of her child is in a neighboring town, and going there, is surprised to see him killed for playing his romantic game. She leaves the baby in the care of the good padre and goes to cultivate her voice in Italy. Some years later she triumphs in New York as a gifted artiste. One of those who worships at her shrine is the brother of the girl who became entangled in the matrimonial scheme of her husband. This is a noticeable hole in the dramatic cloth, for being a guest at the house, nothing is said of the unpleasant experience. The child has been adopted by this very hero. This is the coincidence which never quite rings true.

The intermediate scenes are filled with romance and incident of a light nature. The denouement brings a reunion of mother and child. And the woman realizes that her art comes second to that of motherhood. The discrepancy in the story concerning the three characters assembled together with no discourse relevant to past, incident does not mar the picture. Indeed it carries sufficient high lights in the shape of well arranged sequences, acting and atmosphere to succeed. Alice Lake gives a uniformly good performance in the leading role. John Bowers does not have much to do as the hero, but he manages to take care of his portrayal with plenty of romantic fervor.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Nita Gordon	Alice Lake

By June Mathis.
Scenario by Florence Hein.
Directed by Maxwell Karger.
Photographed by John Boyle.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

When a woman is blessed with motherhood, that may be said to be the golden gift. Such is the theme of the Metro attraction which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— starring Alice Lake. In this vital story by June Mathis the personable star is afforded a role which enables her to show her talent at its highest expression. She has the role of Nita Gordon, a young woman who gives herself up to matrimony and motherhood and then realizes that her husband is a bigamist. Her trials are so many and so overwhelming that she unwillingly leaves her baby in the care of a good padre to take up an artistic career. In time she becomes famous. Then through an extraordinary chain of events she is united to her child. She suffers, but through her suffering she finds happiness and true love. Miss Lake's cast includes John Bowers, Josef Swickard and Harriet Hammond. Maxwell Karger directed.

PROGRAM READER

An appealing story of the divine love of motherhood—the pangs of separation which a woman feels when deprived of her child—this is "The Golden Gift," which brings Alice Lake to the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. This is an appealing story which carries considerable dramatic strength but which at the same time is made interesting through a vivid characterization, perfect atmosphere and a romance which contains a full share of sentiment. Miss Lake is said to be ideal for the role interpreted here and her support includes the dependable John Bowers and others of equal ability. June Mathis, who adapted "The Four Horsemen," is responsible for the story.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have been putting over the Alice Lake pictures there is no reason why you should not get them in for this latest picture. It is a human little story which contains a wealth of heart interest, a pleasant vein of romance, and dramatic incident, characterization and considerable plot material. You can start a compaign for throwaways asking your crowd what is the Golden Gift. Mention should be made of the fact that John Bowers supports the star. He is a favorite with feminine patrons. Tell them that June Mathis, the adaptor of "The Four Horsemen," is the author of the story. Any vocal number would fit for a prologue.

CATCH LINES

Be sure and see "The Golden Gift"—a picture of the greatest love in the world. See Alice Lake in a memorable portrayal. Supported by John Bowers.

What is the Golden Gift? Is it wealth, health, love or happiness? See Alice Lake in her newest picture.

What is the greatest love? Is it the Golden Gift of motherhood?

LARRY SEMON IN "THE SAWMILL"

This new Larry Semon Comedy is like other Larry Semon Comedies in just two particulars:

1. It was written and directed by Larry Semon.
2. It has hilarious comedy, thrills and production class.

In all other respects it is different.

It was filmed in the inaccessible Lake Hume region of California. Larry has a new leading woman. He introduces a new type of comedy role—he appears as a lumberjack. The lumberjack has been seen on stage and screen in dramatic action. But never before in a comedy.

Audiences are waiting for this comedy, for they have read about it in the newspapers. Thousands of front pages announced, several weeks ago, that Larry Semon and his company stopped work on their new comedy, "The Sawmill," to assist in fighting the biggest forest fire in California for twenty years.

Now Helping to Lengthen the Line Before the Box-Office:

"FOREVER" is a two-dollar show.

For eight weeks it played to capacity at the Criterion on Broadway, with all seats reserved, at two-dollar top.

Its fame has already spread to every corner of the United States. Every man and woman in the country is looking forward to the time when he can see this production which marks the ultimate in beauty and thrill and heart interest.

The critics have unanimously said that it is Mr. Fitzmaurice's best production, and the best work ever done by Miss Ferguson and Mr. Reid.

The exhibitors who show it will not only break records; they will build prestige and patronage.

FAMOUS PLAYERS LASKY CORPORATION

"FOREVER" is one of those pictures which break records for exhibitors, make audiences happy, and make the public in general think better of the screen.

But, great as it is, it is only one of the many great Paramount Pictures which, week after week, year after year, continue to build business and create prestige.

Look at this list of pictures. No other company in the world can deliver such a reliable, uniform supply of really great productions.

These are just current releases—not once-in-a-while specials. It isn't the occasional great picture that counts; it is the steady supply.

And only Paramount can give you that steady, dependable supply!

Don't Judge a Picture by Its Length

Many of the greatest showmen among motion picture exhibitors are today entertaining audiences everywhere with programs made up exclusively of short subject features.

With diversified programs —well-balanced programs.

Invariably these short subject programs list several Educational Pictures, because—Educational Pictures are the recognized standard by which quality short subjects are judged.

Look in theatre entrances for posters and cards showing the Educational pictures trade-mark. When you see it—go in!

The Exhibitor's Dollar

How is It Split ?

EXHIBITORS are showing exceptional interest in the method of operation of Wid Gunning, Inc.

I don't blame them.

It's about time the exhibitor began to ask, "Where does the dollar I pay for film rental go? How is it divided in New York?"

It is a vitally important question—for, as sure as black is black and white is white, where that dollar is wasted, where it is diverted from those who rightfully earn it—sincere, constructive business methods are barred at the threshold of the picture industry, creative, enthusiastic, ambitious production ideals are KILLED.

That is as eternally true as gospel.

Read it over again and let it sink in deep.

Three months ago I could have answered the exhibitor's query about his dollar without a second's hesitation.

"Seventy cents of your dollar," I could have told Frank Rembusch, for example, "goes to a lot of swivel chair warmers in New York who have no harder work to do than Le-Paging themselves to their titles. About fifteen cents more goes to actually pay the sales force. The other fifteen cents goes to the actual creator of the film you are showing—and this poor individual is probably being pursued day and night by his banker because it is so much trouble to get money out of a distributor that no producer can ever stay on the same side of the street with his banker.

"The producer can't even claim independence and works with the enthusiasm of a sweatshop laborer being scared to death he might put into his task a new idea which he would prefer to save for the day when he will be producing independently."

That is the answer I could have given three months ago.

In sum and substance I could have said—Your dollar does every thing but encourage the creator of better motion pictures everything but foster more efficient operation, everything but inspire real showmanship brains.

And you know it!

Giving the Lion's share

to the Lions

WHEN Wid Gunning came East to take over the reins of his distributing organization I heard something about his plans to let the workers share the profits which they created.

I didn't enthuse much—five years as managing editor of Motion Picture News had made me just about twice as callous and cynical as the average exhibitor when it came to policy announcements.

Then I heard the message from Wid Gunning personally, I met the men who compose his organization, I journeyed into the field and saw the men on the firing line

AND I MADE A STARTLING DISCOVERY

I found a new division of the exhibitor's hundred cents, of your dollar

Seventy cents of every dollar you pay Wid Gunning, Inc., goes back to the man who inspired and made the picture that flashes on your screen. It is his just reward, and it is his inspiration to go out and make finer, better, greater motion pictures—for your screen.

Not a cent goes to a swivel chair warmer

Every penny of the balance goes to the men who create the exploitation and build showmanship value around the production, the men who actually do the work of selling and distributing it.

Every resident manager for the Wid Gunning organization, every salesman who calls at your box-office, has it within his own power to determine the share of profis that shall be his.

Every man who talks Wid Gunning to you is a partner of Wid Gunning. If he can't measure up to that position in ability and integrity—he doesn't belong with Wid Gunning, Inc., and he won't be there tomorrow.

Is it any wonder that the leading production brains of the industry are discussing the future with Wid Gunning today?

Is it any wonder that the most able exploitation effort of the industry is allying itself with Wid Gunning productions?

Is it any wonder that the top notch managers and salesmen are seeking an opportunity to become partners with Wid Gunning?

If all the field knew the dollars and cents which that partnership means the doors wouldn't hold the onslaught.

And is it any wonder that exhibitors, as they finger that dollar before it starts on its way to New York, are saying

"My present and future depend on a stable supply of better motion pictures, at prices based upon efficient distribution. I'm paying my money where I make my money—out of the picture on the screen and the exploitation with it. I'm quitting the furniture business—and I never did like swivel chairs anyway"

Neither do I.

Did you ever read more glowing newspaper and trade reviews? Did you ever see more delighted, responsive audiences than this picture classic drew on its New York premier? Do you want another like it that will please and satisfy every class of picture-goers everywhere? If you do—and you really mean business—investigate these new productions:

THE FLYING DUTCHMAN

In six or nine reels—Captain Maryatt's world-famed story that has been read by millions, played for years on the dramatic stage and is one of the favorite international grand operas. A mystery tale of the sea—has tremendous advertising possibilities.

THE BOOKS OF SATAN

An amazing departure from the usual. A most unique and beautiful production—one that Roy L. McCardell, newspaper and magazine writer of international repute, who wrote the first and many of the greatest scenarios ever produced in this country, declares to be "the most perfect and the most engrossing picture I have ever seen."

THE HOUSE OF FATAL LOVE

A mystery-love story that grips you tight from start to finish. Hopp Hadley, who edited it, says "This picture is a model of continuity. Its photography and acting are a treat—"

DISARMAMENT

A peace propaganda picture that will have the enthusiastic support of the Red Cross and other great organizations. Figure for yourself what can be done now with a picture of such extraordinary timeliness.

TWO OTHERS, just received, titles soon to be announced. All of these pictures are enriched by that luminous photography, natural acting, fidelity and detail which have soundly established NORDISK FILMS KOMPAGNI as the supreme producers of all Europe.

Dear Mr. Quigley:

I wish that you would refrain from making statements as to the circulation of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in future.

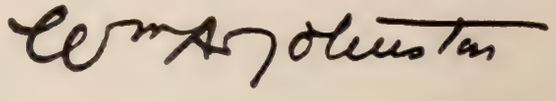
The figures published by you in your issue of December 17th, 1921, are incorrect.

I judge that these figures must have been compiled from reports of subscription salesmen whose figures you were unable to check personally; otherwise they would never have been used.

For your information the paid-in-advance exhibitor circulation of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in New York State outside of New York City and Brooklyn, is 414. Of these 198 are two year paid-in-advance subscriptions.

These figures have been checked by the Audit Bureau of Circulations. They can be conclusively proved by you or any one else.

If you wish the NEWS circulation in any other territory we will be glad to supply it to you or to any of our advertisers. Call up or come in any time.



Another point which may interest you—

The NEWS obtains its subscribers solely on the merit of the publication.

Our only method of securing circulation is direct from this office through the mail.

Don't forget that our circulation files are open to you at any time.

Very sincerely

THE EXHIBITOR PAID-IN-ADVANCE CIRCULATION OF MOTION PICTURE NEWS, BY OUR LAST PUBLISHER'S REPORT TO THE AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULATION WAS 8,340. TODAY, BY OUR OWN RECORDS, IT IS CLOSE TO 9,000, WHICH IS WELL-NIGH THE LIMIT OF EXHIBITOR TRADE-PAPER CIRCULATION IN THE FIELD.

It is a simple matter for any advertiser to determine the circulation volume and value of any trade paper.

VOLUME—and soundness also—are shown by the reports of the Audit Bureau of Circulations. That is the only proof. It is accepted by the leading advertisers and advertising agencies in the United States.

VALUE meaning reader interest (an exhibitor may take several papers but only need one), can be gauged by a post card test, by reports from exchanges and salesmen.

THAT, briefly, is all there is to it. Attempts to concentrate on localities, quotations of circulations not verified by impartial and authoritative audits, becloud the real issue.

REPORTS—audits and publisher's reports to be audited, are available from MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Moving Picture World and Exhibitor's Trade Review. Ask for them—and get the truth!

THEN*—COMPARE THE EXHIBITOR, PAID-IN-ADVANCE, VOLUNTARY, SOUND-TO-THE-CORE SUBSCRIPTION CIRCULATION OF MOTION PICTURE NEWS WITH THAT OF ANY OTHER TRADE PAPER AND YOU WILL KNOW WHY WE CLAIM SUPERIORITY BY A VERY WIDE AND PROVEN MARGIN—SO WIDE THAT OUR CLAIM THAT THE NEWS ALONE COVERS THE FIELD IS ABSOLUTELY VERIFIED.

Every element that makes a big picture BIG is found in "Our Mutual Friend."

The drawing power that brought thousands to the Lyric in New York who had never entered a picture theater before will do the same in your town.

The all-around entertainment values that caused Wid Gunning to place his personal O. K. on it will send your regulars away boosting as they never boosted before.

Think of it. Melodrama by the genius of thrilling stories, Charles Dickens; romance by the idol of lovers, Charles Dickens; humor by the wizard of characterization, Charles Dickens.

Say—that's SURE FIRE!

"It's about time the movies woke up and did something like this," wrote one prominent New Yorker to us during the run at the Lyric Theater.

And the same mail brought eight "mash" notes to the pretty blonde star!

THERE'S GENUINE APPEAL FOR YOU.

And you'll tell the same story in your town.

The fans will say, "IT'S GREAT!"

And you'll see new faces pass through the lobby every night; warm words of approval from neighbors who have just discovered the delights of your theater; new patrons who'll come back again because they've had the treat of their lives.

MR. EXHIBITOR:

We aim to give you the facts. This time we slipped up.

We said "The Lotus Eater" opened at the Capitol Theatre, New York, to 12,547 paid admissions the first day. As a matter of fact the paid admissions on the first day were 17,547. We said the total receipts for the first day were $11,473. They were actually $12,647.21. We wish to thank Mr. Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol, for calling our attention to the real facts.

My dear J.D.:

Frequently motion picture advertisements exaggerate - often they are exactly truthful - it is seldom,however, that they understate the facts. In advertising the results of the Capitol Theatre showing of the John Barrymore picture "The Lotus Eater," you fall far short of the actual facts.

The headline of your ad reads ---- "$11,473.00 DAYS RECEIPTS AT THE CAPITOL THEATRE, NEW YORK" The actual figure is $12,647.21.

You have also apparently confused the gross receipts of the day with the number of paid admissions. As a matter of fact the paid admissions for the day were exactly 17,547 instead of 12,547 as you have it.

If the record of this remarkable picture is worth publishing, it would seem worth while to have it appear correctly.

Sincerely yours,
Edward Bowes
Managing Director.

Motion Picture News

To The People!

WE are keenly in sympathy with the newly projected Association of producers and distributors, particularly with its object of affiliating with the organized exhibitor so that on all outside matters the industry, at last, may have a united power and speak with one voice in its defense and for its general good.

The advantages, too, of heading the Association with an outside man of high standing in the public eye are manifest; although the premature announcement of the scheme by the daily press was certainly unfortunate in that it gave the impression for one thing, that, like baseball, we needed a strenuous moral reform and for another that we can afford to pay prodigal salaries.

Whatever is done in this connection, however, even if the new Association is headed by a whole cabinet of men of public affairs, the one great fundamental and pressing need remains.

That is PUBLICITY—Judicious, constructive publicity.

We make the suggestion with all the emphasis and sincerity at our command.

And we hasten to explain just what we have in mind by—publicity.

We have always had a lot of publicity; we still have. But much of it has been extremely ill-advised and unfortunate and the sum total of it has, to say the least, failed dismally to set right the motion picture and the industry in the public mind.

This is a fact, a broad and true one; and we've got to face it.

We are largely known today for stars' salaries and scandals, for commercial greatness and daring, for lavishness, exaggeration, stock-jobbing, censored pictures, sensational advertising, legislative struggles, government suits and what not.

We are the ready target for the sensationalist.

We are overtaxed. (The writer was gravely informed, the other day, by a Congressman that the industry was the richest in the country. We countered by calling his attention to the fact that last year's output of butter in the United States exceeded in value the box-office intake from pictures—which were taxed eighty million dollars. Our own lies about our bigness are terrible boomerangs!)

We are censored—the first and only medium of expression and form of entertainment in the country to bear the stigma and severe restriction of official censorship.

All this, gentlemen, and it's enough—because the public isn't with us. We have neither its sympathy nor understanding.

And we lack both because we've lied fatuously about ourselves, because, unintentionally, we've painted ourselves as black as could be, and because on the other hand we've never told a clear true story about the motion picture, its mission and potentialities and how and why it is made.

Not one hundred people today outside of this industry know what censorship means; nor how good pictures are; nor how difficult and expensive and speculative it is to produce; nor how modest and poor this industry really is; nor how decent and generous its impulses are; nor that stars' salaries are the result only of supply and demand; nor that the industry is taxed into the last ditch of self-preservation.

That's what we mean by publicity—not propaganda, nor specious or false or manufactured publicity but—just facts, the facts that have never yet been told.

We mean, by publicity: to go to the people, to lay before the eternal bar of public opinion the true and basic facts about the motion picture, its mission and its industrial functions, its place in the community, its rights and privileges under the constitution.

It is the voter, not the legislator, who is going to decide censorship; and whether pictures shall be shown on Sundays; and whether pictures shall be taxed to destruction. The millions of men and women in this country will render these decisions—and they deserve and we deserve that they go on facts.

True, the legislator must decide these matters right now; that's the extremity we are in, our usual eleventh hour struggles against oppression must go on with renewed energy; but there'll be no decision right or final until the public makes it.

It's a big job—this public appeal. It takes wisdom and work. But it was done for Suffrage; and we can do it with our screen alone. And the demand for the beginning of it is ringing aloud—above all other considerations.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Plans for New York Exhibitors' Convention

Elaborate Preparations Being Made for Albany Meeting by Managers' Association

THE first meeting in perfecting plans for the coming convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York state, which will be held in Albany, February 14, 15 and 16, was held at the Majestic theatre in Albany last Sunday afternoon. The details of the convention will largely rest with the Albany Managers Association, of which George Roberts, manager of both the Hudson and Colonial theatres, is president. The sister cities of Troy and Schenectady have already assured the Albany association that they will join hands toward making the convention the biggest and best affair of its kind in the motion-picture history in New York state.

Mr. Roberts left Monday for New York where he is spending two or three days conferring with Sydney S. Cohen, president of the national association, and Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the state association. As soon as he returns to Albany another meeting will be held in carrying forward convention plans.

All business sessions of the convention will be held at the Hotel Ten Eyck. The banquet will also be held there, probably in the roof garden where the Legislative correspondents dinners always take place. The exchanges will have their booths on the mezzanine floor of the hotel, and probably also in the tea room which is off the lobby.

The ball which will come as the culminating event of the week will be held in the State Armory four blocks distant from the hotel. The Armory has about 49,000 square feet of floor space and can accommodate at least 3,500 couples. It is expected by Mr. Roberts that all the motion picture stars working in the east in February will be in position to attend the ball.

Albany is already in an expectant mood for the convention. Mayor-elect William Hackett has already promised to turn over the keys of the city to the delegates, while Roy Smith, secretary of the Albany Chamber of Commerce, has promised the Albany managers that he will leave no stone unturned to cooperate with them to the fullest extent. Everything points to a most successful convention. Business men have assured the association that they will decorate during convention week.

As aides to Mr. Roberts, there will be Fred Elliott, owner of the Clinton Square theatre, and vice-president of the Albany Managers Association; Sam Suckno, owner of the Albany, Regent and other theatres, treasurer; and O. H. Stacey of the Majestic, secretary. William Berinstein, of the Colonial theatre, will also lend a hand.

President Roberts will name on his committee on arrangements, exchange manager in New York, Albany and Buffalo. Every piece of mail which goes out of these exchanges between the last of this month and February 14, will carry a message which will call attention to the convention.

Mr. Roberts, in outlining his preliminary plans at Sunday's meeting said that never had the theatres in this state been so closely affiliated with the exchanges as at the present time, and that in connection with the convention he desired the cooperation of all ends of the industry.

Delegates to the convention will be invited to the Capitol where they will have the opportunity of seeing the Legislature in session. The General Electric Company, of Schenectady, which has a building completely equipped for the taking and printing of films, will tender an invitation to the delegates to visit and inspect its entire plant.

The New York State Motion Picture Commission will have at least one of its heads from the New York office, on hand in meeting the exchangemen and delegates.

The matter of speakers is to be left entirely in the hands of Presidents Cohen and O'Reilly. It is expected that at least a thousand delegates will attend the convention. This time the convention comes earlier than in past years, thereby avoiding any conflict with the Lenten season.

State Organizations to Share in Proceeds

M. P. T. O's "Movie Chats" Plan Provides for State Bodies Sharing in Rental Receipts

SECOND only in importance to the initial announcement concerning the Official Urban Movie Chats which the M. P. T. O. A. will release through Hodkinson, is the announcement made public this week to the effect that all proceeds accruing to the M. P. T. O. A. from rentals in each state will be first credited to the state's national quota and all sums over and above the individual state quotas, will be returned to the treasuries of the states having exceeded their quotas. Taking into consideration the fact that practically every member of the M. P. T. O. A. will book "Movie Chats" the individual state revenues from the sale of the productions may eventually, it is pointed out, prove to be the largest source of income that the state organizations will have.

At the New England convention of the M. P. T. O. A. held last week in Boston, which was attended by Sydney S. Cohen, and Senator Walker, "Movie Chats" were booked for more than 100 days on each issue. Additional bookings continue to be received and the original number of bookings in the New England territory will probably be doubled by the time the "Movie Chats" are scheduled for release.

Additional action on "Movie Chats," of importance to the industry, was taken last week at the meeting of the executive committee of the New York State M. P. T. O. A. held in Utica. Every theatre owner present at the meeting signed a contract to show the productions, and it was indicated that the series will be booked by more than eighty percent of M. P. T. O. A. members in the state.

A. W. Smith, Jr., sales manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has just returned to New York from a week's tour through the middle west in company with Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Senator James A. Walker, counsel of the organization and Michael O'Toole, in the interests of the Official Urban Movie Chats of the M. P. T. O. A.

They visited Toledo, Peoria, Milwaukee and Chicago, in each of which cities enthusiastic meetings were held with members of the organization who pledged their support to the new Movie Chats to appear as a weekly release on January 15th, through the Hodkinson exchanges.

"My experience on this trip," said Mr. Smith, "convinces me that the exhibitors of the country will stand squarely back of this one-reel subject which Mr. Urban is producing for the M. P. T. O. A. After all, it is their own reel, produced to serve their best interests, and the sentiment in every city we visited was unanimous in favor of booking Movie Chats solidly through the year. I had an opportunity to discuss not only Movie Chats, but general business conditions with leading theatre owners in the four cities we visited and it was gratifying to hear the better tone of their sizing up conditions in the industry.

"Business seems better in every section of the country. Our own branches in the first six weeks of their operation, broke all records for contracts and when you consider that this covers a period during which their offices were in the chaotic state of moving, it speaks well for the completeness of their organizations."

Dallas Exchange District Has Disastrous Fire

A disastrous fire in the film exchange district of Dallas, Tex., has wiped out five exchanges, according to late despatch from Dallas. The loss, it is estimated, will reach over a million dollars.

First National Franchise-Holders Conduct Local "Get-Togethers"

Meetings Held in Western Pennsylvania, Iowa, Oklahoma and Oregon

FIRST NATIONAL franchise holders of Western Pennsylvania, Iowa, Oklahoma and the Northwest conducted local "get-togethers" in their respective territories. At each of the meetings advisory boards were elected in pursuance of the policy adopted at the recent national convention in Chicago. The delegates to the Chicago meeting submitted their reports, following which resolutions were adopted endorsing the policies and activities of First National and expressing confidence in the executive board and officers of the organization.

The Western Pennsylvania franchise holders met in Pittsburg at the Fort Pitt Hotel. Messrs. Smoot, Scherer and McCloskey, the delegates to Chicago, reported on the national meeting and expressed their approval of the methods employed and the decisions reached.

The morning was given over to these reports and to discussions of general topics by the franchise holders. The advisory board was elected as the first business of the afternoon session, with the following membership: Michael Rosenbloom, C. M. McCloskey, M. Manos, John P. Harris.

Towards the close of the meeting Mr. Shirella, an exhibitor with considerable experience in the banking world, expressed his opinion of First National in a few impressive words. He said:

"I have heard arguments to-day, pro and con, and I think the best thing we have done is to elect an advisory board. For eleven years previous to my entering the motion picture business, I was in one of the biggest businesses in the United States —the banking business. Every week or two the board of directors met to take up the details that come up day by day, and you have done the same thing by electing an advisory board here to-day.

"I think this will satisfy all franchise holders and that all arguments that come up will be settled. As a franchise holder, I never appreciated our proposition until a few months ago. I never knew what it meant until competition became keener and keener. The reason is that I do not have to go out into the open market and bid for pictures. I know about pictures of other concerns, and you will find bad pictures with them, the same as with First National. You have to take the good with the bad.

"Another thing—this is a co-operative organization, and you must get behind the people at the head of it and back them up. If you do not, you are going to lose out absolutely. We will be one of the greatest organizations in the world if we play the game fair and square."

The Iowa franchise holders met in Des Moines at the Savery Hotel on November 30. A. J. Diebold of Cedar Rapids acted as chairman. The advisory board elected for Iowa comprises Mr. Diebold of Cedar Rapids, Mrs. Steen of Atlantic, Mr. Dunkel of Iowa City and Mr. Moore of Centerville.

The following resolution, passed at the afternoon session of the Iowa "get-tother," indicates the confidence of the franchise holders in that territory in the happy solution of all the problems now confronting the organization and its members; and, in fact, that First National is precisely the kind of an organization they need to bring them, as exhibitors, through the present trying period in business readjustment:

"Be it resolved, that we, the sub-franchise holders of the Des Moines Exchange District, composed of the State of Iowa, assembled in local get-together meeting, do hereby unanimously extend our sincere thanks to the executive board and officers of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for the highly efficient manner in which they have handled the affairs of our company in the past;

"Be it further resolved, that we assure them of our utmost faith and confidence in their plans for the future and that we go on record as against any investigation of the affairs of our company by non-franchise holders, endorsing to the fullest the great accomplishment of the delegates to the Chicago get-together."

The Oklahoma franchise holders met in Oklahoma City at the Stirvin Hotel. At this meeting equal care was taken to obtain as representative an advisory board as possible by selecting them from towns widely different in population and location from one another.

The board chosen consists of A. B. Momand of Shawnee, G. F. Roetzel of Okeene, Albert Jackson of Pawhuska, and W. T. Blair of Poteau.

Every member of the board immediately after the election pledged himself to a whole-hearted attention to the duties of the board.

Said Mr. Momand: "I assure you that I will devote my time and attention to the questions and problems of any franchise holder. I will work as hard for you as I would for myself. It is going to entail some hard work, as anything else will that is worth while, but whatever is required I am going to give you the best I have."

The feeling among the franchise holders regarding the personnel of the advisory board for Oklahoma was expressed by B. T. Stubbs of Erick when he said, amid applause:

"I don't believe I could pick four men, just by looking at their faces, knowing what kind of men they are, that I would rather have on the advisory board. I don't feel that I will have any trouble in adjusting any difficulties that we have with these four men. I am certainly glad that I came here and glad to be in touch with such a bunch as we have, and I feel that our troubles are in shape to be ironed out. In the meantime we must all get together and work for the betterment of Associated First National."

A heart-to-heart talk about various local conditions throughout the territory ensued, and franchise holders, one after the other, arose and frankly stated their problems, explaining in each case how they had grappled with them and in many instances overcome them.

The Northwest franchise holders met at Portland, Ore., November 29. A. H. McDonald, of the Rex and Castle theatres in Eugene, was the official delegate who represented Oregon franchise holders at the Chicago convention. His report was supplemented by reports of Dr. Howard Clemmer of Spokane, not an official delegate, but who also attended the Chicago convention. Both reports told in detail the methods by which the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., a co-operative organization, purchased and marketed pictures. Discussion in which each person present was privileged to ask any question concerning salaries of officials employed, original production costs or overhead expense, followed.

Mr. and Mrs. Public of to-day insist upon having "big" pictures, according to the discussion which took place. A big picture, according to the First National franchise holders present, consists not only of a photoplay starring famous actors or actresses or a drama built around a thrilling plot. A big picture has both these qualifications. It also has much attention paid to detail, as convincing, does not sacrifice art to lower cost of production by substituting paper sets for genuine article, and is from every standard " a good, finished production from the box office value."

The most important action taken during the conference from the standpoint of exhibitors throughout the State was the appointment of an advisory committee to meet four or five times a year and settle individual problems.

The committee is composed of C. H. Phillips, Portland; A. H. McDonald, Eugene; Cy Danz, Astoria; Frank Bligh, Salem, and C. S. Jensen, Portland, with C. H. Feldman, manager of the local First National offices, to serve as secretary.

Two new departments in the First National distributing offices for the Northwest were announced by Manager Lukan. A special department for sales promotion, with Guy G. Maxey of Seattle in control, has been created, and in the near future there will be organized a special comedy department, which will handle only the Charles Chaplin, Mack Sennett, Buster Keaton and Ben Turpin comedies.

Deny Break Between Alabama Exhibs and M. P. T. O.

THE following telegram was received by the NEWS from E. T. Peter, of Dallas, Tex.:

"Statement carried in some trade papers to the effect that the Alabama exhibitors at a meeting held in Birmingham, Ala., last week refused to affiliate with Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is an absolute error. There were only six exhibitors present and they did not deem it their prerogative to speak for the whole state. The meeting was called by Mr. Hackworth, of Huntsville, who was first vice president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Alabama, organized a year ago and affiliated with Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. There was no resolution passed at the meeting nullifying this affiliation.

"While the meeting was called by Mr. Hackworth it was at the solicitation of Sydney S. Cohen and myself. I personally called on Mr.Hackworth and the national headquarters sent out notices to the exhibitors to be present. There were four out of town exhibitors, two from Birmingham and myself present at the meeting. We did not deem it advisable to endorse the official Urban 'Movie Chats' with so few present.

(Signed) "E. T. PETER."

F.I.L.M. Clubs Meet in Conference Albany

A delegation from the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City met with the members of the Albany F. I. L. M. Association in the Capital City last Friday for the purpose of bringing about greater co-operation and more clearly outlining boundary lines, it being claimed that Albany is invaded by both New York and Buffalo. The meeting was held at the Pathe Exchange. Those from New York present were: Arthur Abeles of Metro, Lester Adler, of Realart, Sam Zerler of Commonwealth, Henry Siegel, assistant manager for Selznick, and a Mr. Byer, representing the independent producers. Those from Albany present were Bert M. Moran of the Pathe Exchange, president of the Albany F. I. L. M. Club; R. C. Halligan of the Universal Exchange, Marie Wheeler, Merit; B. F. Gibbons, Vitagraph; Louis Green of Fox, Charles Walder of the R-C. Corporation, Earl Cramer, Select.

First National to Release Selig-Rork's "Rosary"

Selig and Rork's first big independent production, "The Rosary," has been accepted by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for release January 16.

The all-star cast includes Lewis Stone, Jane Novak, Wallace Beery, Robert Gordon, Eugenie Besserer, Dore Davidson, Pomeroy Cannon, Harold Goodwin, Mildred June, Bert Woodruff, Ann May, James Conway and Walt Whitman. The picture was directed by Jerome Storm. The screen continuity was written by Bernard McConville from the stage play by Edward E. Rose.

New York F.I.L.M. Club Elects Officers

At its last meeting the F. I. L. M. Club of New York elected the following officers for 1922:

Mr. S. Eckman, Jr. (Goldwyn), president; Mr. Samuel Zierler (Commonwealth), vice-president; Mr. W. E. Raynor (Pathe), second vice-president; Mr. L. Rosenblun (Fox), treasurer; Mr. Henry Siegel (Select), secretary; Mr. Joseph Klein (Robertson-Cole), master-of-ceremonies.

The installation of the new officers will take place on December 28th or on January 21st, the latter date being the occasion of the annual club dinner and dance at the Hotel McAlpin. W. E. Raynor, chairman of the entertainment committee, reports that the entire reservation for the evening of January 21st has been sold out, insuring complete success for the affair.

President Chadwick, declaring that he wished to devote himself more thoroughly to business and personal affairs and pointing out that he had already served five consecutive terms, declined another term in the presidency.

Sam Zierler, chairman of the committee to confer with the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce on arranging a joint arbitration committee, reported that he hoped for the establishment of complete harmony between the committees within a few days. He also announced negotiations were under way with Charles O'Reilly to have a representative of the state exhibitors' organization on the arbitration committee.

First National Closes for Jackie Coogan's Picture

"My Boy," starring Jackie Coogan, is to be released through Associated First National Picture, Inc., according to an announcement made this week by that organization. The completed print of the production was shown to the First National officials in New York last week, and it evoked so much enthusiasm that negotiations were begun immediately, and the releasing arrangements entered into within twenty-four hours.

Realart Exchange System to Cease Operations

THE report that Realart's exchanges are to close and the Realart product is to be distributed through the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges has been admitted as true by J. S. Woody, general manager of the Realart Pictures Corporation. Except for Mr. Woody's admission, however, no other statement could be secured from any of the officials of the organizations involved.

It is understood that certain of the Realart executives will continue to function in their present capacities until the transfer of the Realart product to the Paramount exchanges is completed and the new arrangements perfected.

Premiere for "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" Staged

HERALDED by a city-wide exploitation and advertising campaign, "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" opened to record business at the Victory theatre in Providence, R. I., this week. The house packed to the last seat was obliged to turn hundreds away, according to a dispatch from Providence. Capacity business has continued at every performance, and it has been found necessary to open at 9 A. M. to permit two additional performances being given. The star, John Lowell, appears in person at the showings.

On last Sunday night, Mr. Lowell visited the state prison, where the picture was shown, and created a furore among the prisoners. The Providence dailies which included comments on the picture's premiere at the Victory characterized the production as a faithful picturization of the play version.

The great success of the opening performances is said to be due in large measure to the title and advertising and exploitation campaign as well as to the presence of the star in person. The laurels for the smashing exploitation and advertising drive, accompanying the opening of "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," are credited to a large extent to J. Charles Davis, 2nd.

Censor Board May Review at Albany, N. Y., Office

If the New York State Motion Picture Commission finds it possible to accede to the requests of Buffalo, N. Y., producers it is probable that the Albany bureau of the commission will become the reviewing headquarters for producers in the Western part of the State. Claiming that too much time is lost in delayed shipments, producers in Western New York are seeking to either have a branch established in Buffalo, or failing in this, to make the Capitol office a halfway point. At present the Albany bureau is not equipped with projection rooms, although it is the intention of the commission to keep on hand a supply of the seals and serial numbers for use in emergency.

Mr. Ansel W. Brown, in charge of the Albany office, has been spending a good part of his time around the State inspecting the theatres and exchanges. A week was spent in Buffalo and vicinity, and while in one or two instances Mr. Brown found that exchanges were failing to supply the required licenses and permits, conditions as a rule were most satisfactory, and there was a general disposition on the part of exhibitors to comply with the law in every respect.

Canada's New Premier Is Friend of Industry

Honorable W. L. Mackenzie King, whose recent victory in the Canadian elections places him at the head of that Government, is described as a man who is strong for closer trade relations between all countries and favorable to all forms of wholesome entertainment.

Exhibitor Meetings in Toledo and Chicago Hear Cohen and Walker

Ohio Organization Perfected; Senator Repeats Attack on First Nat'l

SYDNEY S. COHEN, president of the M. P. T. O. of A., and Senator James Walker, organization counsel, appeared before two exhibitor gatherings in the Middle West this week and discussed problems of the industry and the independent exhibitor. On Monday and Tuesday over two hundred motion-picture theatre owners of Ohio assembled at the Waldorf Hotel in Toledo and perfected an Ohio state exhibitor organization affiliated with the M. P. T. O. of A. On Wednesday, at Chicago, President Cohen and Senator Walker appeared before the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Chicago, assembled at the Hotel Sherman, and again addressed the exhibitors. A feature of both meetings was the address of Senator Walker, who repeated the attack on First National, which marked his recent speech in Charlotte, N. C.

Exhibitors crowded the Gray Room, Hotel Sherman, Chicago, to capacity at luncheon tendered Wednesday by Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Chicago to President Cohen and Senator Walker of the national organization. The local president, John Silha, introduced Cohen, who spoke on conditions in the industry as they affect the M. P. T. O. A. Walker went into controversy between exhibitors and First National, analyzing the contract, which he declared lacks mutuality and equity, and covered charges brought against First National in recent speeches.

Strongly urging the need of organization to protect the interests of exhibitors, Cohen pointed out reformers might be using censorship propaganda as camouflage to a flank movement aimed to destroy the entire industry. Seeing the need of a counter offensive rather than being continually on the defensive, he urged the use of the "Urban Movie Chats" by exhibitors both as a source of revenue to state and national organizations, and means of putting propaganda favorable to the screen before the public.

Mr. Cohen warmly commended William A. Johnson's editorial in the December 17th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS on the reported reorganization of the N. A. M. P. I. He also declared the story about the offer to Postmaster General Hays would have prevented the repeal of the five per cent tax if it had appeared earlier. Cohen praised the support given by MOTION PICTURE NEWS and the Exhibitors' Herald to exhibitors in the campaign to put the industry right with the public and for fair reports of trade happenings. He condemned distorted articles appearing in certain trade papers which appear, he declared, to be the kept press of producers. Cohen stated his organization was conducting a survey into the methods and usefulness of certain trade papers and would as requested by producers give report to them for use in placing advertising.

Cohen took a strong stand against payment in advance for pictures as required by Hiram Abrams of United Artists and called on exhibitors to unite to resist, pointing out success of New York exhibitors in forcing Abrams to recede. Cancelitis was the operation needed, he declared.

He voiced his approval of organization by producers and distributors as exhibitors then can get together with them and iron out differences.

Cohen's introduction of Walker as "the greatest fellow in these United States" was applauded. Senator Walker, after a plea for correction of play-date evil from within exhibitors' own ranks so that claims could be pressed with clean hands, declared the Paramount controversy had resulted in good and that he hoped this would be the case with regard to First National, adding that it was not the desire of the organization to drive them from the stage but to get fair contracts and fair dealing for all. He declared the fair dealing accorded to franchise holders in Minnesota showed it could be done, but he added that under present contract it was only charity and First National could not be forced to accord it. He then went into an analysis of this document and detailed certain alleged abuses as in recent talks.

He called for a financial statement and stated that Mr. Mandelbaum of Cleveland at the Toledo, Ohio, meeting held earlier in the week had declared he would go to New York and get a statement as he was entitled to. Senator Walker also quoted Mandelbaum as saying he would have other differences adjusted.

Following the luncheon a large party, including the national officers, left for Peoria where a state convention was held Thursday.

The Ohio state unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was formed in Toledo, O., at the largest and most enthusiastic meeting of exhibitors yet held in the Buckeye State. Over two hundred of the leading picture theatre owners were present and most pronounced interest marked every stage of the proceedings.

The meetings were held on Monday and Tuesday at the Waldorf Hotel, Toledo. The convention dinner at the Elks' Club was an exceedingly interesting function. Arrangements were perfected for the complete solidification of the state organization. Officers were elected, and lines of direct co-operation with the national exhibitor association established. It is the belief of those who attended this meeting that the Ohio state organization will within comparatively a few months become one of the strongest exhibitor bodies in the nation. Martin G. Smith, the well-known Toledo exhibitor, opened the meeting, and James A. Maddox, president of the Southern Ohio exhibitors' organization, presided during the sessions.

Instructive addresses were made by Sydney S. Cohen and National Secretary Sam Berman, M. J. O'Toole of Scranton, Pa., chairman of the Public Service Committee of the national body. He asked for complete co-operation of the Ohio exhibitors, and as the meeting progressed it was made evident that this would be forthcoming. A number of the officers of the Michigan and other state bodies were present and aided in the unification of the Ohio exhibitor organizations.

Senator Walker, following Mr. Cohen's speech, was introduced to the meeting. The senator's address and his discussion with Mr. Mandelbaum of Cleveland, who is one of the original First National franchise-holders, dealt with the activities of the First National organization. During the course of his speech he repeated the attack on First National which marked his recent address at Charlotte, N. C., and which he later on in the week gave expression to before the Chicago exhibitors.

In a lengthy discussion, in which Senator Walker, President Cohen, and Mr. Mandelbaum participated, First National's methods of making financial statements and the distribution by First National franchise-holders of products other than First National's were brought up for consideration. In reply to Senator Walker, Mr. Mandelbaum declared that while First National producers get a financial statement its franchise-holders do not receive such a statement. Mr. Mandelbaum added that First National's present limited office force made such practice prohibitive. Mr. Cohen then cited some instances of First National franchise-holders who, he claimed, distributed in their territory products other than First National's. Mr. Mandelbaum agreed that such practice as described by Mr. Cohen was not to be approved of. The discussion closed with Mr. Mandelbaum's promise to Mr. Cohen and Senator Walker that he would go to the New York office of First National, secure a statement of the company's business, and submit this report to the M. P. T. O. of A. officials.

Sees Advent of Specialization in Theatres

British Producer Takes Stand for Exhibition of Certain Styles of Pictures

THE beginning of a movement toward the specializing of motion picture theatres in the same manner that legitimate houses specialize in drama, vaudeville, musical comedy and other forms of spoken entertainment is the most encouraging sign for the future of the industry noted by Cecil M. Hepworth, the leading producer of England, on a tour of this country which he has just completed. He spent considerable time in studios on the West Coast prior to a stay in New York studying distribution methods. Some of his impressions he summarized in an address before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers as follows:

"The most encouraging sign I noted on my trip is the fact that in Los Angeles a theatre has been established with a definite policy of showing but one style of picture," he said. "It is quite some time ago that I came to the conclusion that the coming of the day when motion picture theatres would assume definitely established strata in relation to the kind of entertainment they offered was inevitable.

"That is the result that every other art has reached in its development. Motion pictures have grown so rapidly that we have quite lost sight of the necessity of orderly progress if success is to be attained. In seeking a guide it would seem but right that the progress of other established arts should be accepted. Music offers an inspiration. Jazz as well as the most beautiful of the accepted classical pieces has its place in the musical world. However, each particular kind of music is offered in its own temple. Music lovers know where to find the kind they like. Lovers of jazz, for instance, can go into a cabaret with a surety that they will not be disappointed.

"The trouble is that we producers and dispensers of motion picture entertainment have gotten into the fallacy of regarding the entire world as a potential audience. Your beloved martyred president well illustrated the fallacy of being able to do anything concerning an entire people in regard to fooling them. We are not attempting to fool them; our efforts are to please them, and I think a paraphrase of Lincoln's famous saying points out the truth. You can please all the people some of the time, and you can please some of the people all the time, but you can't please all the people all of the time.

"That is why I am so enthusiastic about this one theatre in Los Angeles. The management has accepted the dictum that he can't please all the people all of the time, but that he can please some of the people all of the time. Therefore he has started on the policy of letting the people who enjoy the kind of entertainment he is to offer know that they can always find it at his house. It is a definite step toward the establishment of a permanent clientele.

"As soon as the majority of theatres adopt such a policy the betterment of pictures is bound to come. The producer or director who has the talent to produce a certain kind of picture will be able to do his best. He won't have to compromise in the effort to please those people who don't like his particular kind of production for he will know that his audience wants the very stuff that he best knows how to do. The makers of pictures comparable to Beethoven's sonnatas will be relieved of the necessity of injecting jazz. The change must come to the industry through the exhibitors for they are the ones that must decide upon their policies. The theatres in the larger cities will specialize in but one style of production. Those in the smaller cities will establish definite days of the week for a certain kind of production.

"Such a condition will show a marked improvement in every branch of the industry. Distributing organizations will be relieved of the necessity of selling the world on each production. Advertising men will no longer have to carry every appeal in every page he prepares, and the publicity-man won't have to inject a strain of logic into slap-stick comedy.

"Motion picture patronage will immeasureably increase. So many people whom I have asked as to the kind of pictures they are making use a very expressive gesture in answering. With a motion of the hand they indicate that they are catering to a class whose head stops at their eye brows. They have been successful at it, in fact so successful that there are a great many people who have been alienated from pictures. These can be brought back and they are of a class that is well worth winning back."

M. P. T. O. of A. Makes Reply to Educator's Attack on the Motion Picture

MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF AMERICA, in reply to articles recently appearing in the Wisconsin State Journal of Madison, Wis., has addressed a letter to the editor of that publication, refuting the claims of Professor M. V. O'Shea, of Madison, that motion pictures are only for illiterates; that they are designed mainly to entertain those of fourteen years of age; and that appeals are made to the emotions, which are artificially stimulated.

After declaring that school room theory is not infrequently found to be at variance with the practicalities of life, the statement points out that the Professor's deductions are equally applicable to newspapers, "our history and our literature generally."

"Professor O'Shea may conclude that the picture plays come too close to realism," continues the statement, "as nothing can more properly excite emotions and impart knowledge than an approach to the real. If that is a defect then the school master who illustrates a lesson in botany by an examination of real plants, one in biology through an inspection of insect and other forms of life, ornithology by a review of living birds, or manual training by a direct application of the mind and hand of the students to the lathe and other mechanical devices and domestic sciences by dissecting the humble potato and the formation of the bread and the pie, is indeed a follower of a realism that may be considered too dangerous by our esteemed professor's friends, as nothing is more calculated to excite emotions than these.

"The motion picture depicting events in ancient chronology or taking its substance from the present and in its dramatization and picturization of the same add the human elements and the artistic embellishment on the screen, cannot be said to cater to the illiterate, much less being the product of the illiterate. The motion picture teaches the highest and most advance of lessons. It brings the whole world to the feet of the beholder. It binds in mental harmony all visible elements of life and as an aid to educational processes has no peer.

"No greater service can be rendered the school than close, efficient association with the motion picture. Scientists declare that the lessons absorbed through the eye constitute at least eighty per cent of the store of human knowledge, allowing twenty per cent for all the other senses. A direct application of the motion picture in the teaching of lessons in the school room will serve to advance popular education, according to eminent teachers, at least twenty-five per cent. In that event the motion picture can reduce the graduation term from four to three years, or increase the efficiency of the four-year term twenty-five per cent.

"In either case it will add to the total of human knowledge. It will give to our nation and other nations vast additions to its greatest form of wealth — education, enlightenment and mental advancement."

The statement concludes with an announcement of the Public Service Department established by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to co-operate with schools and other public institutions in the exhibition of educational and patriotic films throughout the country.

Exhibitors Act Against Daylight Savings Plan

The Western New York unit of the M. P. T. O. A. has started a movement in Buffalo to kill the daylight savings measure, which, it is claimed, is detrimental to business during the time that the law is in force. A bill has been introduced in the City Council. Howard J. Smith, president, and Samuel Carver, secretary, are active in the movement. The co-operation of stores is being sought.

More Theatres Forced to Close on Sundays

Prohibitory Ordinances and Arrests Agitate Film Circles in Various Parts of Country

DEVELOPMENTS during the past week in various parts of the country brings the question of Sunday motion picture shows once more to the fore. In Minnesota, the Supreme Court, reversing a decision of a county district court, held that municipalities are invested with the power to prohibit Sunday picture shows. The decision grew out of the action of the North Branch village authorities in prohibiting C. E. Power a local exhibitor from showing films on Sunday. The Minnesota division of the M. P. T. O. of A. and the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade may appeal the case to the United States Supreme Court. The aldermanic executive council of Montreal issued an order requiring the closing on Sundays of all theatres offering vocal or dramatic presentations. Picture houses, however, are not affected unless their programs include vocal, dancing, or acting units.

Leon E. Goetz of Monroe, Wis., was arrested last week on the complaint of the W. C. T. U. at Monroe on the charge of operating a place of public entertainment on Sunday. Mr. Goetz, it is understood, will not plead guilty but will demand a jury trial to test the sentiment of the community as to the application of Sunday blue laws. J. Gable, owner of the Lyric theatre at Beloit, Kans., was also arrested last week on the charge of operating a theatre on Sunday. Mr. Gable at once appealed to the Kansas state exhibitors organization, and plans are being made to fight the case to a finish as there are many other picture theatres in the state that are at present kept dark on Sundays.

From Rome, N. Y., comes word that the common council has adopted by a vote of four to two a measure legalizing motion-picture shows on Sunday. Unless Mayor Mickle of Rome vetoes the proposed ordinance it will become a law within the next few days. Petitions bearing the names of over 3,000 persons were submitted to the council bearing evidence of the public's approval of Sunday picture performances.

A despatch from Minneapolis, Minn., describes in detail the events leading up to the decision of the Supreme Court holding that the municipalities are invested with the power to prohibit Sunday picture shows. The ruling was made when the court reversed the decision of the Chicago county district court which, early this year, declared invalid the ordinance passed by the village of North Branch in prohibiting Sunday shows. The North Branch case attracted widespread attention and it is expected that many other municipalities will pass Sunday closing ordinances following the Supreme Court ruling.

The case may be appealed to the United States Supreme Court, according to the Minneosta division of the M. P. T. O. A. and the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, which organizations have been working on the case for a long time. At the North Branch election in March, however, two townspeople may decide the Sunday closing question. Before then it is not likely that an appeal of the case will be taken.

At the time the North Branch ordinance was passed secret petitions are reported to have been circulated and the same day the ordinance was passed. The following day was Sunday and the Power theatre, C. E. Power, owner, was forced to close. He secured an injunction restraining the village from enforcing the ordinance. Upon expiration of the injunction Mr. Power applied for a new one and the district court held the ordinance invalid.

The decision of the Supreme Court states that "Such an ordinance is not aimed to secure the observance of the Sabbath day, but to regulate a business and is not in conflict with the general law of public policy of the state."

The long-awaited Sunday closing order became a fact in Montreal, Quebec, on December 9 when the aldermanic executive council of the Municipal Administration issued an order to Chief of Police Pierre Belanger to notify owners and managers of theatres offering vocal or dramatic presentation to close every Sunday until further notice. Enforcement of the order is to be made through the Lord's Day Act which is a Federal statute in Canada.

It is very interesting to note, however, that the important exception has been made in this regard: It is permitted to operate a moving picture theatre on Sundays in Montreal and to charge regular admission for Sunday performances in such theatres, providing no vaudeville, ballet numbers, solos, prologues or other specialties are staged in conjunction with the screening of pictures. Orchestral or organ accompaniment is not considered a specialty and there can be as much music as desired, providing no songs are sung or dances staged and there must be no acting. In other words, the local administration has decided that straight moving picture shows with musical accompaniment for the pictures and overtures, are to be allowed on Sunday throughout Montreal.

Boston Gives Charles Ray Big Reception

Boston, Mass., gave an enthusiastic reception this week to Charles Ray when he arrived at South Station. The star, accompanied by Mrs. Ray, Arthur S. Kane, Richard Willis and Albert A. Kidder, Jr., found a tremendous crowd awaiting him as a result of advance notices in all Boston newspapers. The reception accorded the star on his first visit to Boston was heartwarming. After cordial welcomes by Governor Cox of Massachusetts, Mayor Andrew J. Peters of Boston, and Mayor Edward Quinn of Cambridge, followed by three full days of activity in and around Boston, the star has returned to New York. According to present plans Mr. Ray will remain in the metropolis until Saturday December 17th, when he leaves for a brief tour of the South with stop-overs at Baltimore, Washington, Atlanta and New Orleans.

Companies Issue Statement on Proposed New Producers' and Distributors' Organization

A STATEMENT issued by the executive officers of the Vitagraph Company, Pathe Exchanges, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Fox Film Corporation and Universal Film Manufacturing Company follows:

"Within the past few weeks representatives of some of the most important producing and distributing companies met for the purpose of bringing into existence a new and important organization in the moving picture industry. Representatives of Vitagraph Company, Pathe Exchange, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Fox Film Corporation and Universal Film Manufacturing Company were the originators of the idea.

"The chief purpose of the proposed organization which would include practically all of the producing and distributing companies of the United States was to effect a better understanding of those interested in the production and distribution branches of the business and to work in harmony with the exhibitors. The general scope and plan called for much of the same work that is now being handled by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

"One of the outstanding features of the plan submitted was to secure the services of a man of national reputation to head this proposed trade organization, and one who was in no way directly or indirectly interested in the motion picture business. Many names were suggested, but no final choice has been made.

"A premature publication appeared in a New York newspaper on Thursday, December 8th, and indicated in the headline that this was a combine of various producing and distributing companies. This is absolutely untrue, and outside of the facts. No combine of any kind has been or is contemplated by those interested in launching the new organization, which is intended to function solely as like organizations in other industries.

"In addition to the above named the following companies indicated a willingness to join the proposed new association: Metro Pictures Corporation, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Associated First National Exhibitors, Inc., Triangle Film Corporation, United Artists Corporation, D. W. Griffith, Realart Pictures Corporation, R-C Pictures Corporation."

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS ON TIMELY TOPICS

Editor, Motion Picture News,
Dear Sir:

It was gratifying to read in today's press that the National Association of Motion Picture Industry is considering inviting Mr. Hayes, Mr. Hoover, or some other big man to head the organization.

Much good will result in this.

Those who have served in the past, are deserving of the greatest commendation and glory, and it is hard to believe that even a big man from the outside will understand our problems or handle them as well as they have, but the crux of the situation is this:

The public have been advised by fanatical fault finders that this industry "just runs wild." We know better. We know that every year, better and more wholesome motion pictures come to the screen, in fact, the professional reformers by their criticism have created almost a panicy condition, so that some producers are making pictures that are more of preachment than amusement. Are we about to get things mixed up? At this rate, may I ask—will we some day go to church for our amusement, and to the motion pictures for our religion?

The "big man" idea will satisfy the public that we have a united Industry with a guiding hand. The great mass of people are with us. They are not complaining, however, they don't want "just pictures," they want thrills, romance, and to live their dream life in the screen stories.

The next step would be to add all the Exhibitors organizations to the National Association under the same big leadership. This will allow the Industry to do those big things that neither the Producers, Distributors or Exhibitors can, do alone.

This movement would help us commercially, for the present system of trade in the Motion Picture Industry is more or less a civil warfare. We need more fair play, so that Exhibitors may make a good profit, and also the good pictures receive big rewards from Exhibitors in rentals.

I believe the rewards of this Industry belong to those who have built up the Industry and the time is coming when this needed spirit of fair play will prevail, and Producers, Distributors and Exhibitors will all help each other and stand together against outside drains.

When I was placed at the head of the Patterson Movement in Chicago, about two years ago, there was involved a principle in which there was to be a union between Exhibitors and Producers to enforce a given movement. From my many years of experience as an official, or the head of organizations in our Industry, I felt that only a big outside man would be able to put that movement over fairly and importially. Results since, have proven this.

In the short time between the Chicago and Cleveland Conventions, I found out it was possible to have a big man, and went so far as to send our Attorney to see Hon. William H. Taft personally, at Sioux City, Iowa, to present the proposition of becoming the head of Exhibitors, and found same was agreeable.

Baseball took up the "big man" idea and placed Hon. Judge Landis at the head of organized baseball, and although they have had a scandal in baseball, the public feel that all now is in good hands, and the former evils will not be repeated.

The "big man" movement could, perhaps should, have come from the Exhibitors. I brought Hon. Franklin S. Lane to Cleveland, hoping that the Exhibitors would catch the inspiration.

I believe if we had put over the "big man" idea at that time there would now be no legalized censorship in New York.

I believe that much of the criticism, mostly undeserved, that the Motion Picture Industry has received would never have occurred.

I believe that the workers in this industry would have found some way to help each other, and that this chopping at each other's necks, within the Industry, would have lessened.

The Chicago and Cleveland Conventions cost me thousands of dollars personally, and a lot of time.

These Conventions of Exhibitors promised to pay this expense, but within an hour after the close of the Cleveland Convention a movement was on foot, and even at the Executive Committee meeting that night, it was planned never to pay me. This is the usual results of political battles.

Some good friends who believed in my sincerity, personally came to the rescue some time after the National Exhibitors organizations had turned down my expense bill, and made a donation, for which I am grateful.

(I am not a politician, but as my experiences will certainly prevent me from ever getting mixed up again, and I have made money attending to my own business since that time. I have no complaint to make.)

I feel just a little elated and flattered to see the "big man" idea was worth while, and still lives. It was ridiculed at first, but as usual, an idea if right will in time, like truth, prevail.

Very cordially,

Frank J. Rembusch.

P. S.—The public is interested and took immediate notice of the press reports. I attended Rotary this evening and five men made mention of the good of a big man leadership of the Motion Picture.

Added Impetus to "Clean Up Week" Campaign

"Clean Up Week," December 24 to 31, has been given added impetus by the appointment of a committee by the executive board of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York state to complete arrangements with the F. I. L. M. Clubs of Albany, Buffalo, and New York City for equal representation on all Grievance Committees so that the work of adjusting all trade disputes may go forward without delay.

The "Clean Up Week" Committee, headed by William Marsh, reports great co-operation from both exhibitors and exchangemen in the campaign to settle all old grievances during the week of December 24-31 so that the new system can go into effect January 1st without any old entanglements to hamper it. Under the plan, every exhibitor is urged to settle up all questions at issue between himself and any exchange regarding play dates, payments or service.

New York Audience Votes Against Censorship

An overwhelming vote against legal and state censorship of motion pictures, as indicated by ballots already received, was recorded at Town Hall, Saturday evening, December 10th, when at a private showing of two films held by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, questionnaires were filled out by the audience and indicated an almost solid vote against mutilation of the pictures by censors.

"The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," a picture chosen as an Exceptional Photoplay by the Committee on Critique of the National Board last March, and "Shattered" which was likewise ranked as exceptional, were the two pictures screened.

Cohen Has No Comment to Make on Proposed Producers-Distributors' Organization

FOLLOWING a statement by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. of A., to the effect that he had no comment to make on the report that a new producers' and distributors' organization was being contemplated with Postmaster General Will H. Hays at the head, the daily papers of Wednesday, December 14, carried a dispatch that Mr. Hays had definitely declined to officiate as the head of the proposed organization.

In his statement, issued prior to the publication of the newspaper dispatch, Mr. Cohen declared:

"The only information we have on this subject is what appeared in the newspapers. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, comprising practically all of the motion picture theatre owners in the country, have not been consulted in this matter, and I have naturally no comment to make on the situation until it assumes more tangible shape.

"Meanwhile, we are glad that the campaign for clean, wholesome pictures has met with a pleasing reception everywhere, and we are gratified at the success already attained in this direction as evidenced in the excellent pictures now being produced."

The newspaper report carried in Wednesday morning's dailies had the following to say:

"Postmaster General Will H. Hays has definitely declined the post as 'high arbiter' of the motion picture industry of this country. It was learned yesterday the offer of the Chairmanship of the newly organized national association of film men, with a salary of $150,000 a year and a three-year contract, had been formally rejected by him with his thanks to the film representatives who had conveyed the proposition personally to him in Washington within the last few days.

"It is the belief of persons in the motion picture industry in New York, who also are closely in touch with the affairs and aspirations of the cinema leaders, that Mr. Hays's decision came as a result of his conviction that such a move by him, should he step out of the cabinet or attempt to manage the film affairs while still retaining his Government position, might reflect a shadow of collusion between motion picture industry and the Republican Administration."

To Arbitrate Exhibitor-Exchange Disputes

F. I. L. M. Club and Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce Agree on Non-Partisan Body

A SETTLEMENT has been reached by representatives of the New York F. I. L. M. Club and the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York with reference to the establishment of a non-partisan body to adjust all differences arising between exhibitors and exchangemen in the Metropolitan district.

A statement issued by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce concerning the arrangements follows:

"The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City after several weeks of conferences and discussions, finally came to an amicable agreement with reference to the appointment of a non-partisan body to hear and adjust all the differences that might arise between the exhibitor and the exchangeman in that territory, last Wednesday.

"The new rules and regulations provide that three members of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and three members of the F. I. L. M. Club, shall constitute a Board of Arbitration, with a chairman appointed by the Film Club to preside, who shall only vote in case of a tie. When the chairman votes, his act automatically leaves ground for an appeal to the Appeal Board, which shall consist of three members from the Chamber of Commerce and three members from the F. I. L. M. Club, however, with no chairman.

"The Joint Arbitration Board was provided with the following set of rules for their guidance, and a copy of these rules were mailed to every exhibitor and exchange in the territory over which the Board shall have jurisdiction.

"No. 1. The right of the Home Office of the Exchange to reject any application for contract within fourteen (14) days, shall not be abridged or denied.

"No. 2. That written contracts shall be binding on both parties; that oral evidence may be introduced and considered by the committee in all cases where the committee finds that oral evidence is necessary to explain the terms of the contract, but not to change the price of protection except in case of fraud or duress.

"No. 3. Any involuntary breach of a contract with respect to one picture in a contract for several pictures, shall not be deemed to constitute a breach of the en tire contract.

"No. 4. The Board of Arbitration shall not deem it a breach of contract for an Exchange to fail to deliver a motion picture to an exhibitor in the event said exhibitor has failed to comply with the demand of any Exchange made pursuant to the terms of its contract, and to the rule of the F. I. L. M. Club, for additional security not exceeding the sum of $250. to insure the safe return of its film, with the provision however, that the F. I. L. M. Club as a body, on behalf of their respective members, shall guarantee the carrying out of the decisions against individual exchanges, handed down by the Joint Arbitration Board and that no judgment shall be taken by default, except after a judgment is allowed by the Joint Arbitration Board after a hearing of the parties.

"No. 5. The Board of Arbitration shall deem existing contracts and unpaid accounts, binding upon the new owner, assignee of lease or purchaser of stock in the corporation, in any theatre, but shall not be binding upon the new owner of a theatre which has been closed for a period of more than thirty days, where such sale, transfer of lease or assignment of stocks has not been made by the former operator of the theatre.

"President William Brandt of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce expressed himself as being exceedingly happy over the adoption of the idea and said that he considered the Joint Arbitration Board the greatest achievement of his administration. Already requests have been received from other Film Centers for a copy of these rules, so that other key cities can operate under a similar arrangement.

"President Brandt paid special tribute to I. E. Chadwick, President of the Film Club, for his courteous manner, for his tact and for his readiness and ability to serve in having the rules adopted.

"The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at their last meeting, ratified the adoption of a resolution whereby each of the Theatre members, will contribute the equivalent of the tax saved under the new tax law which will become operative on Jan. 1, 1922, for the week starting Jan. 1st to Jan. 7th, inclusive, to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in recognition for their services rendered in eliminating this 5% tax on film rentals. The members expressed themselves as being jubilant at an opportunity to show their appreciation and their enthusiasm was reflected by the fact that they rose en-masse and cheered when the resolution was adopted."

Prominent Banker Is Appointed Chairman of Famous Players-Lasky Finance Committee

THE Irving National Bank announces that Mr. Frederic G. Lee has resigned as vice-chairman of the bank to accept the active chairmanship of the Finance Committee of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, but will continue his connection with the bank as one of its valued directors.

Mr. Lewis E. Pierson, chairman of the board, Irving National Bank, in commenting, said:

"We shall all miss Mr. Lee very much. We have known for some time that his services have been sought by Mr. Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Zukor has finally induced Mr. Lee to enter his company actively in order to contribute a trained and expert judgment upon its financial matters. Mr. Lee, in leaving his splendid banking position with us, has entered a field not in the least new to him as his study of the moving picture industry, and particularly the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been most intimate and has extended over a period of years.

"Mr. Lee's services to our stockholders and to the banking community have been most valuable. We believe that his brilliant career as a banker may be but a forecast of the success which awaits him in his new enterprise. When we first became acquainted with Mr. Lee he was secretary of the Broadway Trust Company at Broadway and Eighth street, an institution then possessing resources of about $4,000,000. Later he assumed the presidency of the Broadway Trust Company, in which capacity he served until the merger of the Broadway Trust Company, whose name had been changed to the Irving Trust Company, by this time an institution possessing resources of over $80,000,000,with the Irving National Bank. During this entire period of about fourteen years, the history of Mr. Lee's administration is one of success and popularity."

Mr. Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in confirming the announcement of the election of Mr. Lee as chairman of the Finance Committee of his corporation, said:

"Mr. Lee's acceptance of this chairmanship makes me very happy indeed. Mr. Lee has been my valued friend for years, indeed, ever since I first became interested in motion picture production. He was the first banker in the United States to make a study of the motion picture business and to recognize it as a sound investment, and he welcomed the business of picture producers long before other bankers had come to recognize the sound business possibilities of the screen.

"Mr. Lee is particularly valuable to Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and to the entire industry since he knows both picture business and finance. His financial experience has been unusually thorough. He was president of the Irving Trust Company until it was merged with the Irving National Bank and has been a very important factor in the success of the latter."

HOW SOME ARE "SEEING IT THROUGH"

This contest, instituted with the purpose of aiding exhibitors everywhere through mutual interchange of ideas, closed Dec. 14. All articles submitted prior to that date will be considered as eligible to the prizes that will be awarded those adjudged best.

Raised Standard—and Prices

Having been an exploitation man and theatre manager for big exhibitor interests during the past ten years, including the advertising managership of the Finkelstein & Ruben interests in St. Paul and theater manager for the Southern Enterprises, Inc., of Atlanta, I decided at length to get a house of my own. My financial status did not allow of me taking over the sort of theater I had been used to managing, so I struck out for the small towns. And I certainly picked an excellent year for the test.

This town, of 3,000 population, has a theater more befitting a city of 35,000. In the six years of its existence it has never made money, except possibly an occasional spurt. Naturally, it was largely dependent on the farmers. We were not getting 20% of the farmers we generally do in ordinary times. I was up against it. Running but three nights a week had been tried before I came. It didn't work. Anyway, I abhor the idea. My predecessor, who decided he would go back to the occupation he came from, was running five changes a week, four of which were ordinary program pictures, with the Friday-Saturday picture being the only real feature. That made everything depend on Friday and Saturday. If it rained it always meant a big loss on the week. The only thing to do was interest the town people—particularly those who seldom attended the movies. We immediately booked all big features and ran everything two days—some even three. This did not make our film rental a bit more—nor did we "fudge,"—we put every cent they had been paying for the two pictures into the one—and WE RAISED THE ADMISSION PRICE. (Don't tell Paul Brunet or Elmer Pearson.) We now are playing regularly to 60% more people on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday than the house has EVER played to, times good or bad. We are not getting any more farmers. It's no use trying. They simply haven't the money—but we are getting 60% more of the town people and can't go down the street without having some one stop us and thank us for giving Cresco big pictures. We are not giving them any bigger pictures than they were getting on Friday and Saturday before we came—but we are giving them to them ALL THE TIME—and at not a cent of additional cost to us.

Though this is our first experience in a small town, we've learned that the thing to do is give up trying to get the farmers, who haven't the money, and go after those who have. There's enough in every small town—if they can be properly educated—and good pictures all the time are the only necessary lessons.

I cannot possibly understand why exhibitors close certain nights per week when they can run the night they are closed at very little expense, by running fewer and better features. We put the high priced features to a very vigorous test here. Not only did they get us the extra money we were paying for them, but more than 200% additional profit (over what we were previously getting). It sounds like stretching things to give them "The Affairs of Anatol," Nazimova and Wallace Reid in one week—with no others, but it has put the profit on the right side of the books here—and a worth-while profit.

I think the reduction of prices is a great mistake. It tends to cheapen the industry and the public is more than getting its money's worth at present prices. Cheaper admissions mean cheaper rentals. Cheaper rentals must mean cheaper productions and cheaper productions mean less people at the theater. Where is the gain? I refer strictly to small towns in this, where your drawing capacity is so greatly limited. We cautiously tried out a big reduction in price here and didn't get an increase of one patron. We raised the price 30%, the standard of pictures 80% and we have increased profits (not attendance) 200%. The attendance has, of course, increased in proportion, in spite of the raise in admission prices.

There are not as many people attending the theater as did in the "boom" times and there's no way, in our opinion, of getting that many back until times adjust themselves. The thing to do is go after the people who have the money, charge them what your offering is worth and give them the very best in pictures the market affords. It costs no more when pictures are run long enough and the decrease in these times in attendance makes for much longer runs—even in small towns.

FREDERICK C. HINDS,

Operates Economically

We have a cozy clean theatre, with a seating capacity of five hundred persons, and depend entirely on neighborhood patronage—transient patronage being so limited as to be practically nil.

"Seeing it through" has been as trying a problem with us as it has been with others; but the lessons we have learned through experience will in future be worth many times what it has cost in dollars and cents—we have learned that economy in operation is not only a good precept in dull times, but a tremendous asset in more prosperous periods when practiced to fortify one for just such occasions as we are passing through and which we hope will soon be in retrospect.

As an eminent statesman once remarked: "The way to resume is to resume," and the only way to reduce expenses is to reduce. Our problems were no greater nor more difficult than those of our fellow exhibitors, but only seemed so from being our own.

Early we appreciated that the malignant conditions required heroic treatment, and without wasting time finding out what "the other fellow" was going to do about it we set to work in an effort to cure our own ills. Of course, we could have cut the quality of our entertainment—but what folly to drive our remaining business away. Instead we raised the standard of our pictures, showing them three days, rather than two as formerly, thus reducing our film cost. Then we increased our advertising, using newer methods and better mediums, and invading territory we had practically neglected before. In addition, we advertised and made a feature of better and higher class music, giving a double feature show on zero days, with an occasional night of vaudeville or amateur stunts and contests and a serial at the Sunday matinee.

The question of entertainment disposed of, came consideration of the price of admission. We decided to assume the war tax and advertised the even prices of ten, fifteen and twenty cents, eliminating the odd pennies of change and facilitating the work of the box office; this was a winning feature from the first with our patrons, and attendance began to improve until it has now reached almost or quite normal, depending entirely on the attraction.

Relying, as we do, entirely on neighborhood patronage we had groups of congenial neighbors who preferred sitting together night after night, practically in the same locations, thus dispensing with the necessity for ushers, so we had a competent doorman to direct strangers and transients to available seats and cut off the cost of ushers from our pay roll. Other incidental work about the theatre was divided between those interested with the result that the only salaries we now have are for operator and musicians. We reduced our light and fuel bills by advancing the time of each show by fifteen minutes.

Our patrons seem to like what changes we have made, and we are all happily awaiting the return of normalcy.

Shifts His Bills

This is a town of about 8,000 people, with three shows, two first class and one shooting gallery. We have not made a crop in two years and have had no rain for nearly a year. Prospects are FINE.

But we are holding our own and making a little money and this is how we do it.

Experience has taught us that we can't play only straight program pictures and make any money. We must have the big ones. We first tried two big pictures a week, playing each of them two days, but found this was too much big pictures.

Now we play program pictures on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays of each week and outside of a small space in the newspaper, on playdate, we do no more advertising on these subjects.

On Thursdays and Fridays, one week, we play a special at regular prices and the following week play an extra special at advanced prices. We advertise the first special about a week before date of exhibition and on the extra special announce it two weeks in advance and go the limit in advertising it.

We contract for three days on the big pictures and on Saturday morning give a special matinee for school children. We pack them in at reduced prices, usually at 15c. on a picture which would have cost them 25c. to see on the two previous days. This picture is taken off at 2 P. M. and the program changed.

We make the rounds of the schools and by giving a pass to each teacher, reach every child in the schools, announcing the bargain matinee. This is the only possible way we can line up the kids. Heralds and Newspapers will not get them in.

We have a perambulator which is moved around town on an auto truck. Each side will hold a six and two three-sheets. From the bed of the truck we hang banners and a boy sits inside the perambulator, singing a song. It costs about $20 a day to move this around town but it's more than worth the money. We put it out only on the Thursdays and Fridays on which we run the super specials.

On the Saturdays on which we do not have the children's matinee we open at eleven in the morning and grind all day, giving a bargain matinee from eleven to two, at which time the price of admission is only about half of what it is after 2 P. M. They are eating this up and there is a mad scramble to get to the box office, the last few minutes before two.

We employ no one not actually needed. Business, good or bad, we try not to neglect anything about the appearance of the house, inside or out. The brass is kept polished, flowers mopped, glass cleaned, burned out globes replaced and we open for business RIGHT whether we take in one dollar or a hundred.

"Let 'Em Hear You"

In accepting your kind invitation to contribute something from the exhibitor's point of view on the many problems that now confront us, I am influenced more by a desire to participate in the benefits to be derived from this interchange of experience and opinion among us than by any hope to win one of the prizes you so generously offered.

This little town has a population of approximately 1200; our little theatre (motion pictures only) furnishes about the only form of indoor amusement outside of an occasional ball, so it would be nothing short of a calamity if it was forced to close its doors.

When I took over the management of this theatre I "Bit off a mouthful," never having had any experience with the movies except as an ardent fan.

I found myself confronted by the same problems that confront so many exhibitors in small towns, several houses having closed down because they could not afford to operate at a loss. (Who can?)

But I am aware that every business has its problems, so does the small boy realize that every properly constructed doughnut has its hole in the center; he is also wise to the fact that no great amount of nourishment can be gotten by gazing at that hole, furthermore, he knows if he treats that doughnut as a real healthy boy ought to treat a real doughnut, the hole will disappear. Does he hesitate? I'll say he don't.

My problem, or doughnut, was a trifle more difficult than the boy's in that it had two holes, i.e. expenses too high, receipts too low.

I put or divide the expense in three items, viz, overhead, film rental and advertising. The overhead is still overhead and will be as long as the roof stays over head. Now I differ very much with the man who says we should not expect the distributor to reduce rentals, he's the bird I'm shooting at; let him pass it along to the producer and the producer can trim off some of fabulous sums paid to stars; stars could twinkle for a little less and still twinkle brightly.

But the problem to which I devoted my thought and energy was how to increase the receipts via the box office.

The most prominent factor to be reckoned with in the proper solution of this problem is the third item of expense mentioned, i, e, advertising.

While I have been successful in securing substantial reductions in film rental, this saving has been more than expended in additional advertising.

Why, bless you! I don't only advertise in this town and surrounding country but in two neighboring towns, both larger than this one and both having fine opera houses.

I do not know how true is the old saying that "All the world loves a lover" but I am quite certain the world cottons to an advertising man.

When I buy a super-special, I do super-special advertising; I don't buy them often, but put them across when I do.

While the profits for this theatre for the three months I have managed it are still within the first million, it is on the map as a paying institution. Let exhibitors exercise the greatest care in the selection of pictures, then, having satisfied themselves that they have something worth advertising, then, brother, go to it, ADVERTISE, EXPLOIT, HOLLER, do any old thing to let the people know that you are alive, alive to their interests as well as your own. ABOVE ALL, QUIT LOOKING AT THE HOLE IN THE DOUGHNUT.

PETER BYLSMA,
Mgr. Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La.

Has Five Principles

Having been in the picture business for the past 15 years, I believe I'm qualified to enter this contest, more especially considering that the past nine years have been spent in a cotton country, where the fleecy staple has sold for as low as 3c. per lb., middling basis, and as high as 40c., and during these years some of the most depressing conditions have prevailed. But at no time has it found the firm of Gwynn & Byar without a comfortable cash balance in the bank. The worst season we've ever experienced is now on us, and while we feel the pinch, we are managing to "keep out" of the red," and attribute our success to having built up a reputation of square dealing, honest advertising; a single admission price and conservative buying of film. This, in conjunction with the five great principles that make any business a success, i. e., cleanliness, quality, courtesy, comfort and conservative and judicious advertising. The first is a pleasure to a theatre owner, as well as to his patrons. The second is an assurance within itself. The third is of utmost importance, as a pleasant "I thank you" from the ticket seller is a valuable asset to any business, but the rummies that stand like statuary at the front door to say "Good evening, sir," is an abomination.

"Seeing It Through"

The front door is the manager's place as the folks file out of the theatre. That's where he feels his patrons' pulse, and learns the greatest percentage that the different class of picture appeals too. As to comfort, I refer to seats and ventilation. A twelve or twenty dollar seat that cramps the patron cannot exist, even against a competitor that would use cane bottom chairs and makes his patrons comfortable. Ventilation is an essential feature in comfort. Lastly advertising. We spread it on too thick sometimes regarding certain pictures that do find favor with the majority of our patrons, thus they leave our houses disappointed. The next time we have something big to advertise, Mrs. Smith will phone Mrs. Jones and ask if she has ever seen the picture and what she thinks of it, which indicates we have, through over-advertising, lost the confidence of one of our good patrons. I've always found it to be an excellent idea to dispense with the much abused word "best" altogether. If any man who operates a theatre that is losing money will adapt himself to the principle of putting himself in his patron's place, he will immediately see much of a change in his business. E. L. Byar,
Lyric Theatre, Terrell, Texas.

Ten Suggestions

In order to make a theatre pay under present business conditions, especially one that is situated in a small town, I offer the following ten suggestions:

1. Be careful when dealing with companies that want you to buy a lot of their pictures in order to sell you one of their big specials. Nine times out of ten, although the special may bring you money, the other pictures will not. So what's the use? Either get the special alone or nothing.

2. Get out of the habit of paying the leading film corporations big prices for features that you know are only program pictures, just because their reputations as producers are big. You can get the same class of pictures from smaller companies at lower prices.

3. When you get hold of a real big picture play it at least two days at advanced admission prices. And, by the way, every small-town theatre should play a big picture at least once a month in order to keep up its prestige with the public.

4. Let the merchants in your town advertise on your theatre programs. Try to get enough advertisements to cover the entire cost of the programs.

5. Run matinees on Saturdays and Holidays for the women and children. It's a paying proposition.

6. If you have no competition and are keeping open six nights a week and do not make out exceptionally good, cut down your schedule to four nights a week. You will find that the total of the week's receipts on the four-night-a-week policy is just about the same as the six-night, and then you save two picture rentals and cut down overhead expenses quite a little.

7. Always be on the lookout in the News and other trade papers for new ideas in exploitation and lobby displays. You will discover many great stunts in putting over pictures. Some of the stunts

8. Always remember that "advertising pays in the long run."

9. Have frequent personal talks with exhibitors of other towns. Tell them your ideas, and they in return will tell you theirs. In this way, you will learn a lot of little things you never knew before that you should have known.

10. Vary your program. Arrange your bookings so that you have a different kind of picture each night during the week. Give the short subjects consideration. Good short subjects mean something these days. Run double features and "all comedy nights" once in a while. Variety of program means as much to the exhibitor as variety of diet means to the stomach. The new corporation plans to finance productions for the independent market.

Cohen and Walker Speak

Senator Walker's statements supplemented by those of Mr. Cohen, and the interesting controversy in which Mr. Mandelbaum participated, produced the very best of feeling among the exhibitors and the next business was the election of officers, which resulted as follows:

President Martin G. Smith, Toledo; Vice-President, at large, A. G. Hettesheimer, Cincinnati; First Vice-President, D. S. Schumann, Cleveland; Second Vice-President, Wm. James, Columbus; Treasurer, John Kumler, Toledo; Secretary, Al. G. Kinzler, Dayton.

Board of Directors: Judge Foster, Marion; W. H. Price, Norwalk; John Bieverson, Jr., Delaware; Fred Tynes, Portsmouth. Two additional directors are to be elected at a meeting in the southern part of the state next month as well as an additional Vice-President.

Resolutions were adopted indorsing the public service work of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and condemning the imposition of distributing companies overcharging for advertising and other accessories and demanding that this practice cease for the benefit of the

Raymond Cavanagh Joins Russell Clark Sales

Russell Clark, of the Russell Clark Sales Syndicate, Inc., presenting independent productions in the state rights field, has selected Raymond Cavanagh, for a number of years with the Universal, to handle the advertising and publicity of the syndicate.

The Russell Clark Sales Syndicate is shortly to offer on the state right market "The Love Slave," an European production, starring Lucy Doraine, last seen here in "Good and Evil." The story has for its setting the Orient and Paris.

Although not yet formally offered, the sale of the New York rights to the First National Exchange is already reported by Russell Clark.

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Sheik—
Knocked 'em dead, especially the women and younger set. Good for two weeks at good prices. (Middle West.)

Drew capacity houses for two weeks. Critics proclaimed action dragging at times, but public liked it and clamored for more. (Middle West.)

Hundreds saw the picture twice. Second week as big as first runs on ordinary plays. (Middle West.)

Held up very well on third week of run. (West.)

Drew splendidly. (East.)

One of the best box office attractions in months. Played to 55,000 persons the first week. (Middle West.)

Don't Tell Everything—
Good picture with strong drawing power owing to popularity of Wallace Reid and Gloria Swanson. Played to such big business we are holding it second week. (Middle West.)

The stars in this picture, Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson and Elliott Dexter, made exploitation unnecessary. A good week's business. (Middle West.)

Very good picture. (South.)

Three Word Brand—
A fine production. Had dandy business with it. (East.)

The Great Moment—
A big campaign on this picture to produce more than average business. Good picture. (West.)

Exit the Vamp—
Good picture with more than usual business. (West.)

The Bonnie Brier Bush—
Fell down at the box office. Business was way below average. (East.)

White and Unmarried—
Meighan has made better pictures. Added attraction helped business considerably. (Middle West.)

Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford—
Pleased some — disappointed others. Receipts pleasing, especially latter part of week. (East.)

Under the Lash—
Because of the popularity of Gloria Swanson, this picture pulled them in, but patrons did not care for the story and the star is miscast. (East.)

Good story, poor character work. Gloria Swanson entirely out of place. Forced to pull picture off on fourth day. (Middle West.)

White Oak—
William Hart is popular here, but inclement weather reduced the attendance. Only an average week's run. (Middle West.)

Found this quite a good bet. Business very good. (West.)

The Call of the North—
Very good feature and business held up well during its run here. (Middle West.)

Went over big at my house. Splendid production. (Middle West.)

Typical Northern picture, with numerous thrills and beautiful scenery. Holt does excellent work and the film pleased. Good box office value. (Middle West.)

Experience—
Did extra fine business with this feature. Great picture. (East.)

The Great Impersonation—
Pleasing. Receipts fair. (East.)

Poor picture. Lacks continuity. Couldn't follow it at all if you had not read the book. Mediocre business. (Middle West.)

A Prince There Was—
Didn't go over very well. Picture too mild. No pep. Gets tiresome. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Tol'able David—
Very good picture with fine box office value. Business better at every showing. Think this is the kind of picture people want. (Middle West.)

Wonderful picture with strong dramatic moments relieved by clever humor. Played to excellent business and pleased audiences. (Middle West.)

Well liked in many quarters and in some hailed as a masterpiece. Receipts O. K. (East.)

Her Social Value—
Not up to the standard of this star's productions, but drew well because of popularity of star here. (Middle West.)

Not good—business bad. (Middle West.)

The Lotus Eater—
Not a very big success. People who took it seriously did not appear to enjoy it, but those who caught the spirit in which it was intended liked it. Opinion of patrons was distinctly divided. (Middle West.)

Woman's Place—
Constance Talmadge is always certain of good support here. A lively week's business. (Middle West.)

The Invisible Fear—
Fairly good entertainment. Average box office value. (West.)

One Arabian Night—
Satisfactory results on two weeks' run. (West.)

Foolish Matrons—
Went over great. Larger box office receipts than usual. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Conflict—
As full of thrills as a serial. Played to big houses without added attractions. (Middle West.)

This one went over well. Pleased patrons and did a good business for a week. (Middle West.)

The Fox—
Fair Western picture. Appealed to the less critical. Good business. (Middle West.)

Moonlight Follies—
Fairly good picture, business medium. (Middle West.)

Went over big. Had good business on it. (Middle West.)

Red Courage—
Business not very good, pretty good picture. (Middle West.)

The Millionaire—

GOLDWYN

Poverty of Riches—
Good picture though business was not as good as usual. (West.)

Went over great. Business fine. (West.)

The Old Nest—
Second run here and did fairly well, but not quite as well as had been hoped for. Elaborate lobby display, probably the most elaborate ever staged here, helped much, but did not pull it over for the full week. (South.)

A Poor Relation—
Will Rogers is popular here. The picture drew a good attendance for the week. (Middle West.)

Doubling for Romeo—
Was one of the sensational successes of the year. Packed 'em in at every show. A wonderful picture, exceptionally well directed and acted with consummate art. (Middle West.)

The Night Rose—
A good picture and one that seemed to please. (West.)

FOX

Over the Hill—
Created more favorable comment than any picture ever played here. Packed houses first week. (Middle West.)

Second week hit strong. Public still talking about it. (Middle West.)

Closed a seven weeks' run here, playing to over 150,000 at 50 cent price. (Middle West.)

A weak ending to a five weeks' run. Opinions on the picture divided. Good audience picture, however, especially for neighborhood house. (Middle West.)

Queen of Sheba—
Broke all records and is being used for third successive week. Capacity audiences have signified unqualified approval of this feature. (Middle West.)

Perjury—
Picture and business both only fair. (East.)

The Mysterious Rider—
Good picture with better business than usual. (West.)

REALART

Hush Money—
Fairly good picture. Business just so-so. (Middle West.)

Dawn of the East—
Fair, but nothing extra. It was helped by the reputation of Miss Brady who is right popular with our fans. The picture did pretty good business, taken all in all. (South.)

One Wild Week—
Mediocre production with business about as usual. (Middle West.)

Morals—
Fairly good picture with fair business. (West.)

WID GUNNING

Quo Vadis—
Pretty good business on reshowing. Cannot be too strongly recommended. (Middle West.)

Girl From God's Country—
Fine feature and fine business. (Middle West.)

"Why Girls Leave Home" Exploited in Novel Fashion

"Why Girls Leave Home" was exploited in novel fashion by Managing Director Harry L. Greenman of the William Fox-Liberty theatre in St. Louis.

Securing the consent of the mothers of the girls, Manager Greenman had three young women disappear. The fact of their disappearance was widely heralded in the newspapers and great interest in their cases was aroused.

Then Greenman issued a public appeal to the ministers of St. Louis to preach on the subject of "Why Girls Leave Home." He next appealed to the clubwomen and the leading city officials to take an active interest in the campaign against the inducing of young girls to leave their homes.

When interest had thus been kindled far and wide through the St. Louis territory, Manager Greenman advertised the engagement of the picture.

Mangan Stages Prologue for "Queen of Sheba"

An original prologue and interlude for "The Queen of Sheba" was one of the features of the showing of the picture recently at the Allen theatre, Montreal.

The number, staged by Francis A. Mangan, utilized the services of Florence Rogge, danseuse; an ensemble and ballet corps, and Noel Traverse, basso.

The prologue was entitled "The Triumph of Sheba" and the interlude "Less Than Dust."

In the latter number Mr. Traverse rendered "Less Than Dust" on a side stage and on the finale of the last verse a tableau with a girl driving two white horses to a chariot was revealed. The stage setting represented an ancient Roman amphitheatre.

Plunkett Stages Classic Prologue Number

"Place de la Revolution" was the title of a most appropriate prologue which Managing Director Joseph Plunkett originated for the recent showing of "All for a Woman" at the New York Mark Strand theatre. Mr. Plunkett took the most impressionable bit of action from the film—the guillotine scene—and by providing a stage setting, props, lighting effects and music, and securing the services of a talented cast, costumed appropriately, reproduced it in every practical detail.

"Robespierre" (Litolf) was played by the Mark Strand orchestra and when the music describing the stirring scenes of the French revolution was reached the curtains were parted showing the stage setting illustrated by the cut appearing on the opposite page. An announcer, guarded on each side by a soldier, made an entrance and read the death proclamation. As he neared the last sentence, the lights, which had been dimmed, went up, revealing a property guillotine and a mob about it as a victim was led out for execution.

The number was extraordinary in conception and execution and a distinct embellishment to the screening of the picture.

"Molly O" Prologue Pleases

S. Barrett McCormick's Latest Number Rich in Atmosphere

AN "all-Irish" prologue under the title of "An Irish Cinderella" is S. Barrett McCormick's latest prologue number staged at the Allen theatre, Cleveland, of which Mr. McCormick is managing director. The picture for which this number served was "Molly-O."

Following is Mr. McCormick's own description of "An Irish Cinderella":

"An Irish Cinderella" was a little fantasy in song and color with an intent at the whimsical, a little humor and a lot of beauty. The curtains open upon a fairyland setting done entirely in various tones of green, with green lights, playing upon the modernistic design. A young Irishman enters and then a colleen. There is a little flirtation between the two during which the young Irishman sings the chorus of "The Top o' the Mornin'." There is a little coquetry on the part of the colleen, who exits after the song, and the orchestra takes up the opening strains of "Mother Machree," sung by the young Irishman. At the finish of this he takes a seat on an old stump when a little child rushes in saying: "Oh, Uncle Dinty! Tell me a story, a fairy tale." "Sure and it's a fairy tale ye'd be after having me tell ye," with which he takes the little child up on his lap and starts the story, "Once upon a time there was a little Cinderella, an Irish Cinderella, Molly—Molly O'Dair was her name," and just at this time, as though in a vision, the little Cinderella walks into the scene. The man is of course oblivious to this action, which is supposed to be the vision seen through the eyes of the child. An old witch enters and the man continues his talk. "Little Cinderella was very sad because she could not go to the grand ball where the King of Ireland and all the grand ladies were to be," and tells of the witch's promise to make her a grand lady, with which Cinderella follows her off-stage. Then comes a drum call and the grand procession starts, all of which is described by the man to the child, the coming of King Michael O'Flannigan, the beautiful ladies of the court all dressed in green and shamrocks, the coming of Prince Charming—Prince Patrick O'Brien—who fell in love with the Irish Cinderella and carried her away to his castle in Killarney where they lived happily ever after. The procession starts moving off the stage, the lights are dimming, the child struggles up into Dinty's arms and goes to sleep and he starts to sing an Irish lullaby, and just as the last characters of this dream have faded away he carries her off the stage, the curtains close and the picture "Molly-O" starts upon the screen.

Greenman Uses Clever Stunts on "Queen of Sheba"

Some clever ideas were utilized by Managing Director Harry Greenman of the William Fox-Liberty theatre of St. Louis in advertising and exploiting the "Queen of Sheba."

First of all—and perhaps most important from a publicity standpoint—Manager Greenman invited and had as his guests every newspaper man in the city of St. Louis at a private showing of the picture. Cigars and cigarettes in abundance were passed around and the newspaper men were permitted to smoke and thoroughly enjoy themselves during the showing of the picture.

A young woman of pulchritude and stage ability was selected to impersonate the Queen and in a downtown store window she held forth. Co-operation of one of the leading women's stores was secured through permitting the woman thus attired to advertise hair nets. Great crowds were attracted by this novel stunt.

This cut shows some of the exploitation which Harry Greenman, manager of the Liberty theatre, St. Louis, used to put over "The Queen of Sheba"

Football Players Guests of Strand Theatre

One of the exploitation ideas used in ddition to a special showing for minis-rs for the run of "Over the Hill" at the rand theatre in Iowa City, Iowa, was e inviting of the now famous Iowa foot-ll squad to see an evening performance the picture.

Lowell Cash, Fox exploitation man, is-ed a special invitation to the captain of e team, and Mr. Devine accepted for the uad. The letter of invitation was print-in the college paper, the Daily Iowan, d is said to be the first bit of picture blicity ever given in this paper.

lath's Mechanical Lobby Display for "The Speed Girl"

A hand-painted automobile with a pic-re of Bebe Daniels cut from a three-eet placed in the driver's seat and heels that were kept spinning by means a motor placed back of the cut-out was e centre of interest recently in the lobby Hugo Plath's Gem theatre, Palestine, xas..

The stunt was pulled as exploitation for The Speed Girl" and it attracted a lot attention. The accompanying cut ows a view of Mr. Plath's ingenious ntraption.

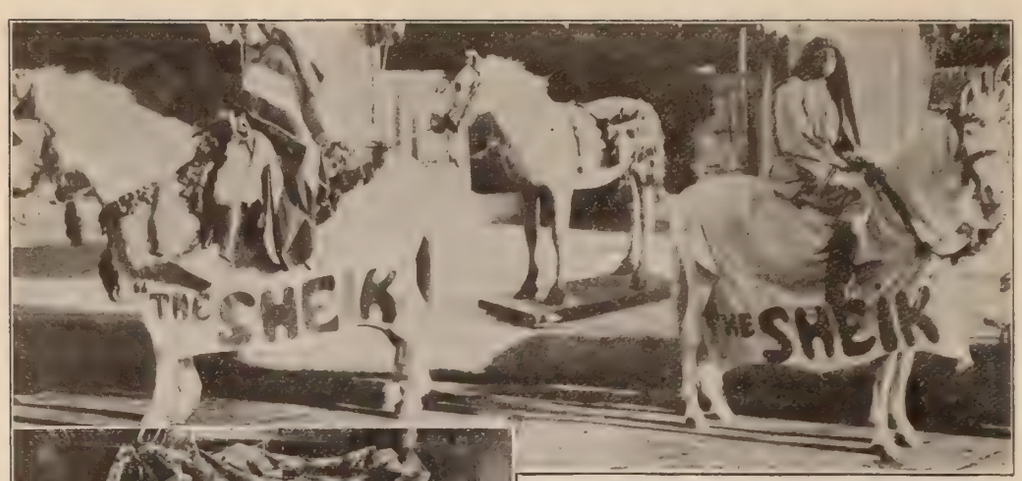
Snell Gets Attention of American Legion Post

Assistant Manager Snell, of the Imperial theatre, Gadsden, Ala., tied up effectively with an American Legion Hallowe'en banquet to boost "The Birth of a Nation." The dining-room was darkened as the guests entered, with the exception of candles inside of the pumpkins, and one large light at the head of the table which blazed over the largest pumpkin at the feast, on which Mr. Snell placed his card announcing the attraction. Using the lone spot of light in the room was effective, but if any of the 350 guests did miss it they found the magazine of the same on the back of every chair. And the chairman of the post spoke a few words in commendation of the film, so no angle was overlooked.

Tack Cards with Novel Catch Line Used on "Conflict"

Red cards that had as a catch line "Don't Mutilate This Tree," with advertising for "Conflict" following, were tacked on all available trees by Manager Howard J. Smith of the Palace theatre, Buffalo, during the recent engagement of the above-mentioned picture.

It was the first time that such a stunt had been pulled in Buffalo and it attracted a lot of attention.



Another good stunt was a tie-up with the Buffalo Times through which Mr. Smith used a lot of space at the display rate and in return got a lot of free stories and cuts of the star. Mr. Smith also put over a front-page story, under a New York date line, to the effect that Miss Dean had almost lost her insurance policies for her daring in "Conflict."

An attractive herald, with a striking photo of Miss Dean on the front page, was distributed throughout the city.

A doubling up of the usual newspaper advertising and in eye-catching lobby, display brought in the best business since last winter.

Charters Street Car to Bill "Three Musketeers"

Many novel exploitation ideas were used during the engagement of "The Three Musketeers" at the Mishler theatre, Altoona, Pa. A week before the showing the City of Altoona and the surrounding country were thoroughly 24-sheeted and many hundreds of window-cards distributed in the most advantageous show windows.

On the day of the opening of the picture a street car was chartered. It was completely circled with banners and streamers. Inside the car was a brass band. The car made a two-hour circuit of the city, taking in both the West and East side.

An artistic book display taking the entire window of a department store was another attractive feature of the advertising campaign inaugurated.

A dollar day with the slogan "All for one and one for all!" was used in all the newspaper advertising, prominently mentioning the Fairbanks production. On that same day another department store had several thousand shopping bags with a cut and descriptive matter printed on the bags, which were distributed among the hundreds of shoppers who were attracted to the stores for the dollar-day campaign.

Five thousand circulars appealing to the school children were printed and distributed among the elementary and high schools by a corps of men, during the noon recess and the letting out of school in the afternoon.

Artistic cards were placed in the various stores of the city.

The usual number of bill boards were covered throughout the city and hundreds of smaller sizes of paper distributed in advantageous places.

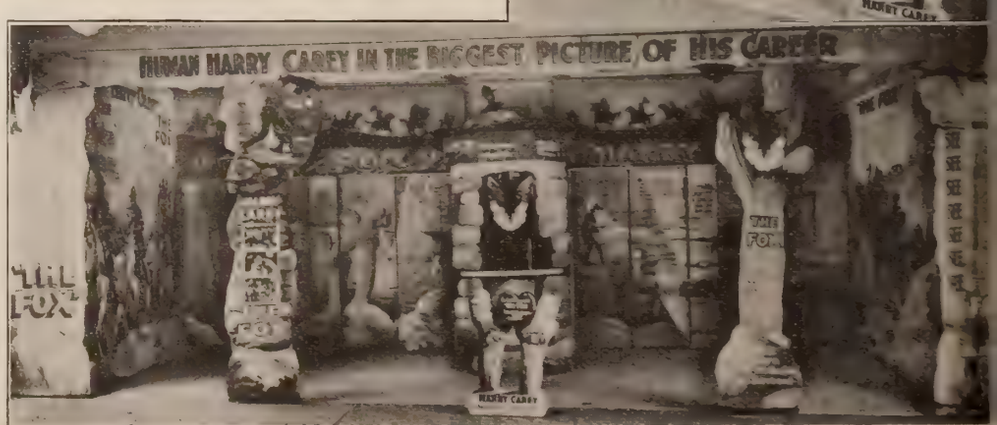
Altoona Campaign for "Over the Hill"

"Read a Book" Week, in conjunction with an essay contest conducted by one of the leading department stores of Altoona, Pa., was the salient feature of the exploitation of "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court" during its run in that city at the Capitol theatre, under the management of Anast N. Natopoulos.

The plan was one of reciprocal interest, and the expense of that part of the exploitation campaign which included the department store was borne entirely by it. With the assistance of a Fox representative, arrangements were completed for an elaborate indoor and window display of Mark Twain's works—single volumes and sets. Large placards in the windows urged people to "read a Mark Twain book, this week, and see 'A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court' at the Capitol theatre."

An advertising campaign was arranged by the department store for school children of the town. Prizes were to be awarded to the children writing the best essays on Mark Twain's novel from which the motion picture was adapted. The prizes were to be copies of the book, and passes to see the picture. The entire plan was put into operation several days before the "Yankee" was presented at the Capitol.

Gerbracht's Presentatio of "Old Nest" Goes B



Joe Gerbracht, manager of the P cess theatre, Ames, Iowa, put on a m cal presentation for "The Old Ne which will repay careful study on part of other small-town exhibitors.

Two singers were used in mus numbers that fitted the spirit of the p toplay and they "certainly supplied mighty kick to the whole presentatio says Mr. Gerbracht in his account of matter. The program was opened w "Timely Topics" and "Screen Sn shots," Mr. Gerbracht feeling that comedy subject should be shown w "The Old Nest." Then a young man about twenty, with a fine tenor vo sang "Little Mother of Mine" a "Mother of My Heart."

Then, with amber spotlight play upon him, the scene faded into Hughes film. When the picture had p gressed to the scene in which the mot says, "Don't take on like that; just w until I make you a cup of tea," and g to the window and sees a bird with l young in the nest, Mr. Gerbracht stopp the picture and faded a spot on a violi who played Shubert's Serenade, a back to the picture without a pause.

Then close to the final scene, wh the lawyer son returns home and sits his mother's lap, the singer at one si of the stage and the violinist at the oth without spotlights, played "Mother Mine," finishing as the last fade-c clears.

Hyman's "Lotus Eater" Prologue Is Atmospheric

John Barrymore was impersonated in a prologue staged to precede "The Lotus Eater" when it was played at the Brooklyn Mark Strand, Managing Director Edward L. Hyman arranging a typical South Sea festival for the novelty which included opera singers, dancers and a wealth of stage scenic art.

The prologue opened with the orchestra playing a quiet amorous piece, revealing a cut-out South Sea scene with liquid stretches of water with a ruddy moon mirrored in the waves and with waving palm trees set against the highly tinted blue sky. Walter Smith and Charlotte Bergh, coloratura soprano, appeared and Mr. Smith sang to her Von Tilzer's "If You Only Knew." Then there appeared the Mark Strand Ballet Corps as water sprites. They carried wreaths of roses. During an esthetic dance they crowned the woman singer their queen. She then sang "The Bell Song" from "Lakme." The number closed with an ensemble and dance effect. The lighting effects were blue, amber and dull gold, from stage and booth.

Clebourne Merchants Tie-up with Yale Theatre

Three men's furnishing stores of Clebourne, Texas, joined with the management of the Yale theatre in putting over a page advertising tie-up in the Morning News for "What Do Men Want?"

The Yale itself took the centre seventy-five inches to advertise the picture. At either side and across the bottom, under the tie-up title line, appeared the advertisements of the stores, listing their specials in men's furnishings. Each of the three stores advertised that they would give away tickets to the first 100 customers of the morning, good for a free admission to the Yale when accompanied with one paid admission.

Jarmuth Used Street Cars for "Anatol" Banners

One of the most effective and sensational publicity campaigns in conjunction with the showing of "The Affairs of Anatol" was that initiated by Douglas Jarmuth, manager of the Bakersfield string of West Coast Theatres, Inc., houses. Jarmuth got in touch with the officials of the street car company in Bakersfield and arranged for a display on five city and interurban cars. He carried four banners, two on each side and one at back and front, while all the windows of the street car were placarded with the handsome half-sheet litho paintings of the individual stars appearing in the production.

Simple Lobby Display Gets Results for Bainaiver

Manager M. Bainaiver, of the Alhambra theatre, Canton, Ohio, executed a novel double lobby display in connection with his recent extended run of "Over the Hill," which attracted attention not only of those who passed into the theatre, but of those who passed by.

Not lending itself particularly to unusual embellishment, the exterior of the house was neatly adorned with American flags draped about the marquis. Over these was placed a canvas sign 4½x20 feet, which bore an "Over the Hill" message in large letters discernible at a distance of three blocks. Stills of the production, in cases, were used at the sides of the entrance.

The most novel bit of decoration was used on the interior of the lobby and added a welcoming homelike atmosphere. A large arch of lattice-work, festooned with vines, was erected directly in front of the box office. Hanging beneath the arch of the frame was an artistic placard reading. "The Road to 'Over the Hill'." A wicker vase of chrysanthemums rested on the floor in the center of the pathway to the ticket window and was flanked at a short distance on either side by two art posters framed in brass.

On either side of the lattice work stood a white pedestal bearing a white pot of flowers. The entire scene blended well with the tile floor of the lobby.

Young Uses Ballyhoo for "The Sheik"

E. Forrest Young, now publicity director of the Majestic and Rialto theatres, Louisville, Ky., put on a successful campaign at the Rialto on "The Sheik." An Arab ballyhoo in royal purple satin, turban and all, was used on the main streets in advance and during first exhibition days. A large special electric sign was hung up with only the title of the feature, in addition to the regular signs and paper. Very large display ads were run in the dailies.

Fair Theatre's Exploitation of "Old Oaken Bucket"

Sullivan and Levy, managers of the Fair theatre, Amarillo, Texas, gave "The Old Oaken Bucket" consistent and appropriate exploitation during their recent engagement.

A lobby display of a moss-covered well and old oaken bucket was a feature of the campaign.

In addition, a float decorated with a well curbing of the orthodox type, a bucket that looked moss covered, big banners announcing the showing and containing a quartette appropriately attired and singing the old familiar songs, including of course "The Old Oaken Bucket," paraded about the streets, attracting no end of attention and coaxing many an elusive dollar into the Fair's box office.

Mother Parties Used Again for "Mother O' Mine"

C. B. Davis, manager of the Norwood theatre, Norwood, Ohio, evolved several interesting exploitation stunts for his recent engagement of "Mother o' Mine."

In his newspaper advertising Mr. Davis suggested that citizens of Norwood make up "Honor Your Mother" parties and entertain their mothers by taking them to see this picture. In addition, he announced in the advertising, newspaper readers and in special heralds that every mother over seventy years of age would be admitted free with her family and the single family having the largest number of mothers attending together would be admitted without charge.

The heralds were in the form of neat cards which gave the title of the picture, dates of showing and called attention to the theatre's plan for honoring the mothers of the neighborhood. On the reverse side of the card was printed Kipling's poem, "Mother o' Mine." These heralds were distributed to the homes of the city, were passed out to school children and tossed into automobiles about the city.

In addition, Mr. Davis interested several Sunday school teachers and had them make the picture the subject of a lecture on honoring mother, in their classes.

The first night of the showing eight mothers over seventy were admitted and were seated together in a special section well up in the front of the auditorium. One family with five mothers, a grandmother, her daughter-in-law and that mother's three married daughters registered as the single family having the largest number of mothers.

All of these facts were duly recorded at the theatre and in publicity.

"In a Doll Shop" Riesenfeld's Latest

New York Criterion Theatre Special Number
Elaborate Musical Fantasy

As a presentation number on the bill with Fool's Paradise" playing an indefinite engagement at the New York Criterion theatre, Managing Director Hugo Riesenfeld has not attempted what has come to be known as an atmospheric prologue, but instead has created an independent music-dance feature that helps entertain and does not trespass on the domain of the stellar picture.

"In a Doll Shop," as the number is titled, is romantic and fantastic in its idea blending the beauties of the ballet with solo and chorus singing, with dolls of all nations and temperaments bustling in and out of the shop. Mme. Victorina Krigher, prima ballerina of the Moscow Grand Opera, plays the leading role in the production, that of a fairy doll, the prize of the little shop. Harlequin, Columbine, Polichinelli and a Baby Doll, all favorites with the children, also have important parts to play.

When the curtain rises the shopkeeper is seen bustling about his shop while prospective customers walk around to inspect the different goods. A farmer and his wife are seeking a gift for a little one. An old woman and an inquisitive boy are in another part of the shop and an English gentleman and two charming ladies form another group.

Columbine with her powder puff is the first doll to be brought in by an assistant. The little doll powders her nose with much vigor until she sees Polichinelli with his cymbals. She leads him into a dance, and, when she tries to powder his nose, is banged over the head with a cymbal, to the delight of the customers. Drums beat and in marches a drum major with his army of two tin soldiers with drums, and the trio marches about with great pomp.

More dolls are brought in—a Baby Doll, followed by three others, and the quartet sings and dances, while the shopkeeper strikes the bells on the dolls' shoulder in harmony with their voices. The quartet is interrupted when the leading Baby Doll runs down. The shopkeeper hastens to her side, re-winds her strenuously with the result that she escapes from his hands, rushes wildly about the stage and is recaptured with great difficulty.

Harlequin is the next doll to be brought in to perform athletic feats and dances to delight the customers, and finally the shopkeeper goes to a special niche where he keeps his prize doll—the Fairy Doll. She dazzles the customers with her light and beauty. She is jealously guarded by the tradesman while she dances before the delighted customers and is affectionately put back in the niche at the end of her dance.

The dolls are all put back in their places, the customers file out and, after putting out the lights, the shopkeeper locks up the shop and goes home. But he has forgotten Harlequin, and, no sooner does this lively villain find the coast clear, than he romps wildly about the shop. He peeps about and goes to the niche where the Fairy Doll is hidden. She is his especial delight and when she steps out, he leads her through a grotesque dance. He calls to all the other dolls and again they enter—first Columbine with her puff, then Poi lichinelli with his cymbals, the four Baby Dolls, the Chinese and Spanish dolls—until the stage is full of toys. It is a festival of their own, there are no human beings to watch them, and they sing and cut capers in lively fashion.

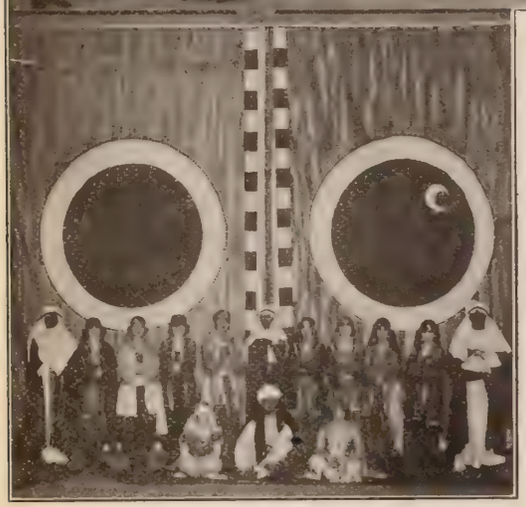
The Fairy Doll, leader of the festivities, dances a brilliant pizzicato, and, at its conclusion, all begin a lively jazz. This modern dance attracts other dolls and soon an American Indian, a Puritan, a cowboy and finally an Uncle Sam doll, join the party. When two negro Mammy dolls and a pair of Southern beauties join the party, all join in a joyous ensemble.

The music of "In a Doll Shop" is chiefly from Bayer's pantomime ballet, with special selections from Grieg, some Russian composers and original compositions interwoven. The production was staged and arranged for Mr. Riesenfeld by Josiag Zuro, with special choreography by Paul Oscard. Herbert Schulze painted a lively toy shop setting for the production.

In the cast supporting Mme. Krigher are some of the finest solo dancers of the Riesenfeld group. Paul Oscard, ballet-master of the Riesenfeld theatres, has the part of Harlequin and other important dancers are Grace Eastman as Columbine, Ruth Matlock as Polichinelli, Vera Myers as the Baby Doll, Lillian Powell as the Spanish Doll, Felicie Sorel and Myrtle Immel as the Dutch girl and boy dolls, and Mollie Dodd and T. A. Yagoda as the Chinese girl and boy dolls. Fred Burgstaller plays the shopkeeper. The company of singers and dancers numbers about thirty, the largest cast ever assembled by Mr. Riesenfeld for a stage production at any of his three Broadway theatres.

School Teachers Gives "The Blot" Big Boost

Looking to the local school teachers for a big boost on "The Blot" was not without results during the showing at the James theatre, Columbus, Ohio.



A number of teachers were invited to a special showing and the suggestion was subtly made that if they liked the picture they induce their friends and others interested to attend. The result was a landslide of business, and the good-will of every teacher who came, as evidenced by the great number of letters written to the management of the James.

The James backed up the picture strongly with advertising, winding up its campaign with four-column fifteen-inch hand-drawn and lettered ads in all the Columbus dailies.

Grombacher's Exploitation and Presentation of "The Sheik"

The recent engagement of "The Sheik" at the Liberty theatre, Spokane, Wash., saw the culmination of one of Manager Ray Grombacher's best exploitation campaigns.

A week before the picture opened Mr. Grombacher lined the lobby of the theatre with oriental rugs—insured for a valuation of several thousand dollars—and a tent was placed in the center of the lobby where a girl representing the dancing girl of the picture reclined on a couch. Burning incense added to the oriental atmosphere.

A prologue, under the title of "The Bride Market," with a cast of fourteen people, was presented.

The prologue opened with a dancer placed on the auction block with a slave seller forcing her to dance for the Sheik. The Sheik sang the song featured in the picture and the girl rendered a sequel to the Sheik's ballad. Then they rendered "Allah's Holiday" as a duet, with the entire company joining in on the chorus.

The set provided is shown by the illustration. Atmospheric lighting effects were used throughout the number.

During the run of the picture the Liberty's girl ushers wore oriental costumes.

Coogan Doll Stunt Wins Again

With an after-school Jackie Coogan doll party for children, Mrs. Emma Shakespeare, manager of the National theatre, Cincinnati, put over "The Kid" in her suburban house for its two-day run.

She obtained four Jackie Coogan dolls, which she announced a week in advance would be given away at the children's matinee. The hour of this showing was set for 3.30 p. m., and dodgers announcing the party were distributed among school children at the gates of one of the public schools a half-block distant from the theatre.

As soon as school was out on the afternoon of the party, the children burst through the schoolyard gates and ran to the theatre, lining up in front of the box office.

Brown Holds Children's Party for "Fauntleroy"

The orphans' party which nearly every showman has put over at least once was used by G. E. Brown, manager and publicity director of Loew's Palace theatre, Memphis, Tenn., as one of the exploitation mediums employed during the engagement of "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

Mr. Brown tied up with the Memphis Press and for ten days landed publicity on the front page of the paper, often with illustrations. The paper was tied into the party so tight that to it was left the task of getting the 100 automobiles needed to carry the kiddies to the theatre and home again. The paper felt its responsibility and jazzed things up until there were more cars offered than the orphans needed.

All the cars, filled with children, gaily decorated with flowers and banners and headed by a brass band, paraded through the city for a half-hour before turning into the theatre. Thousands of people saw the parade and crowded the street to watch the kids have a good time.

A symphony orchestra of thirty pieces was enlisted to play for the kiddies and barrels of apples, boxes of oranges, buckets of candy and other delicacies were sacked up by willing hands and given to the little guests as they came out of the theatre.

Each child not only enjoyed the automobile ride, the show and the music, but went away from the theatre thinking it was Christmas.

In all, Brown landed more than fifteen columns of free publicity and the cost of the party to the theatre was only a few dollars.

Orphans' parties are always good and should be put over with a bang to get maximum results.

This was the first party which Mr. Brown has promoted in two years and it went over with a bang.

Toledo Blade Ties Up With "Doc" Horater

"What Do Men Want?" Essays Make Fine Exploitation for the Picture

H. C. HORATER, managing director of the Pantheon theatre, Toledo; Paul Gray, of the Wid Gunning forces, and the Pantheon publicity staff found hundreds of ways of bringing the engagement of "What Do Men Want?" to the attention of Toledo theatregoers.

The campaign began with teaser ads on the title, "What Do Men Want?" in one column by 21 lines space appeared five times in each daily paper, on the first day of the campaign.

The next morning, the campaign showed a second development. Each newspaper carried the ad in the same position as the day before, but the mysterious question this time was addressed to particular people—and each person was one well known in the life of the city. A bank president, the mayor, the president of a federation of women clubs, the sheriff, the chief of police, and a big merchant were first asked to answer the question. On the next day, the prosecuting attorney, a popular judge, the leading minister, a county commissioner and a leading woman social worker had the poser shot at them. All those named were chosen because they were most widely known, either in their official capacity or for personal reasons.

The exploiteers had in the meantime hooked up their campaign with the Toledo Blade and on the following morning the paper carried a box on the front page in which a contest based on the title was announced.

Novelty cut out doll used in the interests of "Over the Hill" at the Tremont Temple theatre, Boston, Mass.

Clever, although inexpensive lobby display, arranged by the Princess theatre, Eastland, Tex., for the engagement of "Cappy Ricks"

Prize, $25 as a first and 200 others in the form of tickets, were offered to persons who would give the best answer to the question of the title, "What Do Men Want?" in a 200-word essay.

Questions raised in the picture were given publicity in the Blade as aids to the contestants. "Is love the greatest desire a man feels?" ran one article. "Is it wealth he wants above everything else on earth?" read another.

Then, two days before the picture opened, there was a big newspaper smash. The Blade on that day carried on its first page, in the most prominent news space, a three column layout, with the pictures of three pretty shopgirls, who, it was announced, had been selected to judge the letters which were pouring into the Blade office at the rate of hundreds a day. A three column streamer head read: "They'll Decide What Men Want." The story and pictures took up a quarter of the first page.

In addition, another story on the photoplay page of the paper told of the number of essays sent in, gave a summary of the classes into which the answers were falling.

In every one of the stories—front page and inside—printed by the newspaper, the name of the production, the producer and the theatre and play dates were given prominent places.

While the contest was being carried on, other angles of exploitation were being taken care of by Mr. Horater and his staff.

Scores of the leading stores had been tied up with the picture. They displayed eye-filling window cards and stickers reading: "What Do Men Want? Step in. We Have It," followed with a mention of the theatre and play date.

However, it was the contest that brought the greatest amount of attention to the engagement of the picture.

Although women alone were permitted in the contest, many men wrote in to the newspaper and the management of the theatre, indignantly taking issue with some of the women, and giving their own point of view.

Small Towner Puts Over Big Time Stunt

A practical ship, with five real portholes, built of beaver board and painted by a local boy with a knack for handling a brush, made an effective lobby display for the showing of "Cappy Ricks" at the Princess theatre, Eastland, Texas.

The total cost of the job, including the hiring of the artist, was $6.80. The five windows in the cabin were illuminated by an equal number of small electric lights, attached to a flasher.

From a lighthouse a bright spot was focused on the ship, making a very pretty effect at night. And all for $6.80.

This cut shows the mechanical ballyh o which the Grand theatre, Rochester, divided for the showing of the first episode of "The Adventures of Tarzan"

Pegler Exploits "Lure of the Jade" at Lawrence, Mass.

In putting over "The Lure of the Jade" in Lawrence, Mass., Jack A. Pegler, exploitation representative for R-C pictures, assisted John Dineen, manager of the Modern theatre, not only on advertising of productions for the current week but also executed a campaign for permanent advertising that will undoubtedly pull large returns for the theatre.

Special exploitation on "The Lure of the Jade" consisted of a teaser campaign which ran for several days in advance of play dates, in the local newspaper.

In most instances they were slugged in between news stories. Special copy for the day before opening closed the campaign and had the town talking.

One sheets were sniped in the best windows, and around the mill district. Three thousand programs were given out the week preceding play date and cut-outs were used in the lobbies and special banners made for the front of the house.

Unemployed as Sandwichmen Tried Out Again

Sandwichmen recruited from local unemployed, a favorite exploitation stunt these days, was used by the Queen theatre, Dallas, for the recent engagement of "Salvage."

The inscription on the banner was as follows:

"There are several thousand unemployed men in Dallas. The Queen theatre has pledged its support to help relieve this condition. Their first step was to hire us to carry this banner advertising Pauline Frederick in "Salvage" at the Queen theatre. This is a good job. "Salvage" is a great picture. It's a worthy cause."

"Rip Van Winkle" Children's Matinee Goes Big

The management of the Jewel theatre, Troy, Ohio, got a lot of verbal publicity for "Rip Van Winkle" by holding a special morning matinee for the children of the city.

When the picture started every seat in the theatre was filled and when the picture was over every little shaver started out to tell the grown-ups of the family how much they enjoyed it.

Noble Hearne, manager of the Frolic theatre, San Francisco, Cal., used a local military band as a prologue to "The Fox." There are 30 men in the band. And they proved no small attraction. The cost was trivial. The bandmaster is L. A. Yost, the band is from the 11th Infantry, Presidio, Cal.

Latest Is Alphabet Fortnight

Yonkers, N. Y., Theatre and Paper Make Advantageous Tie-up

"ALPHABET FORTNIGHT" is the name of the stunt that the Broadway theatre, Yonkers, and the local paper, the Statesman, worked for "Ladies Must Live" and "Under the Lash."

Every day a coupon appeared in the Yonkers Statesman with two consecutive letters of the alphabet in it. Persons whose last names began with either of the letters could clip the coupon, fill out the blanks which asked for the name, address and date of birth, present it at the box office that evening with fifteen cents and receive an admission to the theatre. Fifteen cents is one-half the regular admission price.

Only two letters of the alphabet were printed a day, which strung the stunt out over two weeks.

The stunt did not drain their complimentary lists as the tickets were good only the day they appeared in the paper. The theatre guarded against imposition by having the ticket-seller politely ask for some mark of identification such as a business or visiting card, or watch inscription.

The inquisitiveness in asking for full name, address and date of birth is explained by another stunt the theatre has up its sleeve. It is perfecting a plan whereby it will know the birthday of everybody in town and on that day will mail the celebrant a birthday greeting and a genuine present of two admissions, war tax paid.

The only possible improvement in the alphabet stunt is not to print the pairs of letters consecutively but at random. As the stunt was conducted in Yonkers you could figure out on what day your initial would appear and half cut-price tickets be available.

By printing at random you could sustain the curiosity with an element of uncertainty.

Over 500 Real Indians in "White Eagle"

The bigness of Ruth Roland's newest serial for Pathe distribution, "White Eagle," can be best imagined by the announcement that more than five-hundred real Indians were employed throughout the fifteen episodes. A typical Indian pueblo was built for part of the action.

That the new serial thriller is meeting with the approval of the exhibitors is shown by the heavy bookings following the trade showings in the different parts of the country, according to a report from the Pathe home office.

Dorothy Dalton to Star in Melford's Next

George Melford's next special production, it is announced by Paramount, will be an adaption of the sensational story, "The Cat That Walked Alone," by John Colton. The production will be started at the Lasky studio January 3 following the return of Mr. Melford from his vacation.

It is further announced that Dorothy Dalton will be featured in the new Melford picture.

"Sheik" a Small Town Hit

Paramount Feature Duplicates Its Box Office Success in Big Cities

GEORGE MELFORD'S production for Paramount, "The Sheik," is duplicating in the smaller towns the records it created in the metropolitan centers immediately following its release, according to a statement by S. R. Kent. Paramount's general manager of distribution. Hardly a day passes, says Mr. Kent, that does not bring a telegram or letter from some exhibitor praising the production and extolling its merits as a box-office attraction.

Among the messages received is the following from Joseph Angros, Jr., manager of the Palace theatre, Leechburg, Pa.: "Wish to congratulate you on your wonderful production, 'The Sheik.' It is one of the year's biggest pictures. It is a knockout. It is the best Paramount picture ever played in our house and should be one of the year's best box-office attractions. Unfortunately for us it rained the biggest part of the evening, therefore probably spoiling a record."

Frank Panoplos, manager of the Lyric theatre, McKeesport, Pa., wired as follows: "Opening day of 'The Sheik' marred by rain but it did not stop crowds. Second day crowds greater than ever. Turned hundreds away. Opposition, 'Three Musketeers,' 'Perjury,' 'Her Social Value' and others. Greatest box-office attraction I have ever run."

W. L. Brown, manager of the Palace theatre, Tarentum, Pa., a town of less than 9,000, telegraphed: "'The Sheik' went over big in our town. Should have booked it six days instead of four."

News of tremendous business in Connecticut is contained in the following wire from J. D. Powers, manager of the Paramount New Haven Exchange: "'The Sheik' playing to S. R. O. business at Majestic theatre, Hartford; Fox theatre, New Britain, and Cowan theatre, New London, exceeding 'Anatol' records by wide margin. Patrons proclaim it greatest picture of the year."

"This phenomenal business on 'The Sheik" in the smaller cities," said Mr. Kent, "is no surprise to us. It is our intention to continue this policy of advertising the big, worthwhile attractions in a big way, always backing our promises with complete fulfillment. Only in that way can we hope to maintain the confidence of our exhibitors and the public."

"Little Minister" Finished

Vitagraph's Adaptation of James M. Barrie Story Finished on Coast

VITAGRAPH has completed its production, "The Little Minister," adapted from the world-famous story by James M. Barrie. The film was produced in California under the direction of David Smith, and in settings, costuming, acting and in those little directorial touches which can hardly be classified, reflects the quaint Scotch atmosphere of the piece.

Alice Calhoun, fulfilling all predictions, has proved an ideal Lady Babbie, declares Vitagraph. Whether appearing as Lady Babbie, or masquerading as the Gypsy, Miss Calhoun is reported to display an art mellowed beyond any comparison to her youth.

The title role of "The Little Minister" is played by James Morrison, one of the best known of the younger leading men on the screen. He has been identified with many big successes, and played leading role in two of the biggest successes ever put out by the Vitagraph company—"Over the Top" and "Black Beauty." As Gavin Dishart, the little minister of Thrums, he gives one of the best performances of his career.

Among the other members of the cast are Henry Hebert, as Lord Rintoul; Alberta Lee as Mrs. Dishart; William McCall as Rob Dow; Dorothea Wolbert as Nanny Webster; Maude Emery as Jean; George Stanley as Dr. McQueen; Richard Daniels as Micah Dow, and Charles Wheelock as Captain Halliwell. In addition there are hundreds of minor characters, townspeople, gypsies, soldiers and the like.

Big sets, including several sections of the village of Thrums, were built especially for "The Little Minister," and the costumes and backgrounds, as well as the sets themselves, are said to breathe the spirit of Barrie. "The Little Minister" will be presented in six reels.

A dance scene is to be executed by Theodore Kosloff and Betty Compson in Miss Compson's next starring picture for Paramount, "The Noose"

Special Aids for "A Sailor-Made Man"

Associated Exhibitors have prepared an augmented array of advertising materials on the Harold Lloyd special, "A Sailor-Made Man," which is released on December 25th.

A special sixteen page campaign book contains an entire section devoted to exploitation ideas and stunts designed to afford the exhibitors with plans for street and lobby displays.

In addition to this, the exhibitors can secure a stock one, three and twenty-four sheet on Harold Lloyd. The lobby display photographs include 8—11 x 14 colored stills, a special 22 x 28 colored display and ten black and white photographs. Two attractive slides, a thumb nail and a one column star cut of Harold Lloyd, as well as a supply of one and two column eyeglass slug cuts are among the special items of available material.

Big Cast in Support of William Farnum

About the biggest screen cast that has been assembled recently is supporting William Farnum in a picture he is making at the New York studio of William Fox. The feminine leads are divided between Peggy Shaw, late of the Ziegfeld Frolic, and Myrta Bonillas. Others include Holmes Herbert, Mario Carrillo, Paul McAllister, Etienne Gerardot, Bernard Seigel, Hal DeForrest, Edward Kipling, Augustus Balfour, Jack Collins, Culer C. Supplee, Edward Boring, Paula Shay, Viva Verone, Florence Kimball, Florence Ashbrook, America Chedister, and Ruth D. Goodwin.

There are several characters, moreover, that have not yet been cast.

Metro Buys Big French Picture

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, who cabled from Paris several weeks ago that he had obtained the American rights to "the screen sensation of Europe," returned to New York this week on the Aquitania, after a three months' stay in Europe and announced that the picture is "L'Atlantide."

"L'Atlantide" is said to be the biggest spectacle ever attempted by a French producer. It has been jamming Paris theatres for months and arousing great enthusiasm among the reviewers, who say that with this picture the French motion picture industry has again obtained world leadership. The picture is an adaptation of the romantic novel by Pierre Benvit, which was crowned two years ago by the French Academy as the best novel of the year and which has broken sales records for modern books in France. It has had hardly less popularity in this country, as translated, and issued under the title of "Atlantida."

In addition to purchasing "L'Atlantide," Mr. Rowland, during the three months he spent abroad, introduced the Rex Ingram production of Ibanez's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" to Europe. Showings were given before selected audiences of statesmen, writers, artists and theatrical leaders in London, Paris and Rome. The enthusiasm it aroused was even greater than that when it was first shown in New York.

While in England, Mr. Rowland was the guest of Sir William Jury, head of Jury Imperial Pictures, Ltd., exclusive distributors of Metro Pictures throughout Great Britain. Indorsing the popularity of these pictures, Sir William renewed his contract to release them before Mr. Rowland left for France.

In France, the Metro president found keen competition from other American organizations that were seeking to get the American rights to "L'Atlantide." The production was made by the Aubert establishment in an effort to surpass foreign competition. This effort led to a lavishness of production that has astonished the Parisians. The critic of that grave old paper, "Les Debats," says: "It makes a new date in the cinema history of our country. It makes France once more 'the country of the cinema.'"

"L'Atlantide" is a romance of an imaginary country in the midst of the Sahara Desert. The country was founded when Neptune banished his well-beloved Clito there in a legendary mountain. Clito was the mother of Atlas and the ancestress through millions of years of Antinea, who is queen and despotic ruler of the land when the story opens.

Antinea is a ficitional sister of Cleopatra; beautiful, wise and amorous. Sixty explorers, crossing the desert at various times, have come to her palace and have been recipients of her favors. But none of the sixty has returned to civilization.

"The story," said Mr. Rowland, "indicates the wonderful possibilities for unusual scenic display. I don't recall anything that nearly approaches these settings in imaginative beauty. Each scene is a work of exquisite art. I don't think anything quite like it has ever been achieved before."

New Ince Special Is "Skin Deep"

THOMAS H. INCE announces that the title, "Skin Deep," has definitely been selected for his second production to be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. The picture was produced under the working title "Lucky Damage."

The picture, which will follow "Hail the Woman," is now in the cutting room at the Culver City studios where Mr. Ince is editing the negative. No definite date for release has been determined, but it will probably reach the theatre late in February.

"What Do Men Want?" in Force in Ohio

"What Do Men Want?" the successful Lois Weber picture distributed by Wid Gunning, Inc., was well represented in the theatres of Ohio during the weeks of December 11 and December 18, according to announcement from the Gunning home-office.

The advance extensive advertising and publicity campaign aroused great interest, and the production opened to good business in Cleveland, Columbus, Toledo, Akron, Canton, Youngstown, Lorain and Norwalk.

One of the most magnificent theatres in Ohio has honored "What Do Men Want?" by choosing it as the feature for its opening bill, according to information received at the Wid Gunning offices. This house is the big new Lorain Fulton theatre, a million-dollar edifice on the West Side of Cleveland, which opens the week of December 25. The booking at the Lorain-Fulton follows a run of the picture at S. Barret McCormick's Allen theatre in Cleveland.

Hart and Swanson Releases for Dec. 18

THRILLS dominate the Paramount release schedule for December 18, when William S. Hart in "White Oak" and Gloria Swanson in "Under the Lash" are released.

A typical "Bill" Hart Western drama is "White Oak," full of the kind of stuff that made Hart famous. This is "Big Bill's" own story, with scenario by Bennett Musson. Lambert Hillyer directed and Joe August, A. S. C., was the cameraman. Vola Vale is Mr. Hart's leading woman and Alexander Gaden plays the principal heavy role. Others in the support are Bert Sprotte, Robert Walker, Helen Holly and Chief Standing Bear.

"Under the Lash," which is Miss Swanson's second starring picture for Paramount, was directed by Sam Wood, who also directed Miss Swanson in "The Great Moment." The scenario was written by J. E. Nash and is an adaptation of the noted novel, "The Shulamite," by Alice and Claude Askew and the play by Claude Askew and Edward Knoblock. Russell Simpson gives a remarkable portrayal of a brutal Boer husband, while Mahlon Hamilton proves a most satisfactory hero in the leading role opposite the star. Lillian Leighton, Lincoln Steadman, Thena Jasper and Clarence Ford round out the cast.

Non-Theatrical Bookings for Chas. Ray

The development of non-theatrical bookings, in addition to the vast theatrical circulation already enjoyed by the Charles Ray subjects, is cited by John C. Ragland, General Manager of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corp., in a statement this week as indicative of where the modern high grade productions are being shown outside of the regular theatres, and how a vast undeveloped field awaits the distribution of good dramatic features.

"The fact that the motion picture has become a recognized form of entertainment in schools, clubs, army posts and in private homes equipped with projection apparatus opens up a great field for film distribution outside of the regular theatres," says Mr. Ragland's statement. "This does not refer alone to the educational films proper, but extends more and more to the straight narrative photoplay." Today we can gain some idea of the tremendous undeveloped field of non-theatrical exhibition of picture-plays by taking as an example the circulation of the Charles Ray productions outside of the theatres. Out of an entire department devoted to this field I take representative booking from many phases of life which show how wide is the appeal of Charles Ray, the star, and his productions.

Ship Sunk for Thrill in "Power Within"

One of the most realistic and thrilling shipwreck scenes ever portrayed on the screen is reported to be included among the dramatic punches in "The Power Within," produced by Achievement Films, Inc., which Pathe Exchange, Inc., is distributing.

The actual sinking of a five-thousand-ton passenger vessel was staged off the New Jersey coast, according to the Pathe home office, and provides a screen sensation that will not soon be forgotten by any audience seeing it.

The ship was piloted into deep water, where the crew, before deserting it, opened all the cockpits, it is explained by Pathe, and while the boat slowly foundered, three cameras were trained on it so that not a single incident in connection with the sinking was lost.

Pathe Plans for the New Year

Special Attention Is Given to Comedies and Serials

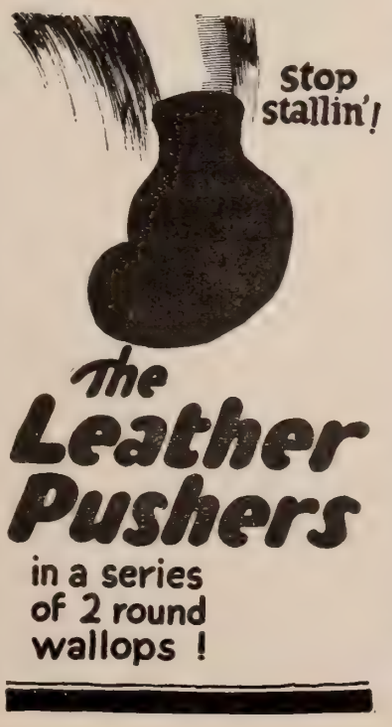
IN a statement issued during the week Pathe announces special preparations for the coming year in the field of short-subjects. Programs strong in comedy and serial episode features are being given especial attention, according to the Pathe announcement, which follows in part:

"Special preparedness to meet the needs of exhibitors during the year 1922 is announced by Pathe. Acting upon convictions which have remained unchanged through many months past, and which are now cordially supported by leading exhibitors in all parts of the country, this organization declares itself abler than ever before in its history to provide theatre owners with the means of stimulating increased attendance without increased expenditure, with the result of a quicker turnover, and the consequent solution of problems most pressing at this time.

"In this connection Pathe places special emphasis on the increasing value of the program made up mainly of the best class of short subjects. In a statement published more than a year ago, Paul Brunet announced that this tendency was foreseen, and that Pathe Exchange was concentrating on short subjects and serials—the episodic character of the latter placing it in the same classification. The present announcement declares that energetic action under this policy enables Pathe to face the new year with confidence in keeping with the variety and richness of the material on its lists, and the timely value of which enterprising exhibitors already have attested.

"The claim is made of having very satisfactorily solved the feature problem so vexing to a large class of exhibitors—meaning the picture of from five to eight reels that is attractively exploited and relied upon to fill the house. The problem is that of the many exhibitors who, in order to meet the expense of playing such a feature, feel it necessary to omit from their program standard short pictures, although aware that these are established favorites with their patrons. Even if the feature is a sure fire hit it does not lessen the need for a diversified program, but if it is lacking in broad popular appeal, many in the audience will regret their admission investment who would have gone away quite satisfied after a hearty laugh over a one-reel comedy following the feature, or contained in a short subject program. And they will be stimulated to come back again sooner than had been their intention.

"An audience is a gathering of people brought together by different motives. A certain percentage come to see the 'Feature,' but there is also a large number who attend through a desire to see Pathe News. Others consider their mony best invested in 'Aesop's Film Fables,' or a 'Snub' Pollard comedy, and still a great many others attend the theatre only when Harold Lloyd is the attraction. It takes all these different groups of people to make a paying audience. And unless everybody in the audience gets something he or she especially likes, the habitual attendance at that theatre is not to be counted on.



"Out of recognition of this situation has come the discovery that certain short subjects, properly announced, have all the drawing power, and are just as logically featured as any pretentious five or eight-reel feature. All of the multiple reel Harold Lloyd comedies, as is well known throughout the motion picture world, are constantly taking the place of the usual feature on the programs at the big New York theatres, and in many other cities."

Selznick Special Under Way

"Conceit," Second of Specials, to Run at Capitol Theatre

THE presentation by Lewis J. Selznick of his second special feature for this season is bringing "Conceit" into early prominence on Select's booking sheets according to information that comes from Sam E. Morris, vice president in charge of distribution. "A Man's Home" has made an auspicious start as the first of six specials promised among the "Forty from Selznick" for this season.

"A Man's Home" is the offering at New York's Capitol theatre for the week before Christmas, the engagement starting Sunday, December 18, and with this verdict Selznick's specials are effectively launched for the season. "Conceit" is ready for immediate release, following its recent showings to representatives of the trade newspapers.

"Conceit" is admittedly a different type of photoplay than "A Man's Home" the second Selznick special being more sensational and picturesque, according to the reviews and Selznick announcements, than the domestic drama now so generally in service on the screen. "Conceit" was photographed in the Canadian Rockies, the players making headquarters at Banff, and into the action, that largely transpires out-of-doors, is woven the wonderful scenery for which that section is famous.

The cast of "Conceit" commends itself to both exhibitor and public because William B. Davidson and Mrs. De Wolf Hopper are names familiar to hosts of theatregoers. Davidson has been leading man in numerous screen productions and in "Conceit" is featured now for the first time. Hedda Hopper has won her way to great popularity on both stage and screen and as leading woman in "Conceit" is declared to have the best opportunity the screen has ever given her to develop her native gifts as an actress.

Maurice Costello, one of the veterans of the screen, is another name that will add to the public appeal of the Selznick special. In the earlier days of moving pictures Costello was a screen idol when Vitagraph was booming him as a star and the presence in the cast of Betty Hilburn, Charles Gerard, Warren Cook and Patrick Hartigan give further assurance of good acting. "Conceit" is just getting under way with the entire Select sales organization behind it with active enterprise.

More People Than Ever Now Go to Pictures

H. M. CRANDALL, owner of the Crandall chain of theatres in Washington, D. C., sounds a strong note of optimism in a recent letter to Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for R-C Pictures. "With the exception," writes Mr. Crandall, "of the great prosperity we had during the war, business is as good today as it ever was. There are more people attending pictures today than ever. Unfortunately, however, there are more houses than ever, and large ones, therefore it is necessary to go out and dig for business, as it doesn't come to the door any more.

"I truly believe that every exhibitor who realizes this and gets out and hustles will do quite a satisfactory business, and will make a good margin of profit for himself."

Exploiteer on Gunning Staff

Harry McDonald, Former Fox Theatre Manager, Engaged by Gunning

HARRY MCDONALD, for the past several years associated with the Fox Circuit of Theatres, has joined the Wid Gunning organization at their home office in New York City. While with the Fox organization, McDonald had direction of theatres starting in Springfield, Mass., and covering every territory where William Fox was represented, as far West as Denver, Colo. The intimate knowledge gained during these several years is expected to prove highly valuable to exhibitors throughout the country because of his close association with the motion picture public.

Returning just a few days ago from a trip which covered the greater part of the United States as far West as the Mississippi River, he was able to give a concise report on existing conditions in the principal cities of the Middle West:

"The exhibitors making money today are the exhibitors who will make money always in the motion picture business; in fact, they would survive in any business because they are discriminating, hard-working individuals, who select pictures carefully, giving full consideration to every element in a picture that when brought before the public will attract patrons to the box office.

"Discriminating exhibitors are not giving up big money today for star-series contracts, realizing that a certain percentage of the pictures must be of only average value to them and that it is not good business to pay a high price, based on a single picture, for a series of pictures of unknown quality.

"Representative managers were very enthusiastic over the announcement of Wid Gunning's entry into the distribution field. Gunning started a long time ago by laying down a sound foundation upon which to build a new organization. This foundation consisted of exhibitor confidence. The result is that a representative of the Wid Gunning organization finds a cordial reception awaiting him when he calls on these exhibitors throughout the United States.

"Such pictures as "The Blot" and "What Do Men Want?" directed by Lois Weber, and "Our Mutual Friend," a splendid screen version of Charles Dicken's famous novel, are the strongest box-office attractions for the exhibitor because of their varied appeal. "Our Mutual Friend" has the finest characters ever seen on the screen and is the sort of picture that patrons go out and talk about to their neighbors and friends."

Cabanne Assembles Cast

Stage and Screen Veterans in the Line-Up for "Beyond the Rainbow"

WILLIAM CHRISTY CABANNE has completed the casting of "Beyond the Rainbow," which will be his next production to be presented by R-C Pictures and has already begun to shoot some of the scenes at studio at 3 West 61st street.

This is an all-star cast, and the production will be invested with splendid scenery and lavish effects, it is declared. The scenes are laid for the most part in New York, and the action is said to be fast and engrossing.

The story itself is an interesting one. In its adaptation a newcomer to the ranks of screen writers has had an important part. She is Miss Leila Brooks, of whom Mr. Cabanne says:

"Miss Brooks shows remarkable adaptability for film work. She possesses a peculiar sense for scenic effects and dramatic values. She assisted me materially in the adaptation of 'The Price of Fine Feathers" by Solitan Solano, and "The Mirage" by Eustace Hale Ball, for screen use. She constantly surprises me by her suggestions and appreciation of the points which usually only a veteran in screen work would be capable of."

Those who have been selected for the cast include Harry Morey, screen veteran, who has a fine following among the fans; Lillian "Billie" Dove, who appeared in Director Cabanne's latest R-C Picture, "At the Stage Door," and Virginia Lee, recent winner of a national beauty contest, who has been in constant demand by producers since her beauty became known; Diana Allen who has had an amazingly successful stage career, and who appeared also in "Over the Hill" and other successful pictures; James Harrison, who had an important role in "Lessons In Love," and Macey Harlan who appeared in the R-C Picture, "Shams of Society," a Walsh-Fielding production, also are included.

Rose Coglan, known to probably every patron of the speaking stage, is cast in a role that will give her a splendid opportunity to display the ability that won her countless friends on the stage. Maurice Costello, with a long list of successful roles behind him, also has a big part. Helen Ware who appeared on the speaking stage with Maude Adams, Rose Stahl, Blanche Bates, Robert Edeson and others of the first magnitude, and who has had an equally successful screen history, is another notable member of this all-star cast.

Marguerite Courtot Edmund Breese and Walter Miller have also been assigned to good roles. Charles Craig who appeared with success in "At the Stage Door" and Huntly Gordon who appeared in the same production, again appear in the same cast. Clara Bow, winner of the Brewster Beauty Contest completes the cast.

"Beyond the Rainbow" is scheduled for release about the middle of February.

Press Lauds "Wallingford"

Cosmopolitan Production Praised by Press as Highly Entertaining

NEW YORK newspaper reviewers received "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres with enthusiasm. They proclaim the Cosmopolitan production as one of the funniest pictures ever seen, and as a great American production.

The "Sun" says: "With no other pretensions than to afford light and amusing entertainment, it succeeds in its purpose excellently. . . . It is in addition well acted and well directed. What more could you ask?"

The reviewer of the "Globe" writes: "The film version of this play offers an excellent argument for those who are constantly pleading for better titles in the moving pictures. . . . Yesterday's audience responded to them eagerly and furnished the best proof that the most subtle sort of humor can be gotten over in the movies if the proper material is provided. The title-role was well played by Sam Hardy, and Doris Kenyon furnished as charming an ingenue bit as it has been our privilege to see in some time. The other players were competent and the production well staged throughout. It is our opinion that you will find this film good entertainment."

The "Evening Post:" "Sam Hardy and Norman Kerry play Wallingford and Blackie convincingly, while the character parts of the small town men are well cast throughout. No opportunities for comic situations—and there are many—were allowed to pass. . . . If you want entertainment with many hearty laughs, by all means see this American picture. . . ."

The excellence of the characterizations appeals to the "Evening World" thus: "'Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford,' with Sam Hardy as the suave promoter, is the feature picture this week at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, and the casting director of Cosmopolitan should be awarded a vote of thanks from picture fans for the true-to-life types he has placed in the George M. Cohan play, for it will be recalled that Georgie cleaned up with the legitimate production of the same name."

According to the "Evening Mail:" "It is extremely well cast, well directed and well played, and creates much enjoyable foolery, illustrating in a highly amusing manner the author's conception of small town gullibility. . . Usually a screen version of a stage production is only a distant relative of the original, but in this instance the film picturizes the play more faithfully than any motion picture within our recollection."

Here's a picture with the sure-fire pull of a magnet to bring new patrons to your house.

And, boy, what that means in these times!

The ones who want mystery.

The ones who like thrills.

The ones who delight in a sweet love story.

The ones who demand humor—and lots of it.

Here's an all-around showman's picture that Wid Gunning will stake his bottom dollar on to satisfy, please and thrill the fans while it creates class, prestige and new patrons for any house.

And, boy, how hard it is to please them these days!

E. M. Porter Has Baby Projector

E. M. Porter, President of Pordell Projector, Inc.

Simplex Official Introduces the "Pordell"

"THE niftiest little device I've ever seen"—"Sell me one of them right now," is the way that hundreds of men and women in the industry have followed up their first look at the Pordell Projector. This is the machine which has had the film industry in New York talking, and surely it is worth while talking about, for who would have dreamed that one would see an ordinary pocket flashlight project a beautiful, clear and sharply defined nine foot wide picture on a white wall? But it is done nevertheless and in an astonishing manner, and not only does this little wonder machine lend itself admirably to dozens of purposes to all in the business, but as a high-class toy it truly represents the progress of the industry, coming as it does as the first worth while toy from any recognized source in the motion picture business that we are thus far aware of.

The Pordell Projector derives its name from the composite syllables of the last names of the Messrs. E. M. Porter and W. E. Waddell who are the inventors of this newest device that has seemingly become popular over-night. The machine consists of a regular pocket flashlight mounted upon nickel standards which are in turn fastened to an ebonized base board, thus forming a regular small stereopticon. In place of the usual flashlight "bulls-eye," on the lamp end of the flashlight there is mounted a silver optical unit and slide carrying mount contained in which is the new devised light intensifier lamp and lens. The lenses by the way are manufactured in the Simplex lens plant at Morris Park and are made of a regular quality of optical glass highly polished and are of a quality that has not yet been discovered in a machine of such nominal cost.

A small metal slide carrier is also part of the equipment, this carrier being so arranged that instead of projecting the usual glass slide pictures, one inserts three little "frames" of movie film into the carrier which is pulled across the lens and projected upon the screen. The system of intensifying the light is one which will greatly interest all who are acquainted with projection illumination, for the Pordell method is merely a miniature form of light multiplication which when applied to the commercial field will result in over turning and rendering obsolete the present means of screen illumination.

To one who first sees the Pordell pointed at the screen, and expecting to see the ordinary "toy" results, it is quite a shock to be confronted with a clear bright perfectly defined picture about 18 inches in width, but this amazement quickly resolves itself into absolute astonishment when the person holding the machine begins backing away from the screen until there is a picture fully nine feet in width, and this is where one wonders how such astonishing results can be accomplished, but this astonishment is further increased when it is made known that the entire machine ready to use will be sold at retail for $5.50 or without the battery at $5.00.

The amazing screen results are explained by the fact that the Pordell intensifier consists of a semi-spherical reflector, which resembles the unbroken half of an egg shell in the narrow end of which is located the small lamp. The curves of the reflector are so developed that every possible light ray that is produced in the lamp is picked up by this reflector and concentrated into one magnificent beam of light which is so formed as to render it capable of projecting a film view at a distance of 12 to 14 feet, this being accomplished without condensers of any kind which in itself stamps the optical unit of the Pordell as a distinct achievement.

E. M. Porter, who by the way is secretary and general manager of the Precision Machine Co., builders of the well-known Simplex Projector, and who is also vice-president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, respectively, is greatly pleased at the showing which the Pordell has made in this brief time. "Many people," said Mr. Porter, "are under the impression that the Pordell is being built by the Simplex organization, which impression is due perhaps to the fact that we are occupants of the Simplex building. It is true that the lighting principle as used in a Pordell is being developed for Simplex use later on; the results that we are obtaining with our Pordell unit of lighting, indicates clearly that tremendous strides in commercial projection lighting may be expected within the next several years. Together with my associate, William E. Waddell, who for several years has been heading the Division of Films of the American Red Cross, and who has been prominently identified with the Edison Company in the development division of talking pictures and home projectors in the past, we have worked upon the Pordell for the past several years and the fact that the results obtained through our first complete model practically swept men off their feet through its amazing efficiency, clearly indicated to us that we had a big thing and then the question narrowed itself down to producing this machine in such quantities as to make possible a retail price that would be poppular with all. Today we are turning out on an average of 2,500 complete Pordells daily which production of course necessitates day and night work, and the fact that the holidays are so close at hand of course requires our working at high speed, in order to take care of the thousands of orders that are practically swamping our office.

"The leading directors and camera men who have used our Pordells are highly enthusiastic over the results that they obtain and an indication of the popularity of the Pordell in our own circles is indicated by the fact that I gave one to a trade paper editor friend of mine at luncheon the other day and he called me up this morning and informed me that he had sold 30 of them to as many employees on his paper, and these sales were made without solicitation of any sort. It seems that every person who sees the Pordell apparently finds some individual use for it and we are confident that in this element alone there lies a great cause for its popularity."

W. E. Waddell, Vice-President of Pordell Projector, Inc.

The Pordell will find its greatest usefulness in those circles in the industry where an intimate examination of film subjects is called for, while its entertainment value is greatly enhanced to those in the motion picture business who have access to the volumes of motion picture subjects that are produced and distributed in the industry every day. A box of 50 views is included with every Pordell machine while additional views are retailed at 20 cents for 50 and it is not a very hard matter to visualize the joy which will accompany the showing of these views by thousands of children and movie fans throughout the country.

For those whose work calls for the close inspection of film, the Pordell is recommended, for with a special slotted unit which is part of each Pordell a film may be passed through the optical head, and each view in the film may be examined at leisure in an enlarged form. The fact that no wires, electric current, or connections are required makes the Pordell a most practical toy, while the absence of the open flame lamp usually found in the average magic lantern completely eliminates the fire hazard, thereby making it a particularly desirable toy that is to be handled by children who can safely make the Pordell their bedtime joy which will in a quiet and restful maner carry them into the arms of Morpheus with their favorite fairy story outlined upon the nursery ceiling.

Special Accessories on "The Sin Flood"

Goldwyn has had its advertising and publicity departments busy for the past four weeks preparing a great line of accessories for the release, early in the new year in its third group of fifth year pictures, of "The Sin Flood." This is the photoplay which Goldwyn officials are united in declaring to be the best thing it has yet done.

Under the direction of Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity, a service book and a great line of accessories that will compare with those gotten up for "The Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead," is being prepared.

Selznick Tells Plans for O'Brien Pictures

THE SELZNICK organization declare that full provision has been made for the six presentations with Eugene O'Brien that were announced as that star's share of the "Forty from Selznick" promised for the current season. Some of this half-dozen have already been released, but the bulk of O'Brien's offerings are still to be distributed by Select exchanges.

"Clay Dollars," first of the lot, was released in October and is well circulated by this time. "Chivalrous Charley" was released early in December and critical reviews are appearing in current issues of the trade papers. Alan Crosland prepared for the screen "Prophet's Paradise," the production now completed and in progress through the Selznick laboratory.

Sigrid Holmquist, being now advertised in conjunction with "Just Around the Corner," the only feature she has appeared in since coming to America, will be O'Brien's leading woman. After she had finished her appearances in "Just Around the Corner" she began her engagement at the Selznick studios, then in Fort Lee, N. J., as O'Brien's leading woman in "Prophet's Paradise."

Ralph Ince, who directed "A Man's Home," for Selznick, is now directing O'Brien in "Channing of the Northwest." C. B. Lancaster's story, "The Law Bringers," will also be directed by Ralph Ince and a selection will be made from several scenarios already procured to complete the set of six attractions in which O'Brien will star before the current season ends.

What a grand and glorious feeling to present a picture that will satisfy all of them!

The women who want their pretty love story—and a captivating heroine.

The men who want their melodrama —mystery and thrills, and a manly hero.

All of them—the kiddies, too—who demand their laughs, rich, delightful humor such as only Dickens could provide.

No wonder Wid Gunning will stake his reputation on "Our Mutual Friend" being the most all-around satisfying picture you have offered this season.

And while it tickles the regulars—what a host of new patrons it is going to pull!

Our Mutual Friend

"Should prove one of the big money-makers of the coming year."

Assd. Exhibitors Making Good

Lloyd Comedies Well Received During Past Year

ASSOCIATED Exhibitors have issued a statement by J. E. Storey, sales manager, in which he expresses himself as grateful to the exhibitors of the country for the manner in which they have supported the Associated Exhibitors features and the Associated Harold Lloyd comedies during the year which is just closing.

In part Mr. Storey says: "When you consider the fact that during the past summer the exhibitors were handicapped not only by a protracted hot period, but by a business depression which reflected the general situation in all of our industries, it is gratifying to realize that the product of Associated Exhibitors made as splendid a record as any organization comparable to ours.

"Associated Exhibitors set out with the sole purpose of distributing feature attractions of consistently good box-office value. The business which we have done and the expression which we have received from hundreds of exhibitors indicate that we have not fallen short of our expressed intentions.

"We are particularly proud of our Harold Lloyd comedies. Starting with 'Now or Never,' which was released last March, Harold Lloyd has steadily, I might even say phenomenally, risen in box-office value and in popularity with the general public. In May, we released 'Among Those Present,' which was hailed as one of the finest comedies Hal Roach ever produced. In July, came Harold Lloyd's 'I Do,' a tremendously appealing comedy, based on married life, which proved a big winner. Following this offering, came 'Never Weaken,' which proved a veritable triumph for Harold Lloyd and is acknowledged to be one of the most sensational comedies ever made.

"It is gratifying to say that our predictions that each Harold Lloyd comedy in turn would be better than its predecessor has been actually proven in practice. We are glad, indeed, to feel that his comedies contributed in no small measure to the offsetting of bad business for a great many exhibitors during the past summer. It is with pleasure that we anticipate the wonderful profits which await the exhibitors who play the Harold Lloyd special, "A Sailor-Made Man." which we have scheduled for release on Christmas Day. Not only is this production longer than any previous Lloyd offering, but its quality and its box-office value is increased in comparison to its length. When we say that 'A Sailor-Made Man' is the most carefully and lavishly made comedy which ever came out of an American studio, we but reiterate the opinion of every qualified authority who has seen the picture, all of whom unanimously agree that it is one of the biggest money makers ever released.

"As we have proven the value of Harold Lloyd to exhibitors, so, we feel that we have proven the adaptability of our Associated Exhibitors features to the usage of the biggest theatres of the country."

Fox Anniversary Week Coming

Many Bookings Reported for Week of Jan. 29-Feb. 4

REPORTS from key centers throughout the United States, Canada, Europe and points in Mexico and South America show that thousands of exhibitors are booking Fox Film Corporation productions solidly for the week of January 29th to February 4th inclusive, which has been designated as Fox Anniversary Week. Reports are confidently awaited, also, from the Orient.

Although less than a month has passed since the initial announcement concerning the ninth birthday celebration of the organization headed by William Fox, branch managers have reported more than eighty-five per cent of the large American circuits already lined up with Fox features for the big week.

The contracting with these large strings of chain houses is indicative of the popularity of the plan and of the assurance that when the smoke of the campaign is over negotiations will have been consummated with more than ninety-five per cent of the exhibitors who have shown Fox pictures at any time, and with a host of others beside believe that exhibitors will "make it unanimous."

Exhibitors will be specially interested in the current year's productions of Fox super-specials, all of which either have had or will have pre-release runs on Broadway, New York City, to demonstrate their worth. Among these specials are "Over the Hill," "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," "A Virgin Paradise," "Thunderclap," "Shame," "Queen of Sheba," "Perjury," "Footfalls," and Zane Grey's "The Last Trail."

Reports already made public show that these specials have broken records for long runs in hundreds of theatres. In many localities they have set a pace which is difficult to comprehend. "Over the Hill" has enjoyed runs of two and three weeks in theatres which heretofore never played pictures longer than three or four days. Many small towns in the middle west programs have been changed thrice weekly have given several of these super-specials profitable runs of seven and eight days.

Mark Twain's "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" has been received by critics and public alike with enthusiasm. So successful has the run of this production been that Harper Brothers, the well-known publishers, volunteered to tie-up their sale of Mark Twain volumes with the showing of the picture in various localities.

"Footfalls," the result of Charles J. Brabin's writing and direction, was acclaimed by New York reviewers as embodying an "absolutely new idea in motion pictures."

Edith Roberts Opposite Wallace Reid

Edith Roberts, one of the leading players in Cecil B. DeMille's "Saturday Night," will be leading woman for Wallace Reid in "Across the Continent," his new Paramount picture written and adapted to the screen by Byron Morgan. Philip E. Rosen is to direct. Theodore Roberts, grand old man of the screen, is cast in a prominent role and Walter Long, Betty Francisco, Lucien Littlefield, Jack Herbert and Guy Oliver are others to appear.

Mae Murray Feted as New Metro Star

IN celebration of her becoming a Metro star, Mae Murray was entertained at luncheon at the Hotel Claridge Monday, December 12, by officers of Metro Pictures Corporation, distributors of her specials; executives of Tiffany Productions, Inc., makers of them, and the district and branch managers of the Metro exchanges.

Congratulations were extended to Miss Murray for her splendid achievement in the first of the photoplays to be released through Metro, "Peacock Alley," which those present at the luncheon had seen a few days before.

Mae Murray sailed from New York Tuesday, December 13, for West Indies, to begin her second Tiffany production for Metro release, titled, "Fascination." With her went Robert Z. Leonard, director general of Tiffany Productions, M. H. Hoffman, vice president and general manager of the same organization; Edmund Goulding, author of "Fascination," cameramen and a company of players.

Realart Engages George Seigmann as "Heavy"

George Seigmann, whose mulatto governor role in "The Clansman" still stands as a classic of villainy, and Casson Ferguson, have been cast for important roles in the new Wanda Hawley picture which Thomas Haffron has just started. Special interest attaches to this attraction, because it is the first original story to be written direct for the screen by Will Payne, noted novelist, short story writer and economic authority.

Otis Skinner Scores on Tour of Big Cities

OTIS SKINNER, the Exceptional Pictures Corporation star, whose next motion picture will be a film version of Booth Tarkington's play, "Mister Antonio," has recently started on a tour of the larger cities of the country, using as his vehicle, "Blood and Sand," the colorful drama of a Spanish bull fight, in which Mr. Skinner played at the Empire theatre in New York.

Mr. Skinner is playing limited engagements, and after two highly successful weeks at the Hollis theatre, Boston, he transferred the production to the Broad Street Theatre in Philadelphia, opening to a crowded and fashionable audience. The dramatic critics were distinctly laudatory in their remarks, complimenting Mr. Skinner on his remarkable powers of diverse characterization.

"Ruse of the Rattler" Playgoers Release

"The Ruse of the Rattler" is the current J. P. McGowan feature being released by Playgoers Pictures. This is the second of a series of five reel features made by Herald Productions, Inc., in which J. P. McGowan is the star as well as director. The first was "Discontented Wives," in which Mr. McGowan was supported by Lillian Rich.

It is understood that the third McGowan feature will be released in January, the title being "Fighting Chances," a railroad story of many thrills and a big heart-interest. The fourth feature of the series has been temporarily given the title of the "Hills of Missing Men." This will probably be a February release.

N. Y. and Newark First Runs for Educational

Five first run pictures in New York and Newark is Educational's record for the week beginning December 12. The two houses in New York City and two in Newark running Educational subjects are all pre-release houses.

At the Strand in New York "The Vagrant," featuring Lloyd "Ham" Hamilton and the second of the new series of Mermaid Comedies, was shown. "Snooky's Fresh Heir," with "Snooky, the Humanzee," was at the Rivoli.

In Newark the policy which Loew had followed recently of having an Educational Picture on the program at the opening of each of the new houses, was carried out at the opening of the new Loew's State theatre on Broad Street where "The Love Egg," a Punch Comedy with Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin and Baby John Henry, Jr., was shown. The Branford ran two of Educational's pictures, besides Kinograms. "The Northern Trail," a Selig-Rork Photoplay with an all-star cast, was an added feature, and "The Vagrant" was the comedy.

Two scenes from "The Power Within," produced by Achievement Films for release through Pathe. In the cast are William Tooker, Pauline Garon, Robert Kenyon and Robert Bently

Fine Program for Middies

Educational Preparing Entertaining Bill for Annapolis Showing

EDUCATIONAL is to provide a fine evening's entertainment for the middies at Annapolis in connection with its special showing of the short feature "The Battle of Jutland" at the Naval Academy on January 7.

With the cooperation of Admiral Wilson, superintendent of the Naval Academy, Educational has arranged a program of short subjects such as Broadway theatres in New York have been running more and more frequently in the last year for the entertainment of the discriminating Broadway audience.

From the pictures available at the Washington branch of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., pictures of all types that are typical of Educational's product have been selected and arranged around the presentation of "The Battle of Jutland." Music will be provided by the band at the Academy, the score arranged and used by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld at the Rialto for the first American showing of "The Battle of Jutland" being used for this picture.

The program will open with an overture by the Academy musicians. A Robert C. Bruce Scenic Beautiful, "Strolling Minstrels," a subject that lends itself particularly to musical accompaniment, will follow. Then the current issue of Kinograms will present for the students and naval officers present the news of the week.

"The White Mouse," the latest of the Selig-Rork Photoplays in two reels, with an all-star cast headed by Lewis Stone, Wallace Beery and Ethel Grey Terry, will provide the dramatic part of the program, and then "The Battle of Jutland" will be shown.

The program will be closed with "A Barnyard Cavalier," in which Bobby Vernon is featured.

Educational is also to show "The Battle of Jutland" at the Marine Barracks in Washington for the benefit of naval and army officers unable to attend the showing at Annapolis.

Universal Completes Four

Harry Carey, Gladys Walton, Marie Prevost and DuPont Films Finished

FOUR feature productions have been finished at Universal City, and are going through the editorial rooms on the way to the screen.

The first of these is "Man to Man," Harry Carey's Universal-Jewel dramatization of Jackson Gregory's novel, filmed under the direction of Stuart Paton. The leading woman is Lillian Rich, a young British actress. Alfred Allen, Charles Le Moyne, Willis Robards and Nick de Ruiz, Fontaine La Rue, little May Giraci, Harry Carter, Eugene Durr, Harley Chambers, Harold Goodwin, Lorimer Johnstone and Boris Karloff complete the cast.

Miss Prevost has just concluded her stellar characterization in "Cupid Incog" from a story evolved by Irving G. Thalberg, general manager of Universal City; Clarence Badger directed the filming. The cast includes T. Roy Barnes, Roy Atwell, Daisy Robinson, George Nichols, Del Lorice, Sadie Gordon, Ralph McCullough and Alida B. Jones.

Gladys Walton's latest completed production is "Playing with Fire." Harold Miller, Hallam Cooley, Kathryn McGuire, Hayward Mack, Eddie Gribbon, Sydney Franklin, Lydia Knott, Harriet Laurel, Elinor Hancock and Danny Hoy are in the cast. Dallas Fitzgerald directed.

The last scenes on "The Golden Gallows," starring Miss du Pont, have been taken. Jack Mower, Edwin Stevens, Barbara Tennant, George B. Williams, Douglas Gerrard, Eve Southern, Elinor Hancock, and Oliver Cross are in the supporting cast.

Fox Announces Releases for Christmas Day

FROM Fox Film Corporation comes the announcement that Clyde Cook's next feature comedy, "The Chauffeur," will be released on December 25, as a holiday special to the hundreds of exhibitors who have ready filled requests for early bookings. Christmas Day also will mark the release of "Fool Days," Al St. John's latest comedy production, according to the announcement.

The release of "The Chauffeur" comes after a run of more than two months at the New York Hippodrome in connection with the current season's bill there, "Get Together."

Fox also announces the release on Christmas Day of William Russell's latest starring vehicle, "The Roof Tree," written by Charles Neville Buck and directed by Jack Dillon. It is a romance of life in the South in which the title is applicable to a great tree, the spreading branches of which are traditionally believed to exert a protective influence over an old homestead. Sylvia Breamer plays the leading female role.

5,000 Theatres Playing Harold Lloyd Reissues

Five thousand theatres, large and small, are playing the re-issues of Harold Lloyd's best single reel comedies, according to an announcement made this week by Pathe Exchange, Inc.

In its selection of these re-issues, Pathe has been particularly careful to release only those productions which meet with today's screen standard. It is a remarkable fact, that, out of the considerable number of comedies from which Pathe has made its choice of re-issues, not more than three have failed to meet the severest test of current production values.

Representative Houses Book Wistaria Film

A STATEMENT from Playgoers Pictures lays much emphasis upon the manner in which the Wistaria production, "Anne of Little Smoky," is being received by the exhibitors. Although released as recently as November 20, already a very representative list of theatres in every exchange center have arranged for, or have finished, their showings.

In part this line-up includes the following houses: Westchester, Strand, Yorkville Casino, Empress, West End, New 125th Street, New Atlantic Garden, and more than 35 other houses in New York; Plaza, Salem, Mass.; Strand, Gloucester, Mass.; Orpheum, Amsterdam, N. Y.; Strand, New Kensington, Pa.; Fulton, Union Hill, N. J.; Academy, Jersey City; Orpheum, Youngstown, Ohio; Palace, St. Louis; Lyric, Cincinnati; Lyceum, St. Joseph, Mo.; Mission, Los Angeles; Hippodrome and Circle, Portland, Ore.; Loew's State, Sacramento, Cal.

The cast includes Winifred Westover, Joe King, Frank Sheridan and Dolores Casinelli.

R-C "Foolish Age" Vies with "Idle Class"

H. L. Davidson of the Lakin theatre, Great Bend, Kan., recently played "The Foolish Age," produced by Hunt Stromberg, starring Doris May and presented by R-C Pictures, for a run of three days. After he had checked in his returns, he wrote the following letter to the Kansas City branch which supplied the service saying:

"We ran Doris May in 'The Foolish Age' for three days with Charlie Chaplin in 'The Idle Class,' and it might interest you to know that 'The Foolish Age' received as many comments as the Chaplin picture. 'The Foolish Age' is a very clever picture, and we hope that your future Doris May pictures will be as good."

Goldwyn Lists Big Pictures

Strong Stories With Featured Players in Fifth Year Group

GOLDWYN believes that the day of the big picture with featured players is here, as is evidenced by recent productions by that corporation and by new photoplays being prepared for early release.

The company has already released, in its fifth year product, five or six such productions and has that many more almost ready for release with more to come.

"The Old Nest," by Rupert Hughes, with Mary Alden in the role of the mother, was the first of Goldwyn's big fifth year productions. This was followed by the same author's "Dangerous Curve Ahead" with Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix featured.

In the second group of releases for the fifth year were "Poverty of Riches," a Reginald Barker production, from a Leroy Scott story with Leatrice Joy and Richard Dix featured; Charles Kenyon's "The Invisible Power," directed by Frank Lloyd, featuring Irene Rich and House Peters; and Katherine Newlin Burt's first original screen play, "The Man from Lost River," with House Peters.

In the six pictures comprising the third group of fifth year releases are several productions that will rank, in the belief of Goldwyn executives, with the biggest pictures that firm has ever made.

Stress is laid upon "The Sin Flood," directed by Frank Lloyd and featuring Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix. Albert Payson Terhune's "Grand Larceny," directed by Wallace Worsley, has two featured players—Elliot Dexter and Claire Windsor. "Doubling for Romeo" is Will Rogers' greatest comedy, and promises to surpass in popularity Goldwyn's other great comedy, "Scratch My Back." Rupert Hughes' new picture, "The Wall Flower," directed by himself, features the charming young actress, Colleen Moore. "His Back Against the Wall," featuring Raymond Hatton, is a new kind of western comedy, directed by Rowland V. Lee.

Mary Roberts Rinehart's story, "The Glorious Fool," has Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix in the leading roles. It was directed by E. Mason Hopper and is a very human comedy with a strong dramatic situation.

Valentino to Play in "Beyond the Rocks"

Rudolph Valentino has been especially engaged to play opposite Gloria Swanson in "Beyond the Rocks," which Director Sam Wood has just started for Paramount at the Lasky studio. This announcement was made this week by Jesse L. Lasky, who stated that Mr. Valentino is unquestionably one of the big features in the screen world today, his work in George Melford's production, "The Sheik," having placed him in a high position among screen players. He also played opposite Dorothy Dalton in Mr. Melford's recently completed "Moran of the Lady Letty," and Mr. Lasky, who has seen parts of the picture, predicts that it will add still more laurels to the brow of the handsome young leading man.

"Beyond the Rocks" is from a story by Elinor Glyn.

Author's Approval for Hodkinson Release

Joseph C. Lincoln, author of more than a dozen Cape Cod stories, including such well known novels as "Captain Eri," "Cape Cod Folks," "The Woman Haters," "Galusha the Magnificent," "Shavings," "The Rise of Roscoe Paine," and many others, has been in close attendance during the past week at the Estee Studios in New York where Director Edwin L. Hollywood is producing "The Rise of Roscoe Paine," starring Irene Castle, for release through Hodkinson.

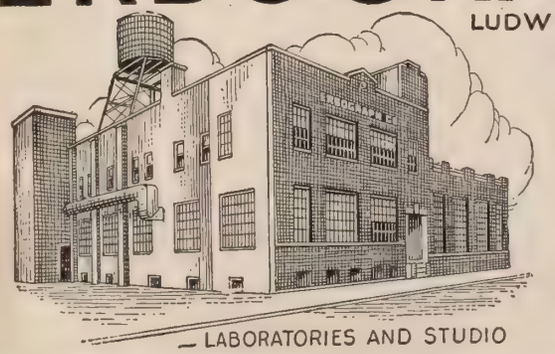
Selznick Provides Four Attractions for Jan.

Two of the Talmadge revivals and new offerings by Conway Tearle and Elaine Hammerstein are announced by Selznick for distribution through Select exchanges during January. Although "De Luxe Annie" is released as of December 30 it is, practically, a January issue and should be included with "Shadows of the Sea," "Good Night, Paul" and "Why Announce Your Marriage?" as the Selznick quartette that begins the new year.

Norma Talmadge is star of "De Luxe Annie" and Eugene O'Brien is leading man in a "Crook" drama. Conway Tearle, in "Shadows of the Sea," will have Doris Kenyon as his leading lady in a sensational drama directed by Alan Crosland. January 10 is set as the release date for "Shadows of the Sea." Constance Talmadge's revival of "Good Night, Paul" is set for January 20. The late Walter Edwards produced this Roland Oliver and Charles Dickson play for the screen.

Elaine Hammerstein's newest offering, "Why Announce Your Marriage?" is set for release January 30 with Niles Welch in the position of leading man. "Why Announce Your Marriage?" carries a theme inspired by Fanny Hurst's views of married life as set forth, with great resulting interest, some months ago. Arthur Housman, James Harrison, Huntley Gordon, Frank Currier, Florence Billings, Emily Fitzroy, Marie Burke, and Elizabeth Woodmere are included in Miss Hammerstein's support.

Exhibitor Lauds R-C Service and Films



F. M. Barrus, manager of the Gem theatre, Clinton, Wis., pays the the following tribute to R-C's service and pictures. He writes the R-C home office:

"Commercing Wednesday, December 7, we will use your service weekly instead of on alternate Sundays, and we trust this will meet with your approval.

"We are making this change for the reason that we feel that R-C features merit a weekly showing in our theatre. Thank you for an unexcelled service."

Convicts Deeply Moved by "Over the Hill"

As evidence of the emotion aroused in the 2,300 male convicts of the Michigan Penitentiary, during the recent screening there of "Over the Hill," the Fox super-special, Warden Henry L. Hulbert sent to the Fox offices more than 50 of the several hundred letters written voluntarily to him by the men in praise of the photodrama.

One letter signed 12,439 (the convicts are known by numbers) read in part:

"Words cannot express the thanks we boys feel toward the producer of 'Over the Hill.' I could not help but notice the tears of some boys who sat near me, in whose hearts I felt no tenderness existed. You would be surprised to see what an effect it has taken on us. There seems to be a warmer feeling amongst everybody here."

Additions to Gunning Field Sales Force

A number of important additions to its field sales force is announced by Wid Gunning, Inc. Joseph Bloom, for years Hodkinson Division Manager throughout the Middle West, has joined the Wid Gunning offices as Kansas City Manager. Charles Schwerin, one of the best known film men in the East, is now Fittsburgh manager for the Gunning organization.

J. F. Flarity, who ranked as one of the most popular exchange managers in the New Orleans territory, returns to that zone as representative of Wid Gunning, Inc.

Wm. DeMille to Make "Bought and Paid For"

Jesse L. Lasky announced Thursday that William de Mille's next production for Paramount will be George Broadhurst's play, "Bought and Paid For." Clara Beranger is now completing the scenario and work on the production will be started at the Lasky studio about December 20.

"Bought and Paid For," originally produced on the stage by William A. Brady a dozen years ago and presented on the road for several years after, proved one of the most successful dramas ever launched on the American stage. The play is now enjoying a successful revival at Mr. Brady's Playhouse Theatre, with Mr. Richman and Miss Nordstrom in their original roles.

First National Producers Active

Coast Studios Run at Full Speed During December

THE month of December will see motion picture production in the independent studios releasing their photoplays through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., at its height.

At the Thomas H. Ince studios, J. Parker Reid, Jr., has started work on "Pawned" and Maurice Tourneur will shortly begin production of a big feature. At Brunton's Constance Talmadge has started "The Divorcee" under Sidney Franklin's direction. Allen Holubar begins "The Soul Seeker" with Dorothy Phillips in the title role at the same studio this week. At the Louis B. Mayer studio John M. Stahl is just beginning "One Clear Call."

Katherine MacDonald under Chet Withey's direction has just started "Domestic Relations" at the Preferred Pictures studio. Charlie Chaplin also has begun another big comedy, but its character is a dark secret. Charlie intends that it shall be greater even than "The Kid." Out at Brunton's they are daily awaiting the arrival of Richard Walton Tully from New York. Mr. Tully will commence work upon his arrival on "The Masquerader."

The Ince production plans increase in scope each week. The big Culver City plant will be humming its busiest by the first of the year when "Finding Home," "Wooden Spoils," "The Hottentot," "Jim," "The Desert Fiddler" and "The Brotherhood of Hate" as well as the J. Parker Read, Jr., and Maurice Tourneur productions, all will be on the tapis.

With Richard Barthelmess finishing "All At Sea" up in Maine there is only one independent producing organization in the East releasing its productions through First National which is beginning a new picture. That is Hope Hampton which has just started "White Faith" from the William Dudley Pelly novel. Dick Barthelmess' next picture probably will be made in Los Angeles. He will start work about the time Norma Talmadge begins "The Duchess of Langeais" at the Brunton studio. Marshall Neilan will this week "shoot" the final scenes of "Penrod" with Wesley Barry in the stellar role.

Production activities at the Mack Sennett studios are now at their maximum, with all companies working a top speed, turning out the famous comedies for Associated First National release.

Encouraged by the success of her "Molly O," the little comedienne, Mabel Normand, has started on her next production, the working title of which is "Suzanna."

Print of "By Heck," featuring Billy Bevan and Mildred June, were shipped to New York this week, and work was begun almost immediately on "The Blockhead," with those favorite "joy-makers" playing the leads. The illness of Miss Phyllis Haver has delayed completion of her latest picture, "Bright Eyes," but she has now recovered, and it is expected that the prints will be ready for shipment East within a week.

B'way House for Cosmopolitan

"Wallingford" and "Humoresque" at Republic

A GALA double bill of motion picture successes has been put on at the Republic theatre, 42nd street and Broadway, New York, by Cosmopolitan Productions. The pictures are "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," fresh from a week's big run at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, and "Humoresque," the gold medal winner of 1920. These two pictures, surrounded by a fine musical comedy program, are being shown at popular prices, a unique entertainment for the city's holiday crowds. A big symphony orchestra under the direction of Ludwig Laurier provides the musical setting for the productions and Miss Jean Tell, a well-known soprano, sings.

The taking over of the Republic theatre and its preparation for motion pictures was a triumph of speed and energy. At eleven o'clock Saturday night, December 10th a spoken drama closed there. From that hour until seven-thirty Sunday night, when the doors were reopened, a large force of men was at work. A platform was built in the balcony and a projection booth was built. Two machines were brought from storage and set up.

The exterior and the interior of the house were draped with American flags. Lobby displays were put up and announcement signs painted for the front of the house. The large orchestra was assembled hurriedly but not in time to afford a rehearsal of the musical score. Miss Tell went over her selection quickly with the orchestra leader.

The original intention was to present "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" as the only feature picture and half page advertisements announcing that picture were made up with the greatest of speed and inserted in the Sunday morning newspapers.

In the early morning hours of Sunday a four-page newspaper—the "Battlesburg Blade" was written, set up in type and printed by the thousands. This newspaper announces in bold type the arrival of J. Rufus Wallingford in the town of Battlesburg. It contains an interview with the world-famous promotor and dilates upon his smashing big plans for the development of the community. The "Blade" also carries much information of interest to all who see the picture or to those who have lived in Battlesburg or similar towns. This newspaper was distributed broadcast without charge in the Times Square district.

A large crowd assembled in front of the Republic theatre before the doors were opened and soon filled the house to capacity. "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" was greeted with gales of laughter and hearty applause.

During the day numerous inquiries came to the producing company regarding the possibility of reviving "Humoresque." Because of the interest in Borzage's previous picture stimulated by the release of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" it was decided close to midnight Sunday to add "Humoresque" to the bill the following day and to make the run of the show continuous from noon to 11:30 p. m. daily. Immediately orders were issued for the changing of the advertisements in Monday's evening newspapers to include the second picture and a new half-page advertisement was made up for the early editions of the New York Evening Journal. This double screening affords motion picture fans an opportunity of seeing Frank Borzage's two masterpieces.

"From the Manger to Cross" in Demand

Increased bookings for the six-part motion-picture, "From the Manger to the Cross," are reported by Vitagraph. This production was made several years ago in Palestine and Egypt. The bookings on this picture usually multiply around the Christmas and Easter seasons, but this year's bookings are reported to have set a record.

Chas. R. Rogers, general-manager of distribution of R-C Pictures Corporation

First National Has 24 Ready for Release

Twenty-four big photoplays are now ready for their First National releasing dates. Charles Ray has turned over "The Barnstormer," "Gas, Oil and Water" and "The Deuce of Spades" to First National's New York offices. The editing of Katherine MacDonald's latest plays, "The Beautiful Liar" and "The Infidel," also has been finished.

Mack Sennett has two short subject comedies, "Be Reasonable" and "By Heck," completed; J. L. Frothingham has shipped "A Bride of the Gods" east and is finishing the editing of "The Man Who Smiled." John M. Stahl has completed the editing of "The Song of Life" at the Louis B. Mayer plant and at the same studio Anita Stewart's "A Question of Honor" recently received its final finishing touches and was shipped east. Anita completed her engagement in "The Woman He Married" this week and the picture is now being edited.

At the Thomas H. Ince studio the editing of "Skin Deep" was recently completed. Norma Talmadge's two plays, "Smilin' Through" and "Love's Redemption," which she finished in New York, are now ready for a release date. Buster Keaton has two comedies scheduled for distribution to theatres throughout the country in the near future. They are "The Boat" and "The Paleface."

R. A. Walsh's "Kindred of the Dust" is in the final stages of its editing. Three foreign productions, "A Sentimental Bloke" from Australia; a re-issue of "Cabiria," the famous Italian production; and "All for a Woman" are also ready for a release date. Selig-Rork's "The Rosary" and "The Lotus Eater," a Marshall Neilan production starring John Barrymore, complete the list.

Dorothy Woods To Play Opposite Art Acord

Dorothy Woods will play opposite Art Acord in "The Days of Buffalo Bill," Universal announces.

Robert Dillon prepared the story of Buffalo Bill for filming, following history and weaving the whole plot around the romantic adventures of a young pioneer.

Blackton Finishes Feature

"The Glorious Adventure" Produced Abroad, in Natural Colors

J. STUART BLACKTON'S picture, "The Glorious Adventure," produced in England in natural colors with Lady Diana Manners and an all-star cast, was recently privately shown in the British capital, prior to its being offered in a large London theatre, and has been declared to be a magnificent production that marks a new epoch in screen art and advances film standards in many ways.

This is said to be the first photoplay to be produced in natural colors, and the result of this special Prizma process devised and developed for Mr. Blackton's use in this film has been awaited with great interest by those identified with the film art in many countries. It is, in addition, a massive production that from many standpoints of technique and artistry takes a high rank, according to the London reports.

For some time, the great world audience of the screen has been awaiting the color film. It is a part of human nature to admire the rich tints of nature. The real beauty of a stage production has been, to a marked extent, lost in the drab monotone of the black and white film.

A pioneer in practically every branch of screen progress, Mr. Blackton began considering some years ago how a color photo-play might be made. The Prizma process appeared to him the most successful of all color efforts on the screen, and he entered into negotiations with the Prizma company with a view to having perfected a process by which the rapid action of a screen play could be photographed in color.

Mr. William Van Dorn Kelley, inventor of the Prizma method of color photography, started his experiments, which have now been proved successful.

"The Glorious Adventure," according to the London reports, will attract world-wide attention because of its being the first color photo-play ever made, because it is one of the most lavish film productions yet offered to the public, because of its compelling dramatic story laid in the time of Charles II, and because in all it is a distinctly artistic production, offering an all-star cast, headed by a celebrated beauty who has distinguished herself for her acting in this picture, Lady Diana Manners.

Metro Studios Close Jan. 1

Hollywood Plant to Close for 90 Days; Ahead of Release Schedule

ITS production program eight months ahead of the release schedule, Metro Pictures Corporation will, January 1, suspend the making of photoplays in its Hollywood studios for a period of ninety days.

Every picture listed for distribution between the first of the year and the beginning of September has been completed, according to Metro. This includes not only the actual photography of the action but practically all of the cutting and titling, it is stated.

A partial list of finished pictures includes the following, which have been definitely titled:

The Rex Ingram productions of "The Prisoner of Zanda," a spectacular motion picture version of Anthony Hope's romantic novel, adapted by Mary O'Harar and photographed by John F. Seitz.

Metro special productions starring Viola Dana, Bert Lytell and Alice Lake. The Viola Dana features whose titles are made public are "The Fourteenth Lover," a Harry Beaumont production of Alice D. G. Miller's story, as adapted by Edith Kennedy; "Glass Houses," written by Clara Genevieve Kennedy and scenarized by her sister, Edith Kennedy; Irvin S. Cobb's story, "The Five Dollar Baby," a Harry Beaumont production of Rex Taylor's adaptation; "Seeing's Believing," a third Beaumont production, for which Mr. Taylor wrote the story and Miss Kennedy the script, and "Like 'Em Rough."

Presenting Bert Lytell in stellar roles are the Bayard Veiller productions of J. P. Marquard's Saturday Evening Post Story, "The Right That Failed," scenarized by Lenore Coffee; "The Phantom Bride," Miss Coffee's screen version of Justus Miles Forman's story, "Tommy Carteret;" and "Danger." Alice Lake already has completed these Maxwell Karger productions, whose scenarios were written by June Mathis: "The Golden Gift," "Kisses," from May Tully's story; and "Hate," by Wadsworth Camp.

The following George D. Baker productions for S-L (Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin) Pictures, starring Gareth Hughes: "Little Eve Ascends," from Thomas Beer's Saturday Evening Post story; "Stay Home," by Edgar Franklin; and "The Adventures of a Ready Letter Writer," another Post story, by Blanche Brace.

Shirley Mason Received at White House

Shirley Mason, the Fox star, dropped in to pay her respects to President Harding and Mrs. Harding while stopping over at Washington, D. C., enroute to Hollywood from Charlotte, N. C., where she had attended the Southern Motion Picture Exposition.

While at the White House, Miss Mason was introduced by President Harding to a number of government officials. Miss Mason departed for Hollywood via Chicago, where she remained several days for personal appearances. Among new productions planned for the little Fox star is "Little Miss Smiles," in which she appears as a "little mother" of the Ghetto.

Richard Dix and Colleen Moore in "The Wall Flower," a Rupert Hughes picture for Goldwyn release

Triart Film Used for Classroom Study

The faculty of Columbia University introduced an innovation last week when actual films were incorporated in the studies of the class on motion picture technique and production. The first film used in the class studies was Triart's "Beggar Maid," first of the series of Great Masterpiece productions being distributed by Hodkinson. This is the production based on the painting by Sir E. Burne-Jones which ran two weeks at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New Yorl, three weeks at the Park in Boston and is now in the second week of an indefinite run at Grauman's Rialto in Los Angeles.

A. O. Price, a representative of the Triart office, was present at the showing of "The Beggar Maid" in Columbia and afterwards dwelt on the technical points involved in the production of pictures, and of "The Beggar Maid" in particular.

Metro Sets "Peacock Alley" for Jan. 23

Metro will release its first Mae Murray picture, "Peacock Alley," a Tiffany Production, January 23. "Peacock Alley" is presented on the screen by Robert Z. Leonard, the director General of Tiffany Productions, Inc., and director of the picture. It is by Edmund Goulding and based on a story by Ouida Dergere.

William Duncan Starts "Man Hunters"

William Duncan started production early this week on "Man Hunters," his next Vitagraph production. It is being filmed at the West Coast studios. The story of "Man Hunters" is laid in the Northwest. Edith Johnson appears opposite Duncan.

New Production Manager at "U" City

J. M. Voshell, a motion picture executive with a wide acquaintance in the industry, has been appointed a production manager at Universal City. He succeeds Harry Schenck, who recently resigned.

TERRITORIAL SALES AND PURCHASES

In the Independent Field

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

First Sale Reported on Brandt-Davis Feature

Immediately following the announcement last week of the opening of the sales campaign on "Life's Greatest Question," George H. Davis, Joe Brandt features, Dave Mundstock, President of Strand Features of Detroit, made a special trip to New York for the purpose of viewing the picture and securing rights to it in his territory. Immediately following a special screening, Mr. Mundstock purchased it for the Michigan territory.

His interest in the feature was occasioned by the fact that he holds territorial rights in Michigan to "The Heart of the North," the first of the Davis-Brandt features, and reports that it is one of the biggest box-office attractions there.

Mr. Mundstock, after seeing "Life's Greatest Question" pronounced it an even greater picture than "The Heart of the North" and said that the combination of Davis and Brandt as producers, Harry Revier as director, Roy Stewart as featured player, and the Canadian Northwest as the locale of the action, was a hard one to beat.

Advertising Aids for "Oh, Mabel, Behave"

The advertising accessories to "Oh, Mabel Behave!" the five reel Mack Sennett comedy starring Mabel Normand, Owen Moore, Mack Sennett and Ford Sterling, the first offering of Photocraft Productions, Inc., are reported to be very complete and quite out of the ordinary. The posters, ranging in size from several styles of 1 sheets to 24 sheets, are eye compelling and artistic. The scenes for these posters were selected with the idea of presenting some of the most humorous episodes of the picture. One of the six-sheets is said to be something entirely new in lithographs, it being a cartoon representation of the four stars, this poster in particular called forth much favorable comment from all those who saw the line.

There is a great demand for the souvenir mirrors and "Put and Take" games, for many thousands of which Mr. Hirsh had to place an additional order. The tie-up with the music stores throughout the country for the song entitled "Oh Mabel Behave" is well under way and it is predicted that this very catchy piece will be one of the popular musical hits of the screen.

New Superior Salesman

Clarence W. Phillips has been added to the City Sales force of the Superior Screen Service, Inc., of Chicago, Ill.

Neal Hart on New Picture

Completes "Tangled Trails" for Wm. Steiner and Begins Another

WM. STEINER PRODUCTIONS, now producing the new Neal Hart series of five-reel features, have completed the first release "Tangled Trails," a thrilling story of the Great Northwest. It is said to be the strongest story that Mr. Hart has ever appeared in, and is packed with stunts and startling incidents; wonderful, big, outdoor, winter scenes, teeming with atmosphere of the wilderness on virgin territory never before pictured. The company covered from the far Northwest to New York City, to take the last shots of "Tangled Trails," and as soon as the company could pack up, Mr. Hart and his principals took the train for San Antonio, Texas, to get the exterior scenes for the next Steiner Production.

It will be a big story dealing with the cattle country, where Neal Hart will feel at home as he is an old ex-cowpuncher. At one time he was Sheriff of Manaville, Wyoming, and during his office there, he broke up several rustling gangs, including the "De Ford" gang that had terrorized that community for some time. Hart was also brand inspector for Converse County, Wyoming, and has had many thrilling experiences with brand plotters. Wishing to see the outside world, he joined the Miller Bros. 101 Ranch, and toured with that show for several seasons; when the 101 boys were released for pictures, Neal Hart was among those present, and it was not long before his earnest and natural work attracted enough attention to become listed as a star.

Neal is an expert roper. With the Miller show, he gave exhibitions not only in roping but bulldogging and riding bucking horses. His work in pictures is sincere and he has a large following among the fans, who like the red-blooded sons of the plains.

Russell Production Sold

"Shadows of Conscience" Bought by Geo. Levy for Denver Territory

FOLLOWING closely the announcement of the purchase of the Russell Productions, "Shadows of Conscience," by the Pioneer Corporation, for the states of New York, Northern New Jersey, Indiana and Illinois, comes the announcement from the Russell offices that the rights to Southern Missouri, the entire states of Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico, have been bought by George Levy, head of the Supreme Photoplay Company, with offices in Denver, Col.

Mr. Levy will open an exchange in Kansas City to assure the best possible service for the territory of Kansas and Southern Missouri, the release in that territory being made shortly after the first of the year. The far Western territory will be handled through the offices of the Supreme Photoplay Company, in Denver, Col.

Mr. Levy, appreciating the magnitude of the feature, and the unusual combination of thrills with comedy and tensely dramatic situations, cunningly contrived by Director John P. McCarthy, is planning an advertising campaign, which, from the standpoint of actual expenditure and broadness of scope will equal anything that has been appropriated for exploiting feature released this year.

The Pioneer Corporation of Chicago is likewise preparing an immense advertising campaign which will break as soon as the first loop booking is closed. In Chicago, particularly, the feature offers a splendid field for exploitation.

40 Independents Form St. Louis Association

Representatives of forty independent producers, with headquarters in St. Louis and operating in Missouri and Illinois, have formed the Exhibitors Direct Service Exchange, capitalized at $50,000 with Sidney Baker as general manager. Baker has been identified with the motion picture industry in St. Louis for several years.

The new association announces that it has contracted for and will be ready to deliver on release the following productions, four Curwoods, four Peter B. Kynes, four Neva Gerbers, six Jack Hoxies, 52 comedies, a serial, "The Man of the North," in which Ann Lytle will star and four Grace Davidson productions.

The stock is all sold. They announce that their intention is to place independent productions in as many houses as possible at once in Western Illinois and Eastern Missouri.

Backer Insists Stars Be Equally Advertised

Of the several novel features introduced by Franklyn E. Backer, President of East Coast Productions, in the new franchise method of handling pictures by which the productions of Amalgamated will be distributed through independent exchanges, none has caused more comment than his insistence that the clause of the contract with Amalgamated artists which agrees to co-star all of the well known players, all of whom are said to be stars of recognized starring ability, shall be carried out to the letter in all advertising done by the exchanges and the exhibitors.

Mr. Backer has held conferences with Franchise Holders in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Chicago, and expects to continue his present swing around the circle until he covers every territory east of an including Minneapolis.

"Pasteboard Crown" Is Well Built Picture

"Permanent success is usually based upon a firm foundation" was the reply made by the producers of "The Pasteboard Crown," when being congratulated upon its many merits, following a private showing to interested parties and representatives of well known distributors. Messrs. Nathan & Semerad, who sponsored the Travers Vale production, also stated that while deeply gratified, they were not at all surprised. They expected a good picture because they made certain the requisites were there, before it was put into construction.

"To begin with," said one of the gentlemen, "we knew the story was rattling good screen material. Miss Eve Unsell, who in collaboration with Garret Elsden Fort, made the original adaptation, assured us of that and we do not know of anyone in a better position to pass such judgment than the well-known scenario expert. Also, had Travers Vale not been certain of its screen value, he would not have held on to the rights for such an extended length of time—until he could produce it upon a scale he knew would make it one of the leading pictures of the year. Then came the assignment of the working 'script, which was done by Thomas F. Fallon, followed by the selection of a cast which everyone agrees, is paramount."

The players refered to are: Robert Elliot, Eleanor Woodruff, Evelyn Greeley, Gladys Valerie, Al Roccardi, Jane Jennings, Dora Mills Adams, J. H. Gilmour, John Hopkins and others. In addition the heralded work of Jacques Bizuel, at the camera recommends the photographic value of "The Paste Board Crown,"

Kirkpatrick Enthuses Over "His Nibs"

A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general-manager of Exceptional Pictures Corporation, whose production, Charles (Chic) Sale in "His Nibs" is being released on the state rights market by L. L. Hiller, President of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., states:

"The interest which is being displayed in 'His Nibs" during a period when everyone has appeared too willing to cry depression, is a revelation to me, and it is surprising to note the keen competition for the rights to the picture in various territories.

"The usual number of inquiries from the theatres throughout the entire country for the booking of "His Nibs" insures the buyers of success. In fact, the picture could be booked for a greater amount of first and second run, and circuit booking alone, which more than totals the selling price to the State Right buyers. This encouraging condition convinces me conclusively that there is every reason, not only for Exceptional, but for every factor in the business, to be optimistic for the present and for the future."

"Heart of the North" Sold for Europe

Foreign rights were sold last week on "The Heart of the North," the George H. Davis-Joe Brandt Independent feature which has proved one of the season's biggest sellers on the States Right Market.

In one single deal the entire United Kingdom and all Continental Europe, including Egypt and Turkey were purchased by John Carlson, with offices in the Times Building, New York and representative of some of the largest and most influential film organizations in foreign countries.

Phil Selznick, head of Phil Selznick Productions of Ohio, who was in New York this week on a short trip, paid a special visit to the offices of George H. Davis and Joe Brandt to compliment them on their feature "The Heart of the North" and to tell them how enthusiastic he is over the way it is going over in his territor.

24-Sheet prepared by Exceptional Pictures for "His Nibs," starring Charles (Chic) Sale

Special "His Nibs" Posters

Unusual Paper Ready for Exploitation of Chic Sale Feature

IN THEIR endeavor to give the Exhibitor one hundred per cent. cooperation, Exceptional Pictures Corporation, producers of "His Nibs," the five-reel comedy novelty in which Charles (Chic) Sale makes his first appearance as a screen star, has provided an unusually striking set of posters.

The twenty-four sheet shows Sale in each of these seven characters he portrays, and also features the handsome "Chic" in a straight portrait. These pictures were specially posed by Strauss-Peyton, of Kansas City. The largest figure of this poster is that of Theo. Bender, commonly known as "His Nibs," the predominating character in the picture, and Mr. Sale's beloved "old man" of the vaudeville stage.

There are three one-sheets, each of them showing a different character portrayed by "Chic" Sale in "His Nibs"—one a bust picture of Mr. Percifier, the proprietor of the The Weekly Bee, who acts as the local censor, Wally Craw, the local weather prophet, who never smiles, and young Elmer Bender, the gawky son of "His Nibs," champion marble player of the town.

The six-sheet is one of the finest lithographs ever sent out, and is sure to meet with great approval. It was prepared from a specially taken photograph of Mr. Sale as "His Nibs," the photograph having been made by Strauss-Peyton of Kansas City. In the upper left-hand corner, in an oval, is a straight picture of Mr. Sale made in the same studio, showing the interesting contrast the very young protean artist, and one of his most notable rural characterizations.

There are two three sheets, both showing scenes from the play. One depicts the exciting moment when Chic Sale as "The Boy" fights with the swindlers who have robbed him, and who are about to rob the father of the girl he loves, the other being a love scene, Chic Sale as "The Boy," with Coleen Moore, who plays the part of his sweetheart.

New Grace Davison Picture

Charles Horan Writes Story of "The Splendid Lie," New Feature

GRACE DAVISON, whose beautiful picture, "Love, Hate and a Woman," is a marked success in New York, Philadelphia and other large cities in the United States, is the star of "The Splendid Lie," written and directed by Charles Horan.

The story of this picture is well within the understanding of most people. It is based upon the simple, home truth that a pretty girl cannot be too careful in her dealings with handsome, strangers of the other sex.

People who visit the motion picture theatre for purposes of entertainment and excitement will certainly get it in this picture. Mr. Horan writes good picture stories and directs them well and Miss Davison always looks beautiful and always gets over well. In this picture she has gathered around her a very strong supporting cast, including Noel Tearle, who plays the villainous step-brother; J. Thornton Baston, who plays Dean De Witt, the wicked young husband of another woman who tries to lead Dorris Delafield into a bigamous marriage; Jere Austin plays James Holden, the young bank president whom Dorris finally marries.

The picture has many fine bits of characterization supplied by studies of rooming house life, church life and hotel life.

New Kineto Review Series

Thirteen Single Reel Subjects Announced for Release

THE next series of Kineto Reviews to be released through the National Exchanges will be the fourth, each series comprising thirteen subjects of one-reel each.

The contents of the series are as follows:

"New York America's Gateway." A sight-seeing trip on the Island of Manhattan, which was the original City of New York. The audience is taken into the city by airplane, passing over the Statue of Liberty and landing at the Battery.

"Fortune Builders."—The life-story of the lowly silk moth which weaves and spins for mankind. A fascinating story of how these insects create fortunes in America and in the Orient.

"The Game of Golf."—Golf is rapidly becoming a game of the masses. This picture illustrates the proper uses of the many different golf clubs and in the illustration it becomes a lovely sport reel.

"How the Swiss Boy Scout Spends His Vacation."—Swiss Boy Scouts even on their vacation, work much more than they play. An intensely interesting reel to the Boy Scouts of America and that means about every family.

"Rambles 'Round Rio."—A travel picture with visits to Tiajuca, Sylvester, Nicheroy and Paquata Island and other beauty spots near Rio de Janeiro, the capital of Brazil.

"Liquid Air."—Here is a subject that has been lectured upon for years; has proved one of the most popular subjects on all the lyceum circuits.

"A Day's Fun at Blackpool."—Blackpool is a great pleasure resort in Lancaster, forty miles north of Liverpool, and has been called the "Coney Island of England."

"Rejuvenated Mexico."—Since the revolution, Mexico has made great strides and this picture shows it. Beauty and history are intertwined in this picture of our Southern neighbor who is just now coming into her own.

"Childhood."—A picture of many kinds of children, so sympathetic, so understanding that one might believe it was written by children.

"Giants of Industry."—This is a study of ants and flies. Ants, particularly, are giants of industry.

"In Gypsyland."—A lovely travel-reel that tells of the romantic nomads who are famed in music and song and story. The gypsies are chiefly of the Orient and of the Balkans—that's where the finest gypsy music comes from, and similarly, those are the places in the world that give the pictures of the gypsy.

"Friends of Man."—The sagacity and usefulness of animals and birds has long been understood and appreciated, but never so much has after it has been illustrated in pictures.

"Willing Captives."—Most wild animals when properly cared for and fed are quite content with their lot. This picture shows many kinds of fierce beasts under conditions of captivity that seem to make them as happy as they were in their jungle homes. It is one of the famous Urban series on the "Wild Animal Kingdom."

Announce Release Method

Warner Brothers' "School Days" Will Be a State Right Release

FOLLOWING the previous presentations of Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, at the Sherman Hotel (Chicago, and the Astor Hotel, New York, many inquiries have been received at the Warner Brothers offices in New York as to the disposition of their latest productions.

Harry M. Warner is authority for the statement that "School Days" will not be handled by any organization other than the Warner Brothers, and it will be sold on a state right basis.

"We are more than pleased with the favorable comments that have been accorded 'School Days' by the trade press," said Mr. Warner, "and feel sure that our latest production will also meet with the approval of exhibitors and their patrons. It is not my purpose to argue the merits of the attraction, but if I may be permitted a word I should stress the fact that 'School Days' in its entirety pleases us because, if for other purpose, it will help to maintain the dignity of the screen.

"We have long been harassed by so called reformers who are constantly seeking an avenue to wage propaganda against the motion picture industry. This to a certain extent jeopardizes the business of the picture theatre owner. In other words, he is hard pressed for productions that will at one stroke make money for him, and also gain the good will of his patrons.

"If our latest picture will help to counteract the influences of the Blue Law advocates, and others whose creed is a direct slap at the most marvelous medium of expression that has ever been invented by man, then I say truly we will have been more than repaid for our efforts in placing it before the motion picture theatre-going public. Certainly if we cannot fight our antagonists with the proper screen material, then this entire industry will go to the dogs. Our motto has been and always will be: clean, wholesome, entertaining productions that will be a credit to the screen,"

Prominent members of the "School Days" cast include Francis X. Conlan, J. H. Gilmore, Margaret Seddon, Arline Blackburn, George Lessey and Jerome Patrick. Harry Rapf produced the picture, and William Nigh directed it.

"The Great Alone" Is Nearing Completion

As the West Coast Films Corporation's new super-picture, "The Great Alone," nears completion, Isadore Bernstein, the managing director, is becoming more enthused. In a wire to the Producers Security Corporation, who will handle the releasing arrangements Mr. Bernstein states: "Monroe Salisbury and 'Draga,' supported by Laura Anson and Walter Law are doing the most remarkable dramatic work I have ever seen. Jacques Jaccard, the director, is putting over the greatest picture of his entire career. It is a hundred per cent. production."

Marshal Foch Visits Warner Bros. Studio

Marshal Foch was the guest of honor at the Warner Brothers studio in Hollywood recently. The French hero witnessed the filming of one of the thrilling scenes in the new serial "Shadows of the Jungles," in which Philo McCollough and Grace Darmond are starred. Sam and Jack Warner were congratulated by the Marshal on the realism of the incident. Monty Banks acted as interpreter.

"Nature's Babies" Continues B'way Run

"Nature's Babies," the Urban special which has been on Broadway so long, continues there this week, having moved from the Criterion to the Rialto along with "Peter Ibbetson."

"Nature's Babies" is also playing a special engagement in the Carlton Theatre, in Philadelphia, at the special request of Frank W. Buhler, of the Stanley Company.

It will be released nationally very soon and will probably go out by itself. It is a one-reel Urban Popular Classic.

American Authors Picture at N. Y. Strand

"Washington Irving," one of the twelve links in the "Great American Authors" series, published as Urban Popular Classics by the Kineto Company, is making its bow at the New York Strand this week.

James A. Fitzpatrick directed the entire series and he is now engaged on a series similar in style and based on Great American statesmen.

Western Classic First Release Jan. 15

The announcement of the release date of the first of the Bob Horner series of two-reel Western production is contained this week by Western Classic Sales Company in a statement revealing that "Bullets and Justice" will introduce the new series to the State Righters on January 15. "Bullets and Justice" feature Tom Pickford and Bill Patton.

The second subject of the series is "The Gates of Hell," featuring Pete Morrison, one of the few screen players who has retained his popularity throughout his entire career. Ten subjects have been completed.

New Pola Negri Production

Commonwealth's "Vendetta" to Run at New York and Brooklyn Strand

SAMUEL ZIERLER, president of Commonwealth Film Corporation, announces that the week beginning December 18 his Pola Negri special production, "Vendetta," will play at both the Mark Strand theatres in New York and Brooklyn.

"Vendetta" has two big stars, Pola Negri and Emil Jannings. The latter starred at the Strand in his own right only recently. The last time Pola Negri played in the two theatres was in "Gypsy Blood."

"Vendetta" takes its name from the action of a story laid in Bagdad and Monte Carlo, and is based on the terrible blood oath of Corsica.

It has previously been acted in the legitimate on the European continent and the screen version was prepared from Leo Lasko's play by George Jacoby. Mr. Jacoby also has directed the picture.

"Vendetta" is the first of Commonwealth's big list of 1922 specials to be released. Mr. Zierler has another Pola Negri picture ready to follow it. The name is "Intrigue," in which she plays the role of an alluring, heartless adventuress. The setting of "Intrigue" is entirely in Paris.

"Torchy" in the Prize Ring

"Battling Torchy" Will Have Thrilling Comedy Prize Fight

FINDING that automobile racing does not bring the proper thrill that should enhance the red blood of youth, Johnny Hines, in his next Torchy picture, has decided to don the padded mitts, and in one of the scenes he demonstrates how swiftly and neatly he can place a right cross.

So for "Battling Torchy" Johnny Hines is training for this prize ring bout. In "Battling Torchy" Johnny Hines has named a good lively title, and will give his thousands of juvenile admirers a thrill that comes with every boxing bout.

In Central and South America the Torchy comedies have taken hold of the photoplay public by storm. The Latin Americans look upon Johnny Hines in the same capacity as a drawing attraction as Fairbanks and other stars of long standing. His "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" has proven that Mr. Hines is a comedian of the very first rank, and that in a feature picture he is even better than in the "two reelers" where he has to work at high speed at all times in order to get in all the situations. In "Battling Torchy" Mr. Hines is departing from his regular line of work, but for a versatile comedian like Johnny Hines—a Benny Leonard stunt only adds to the merriment of those who really love Mr. Torchy.

Detective Series Shown at Scotland Yard

A screening of the Sherlock Holmes series of two-reel subjects was held before Scotland Yard, in London, recently, under the direction of William Alexander, president of Alexander Film Corporation, which company will distribute these pictures in America. Mr. Alexander recently went to England to bring to this country Eilly Norwood, who plays the title role.

The screening before the London detective bureau afforded the pictures considerable publicity in England. Mr. Alexander also presented the British Museum with a print of the detective episode selected as favorite in Scotland Yard, to be preserved as an exhibition and subject for presentation.

Director Sidney Olcott Sails for Europe

Sidney Olcott, responding to a call to Europe by cable for the purpose of a consultation with one of the big film organizations there, relative to the adoption of American methods of direction and studio production, left Tuesday.

Mr. Olcott's long experience in directing both in the United States and fourteen countries abroad, will undoubtedly be of value to these enterprising interests, whose intention it is to give their productions a safe footing when they introduce them into America.

The pioneer director left on the Aquatania and before his return the latter part of January, he will visit Rome, Berlin and London.

Two More Territories Sold on "Tarzan"

Marking the final sales drive in the interests of "Adventures of Tarzan," the serial starring Elmo Lincoln, announcement was made this week of the disposal of two more territories to state right distributors. Harry Lande, of the Lande Film Distributing Company, with offices in Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Cincinnati, purchased "Adventures of Tarzan" for the state of Ohio. The second buyer of the week is Lee Goldberg, First National Exhibitors circuit of Louisville, Ky., who acquired the states of Kentucky and Tennessee.

Jimmie Adams Appears in Hallroom Comedy

The first of the Hallroom Boys Comedies in which Jimmie Adams appears as Ferdie in support of Sid Smith who featured as Percy in this series of two-reel gloom-chasers distributed by Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc. is on the way, according to word that has just been received from the West Coast production centre

Louis Weiss on Trip

Louis Weiss, secretary of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, will leave New York Monday of this week for a flying trip in the interests of "Adventures of Tarzan," starring Elmo Lincoln. Mr. Weiss will first go to Toronto, Canada. Following the completion of his business in Canada he will visit Detroit, New England and Washington, D. C.

Sunset Comedies Ready

J. A. Fitzgerald, Director for the Buckeye Pictures Corporation of Youngstown, Ohio, has just completed the first four of a series of single reel Sunset Comedies, which are to be released by Forward Film Distributors, Inc.

C. C. Burr's Review for Capitol Theatre

"SNUB" POLLARD

Comedies that sparkle like the stars on a frosty night

First class one reel comedies are the scarcest things in the market today.

But if they were as thick as flies in summer, the Hal Roach comedies would still be doing what they are doing now,—playing more theatres than any comedies made.

Hal Roach, the man who discovered and developed Harold Lloyd, knows how to make comedies that sparkle like the stars on a frosty night.

And they are getting better all the time.

(Snub Pollard—Roach Comedy—Pathe)

THEY are kidding picture production in this latest Snub Pollard comedy as its title would indicate. The author has thought up a really clever burlesque which may be said to be the comedian's best bet in many moons. The director has spared no one in his exaggerations. He puts the satiric touch to the picture conception of the man with the megaphone and includes them all—even the extras. The impressible Snub plays the part of a caretaker in a certain cozy home. Along comes a director and commandeers the house for picture purposes, with the big scene being a battle which is to be staged upon the front lawn. Snub objects to this high-handed business, but becomes so interested in the proceedings that he is enlisted for a part. The comedy travels merrily along and it is compact with ridiculous fun. The old Union suits (no pun intended) are dragged out and some of the extras appear in them as Northern soldiers, while others put on the regalia of the Indians. Marie Mosquini lends the charming touches through a fragrant personality which is emphasized through a fetching crinoline costume. This is a capital filler anywhere.—Length 1 reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"PENNY IN THE SLOT" (Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard scheduled for release by Pathe Nov. 20.—This is a really good comedy. It brings back to memory the days of old when you could visit a penny arcade and by dropping a coin in the slot see bathing girls or mothers-in-law, have your fortune told or listen to a record with one of those arrangements that resembles a physician's sethescope. Pollard plays the part of the idler with a few pennies, Marie Mosquini the cashier and Noah Young is "Horrible Horace," a bad man.

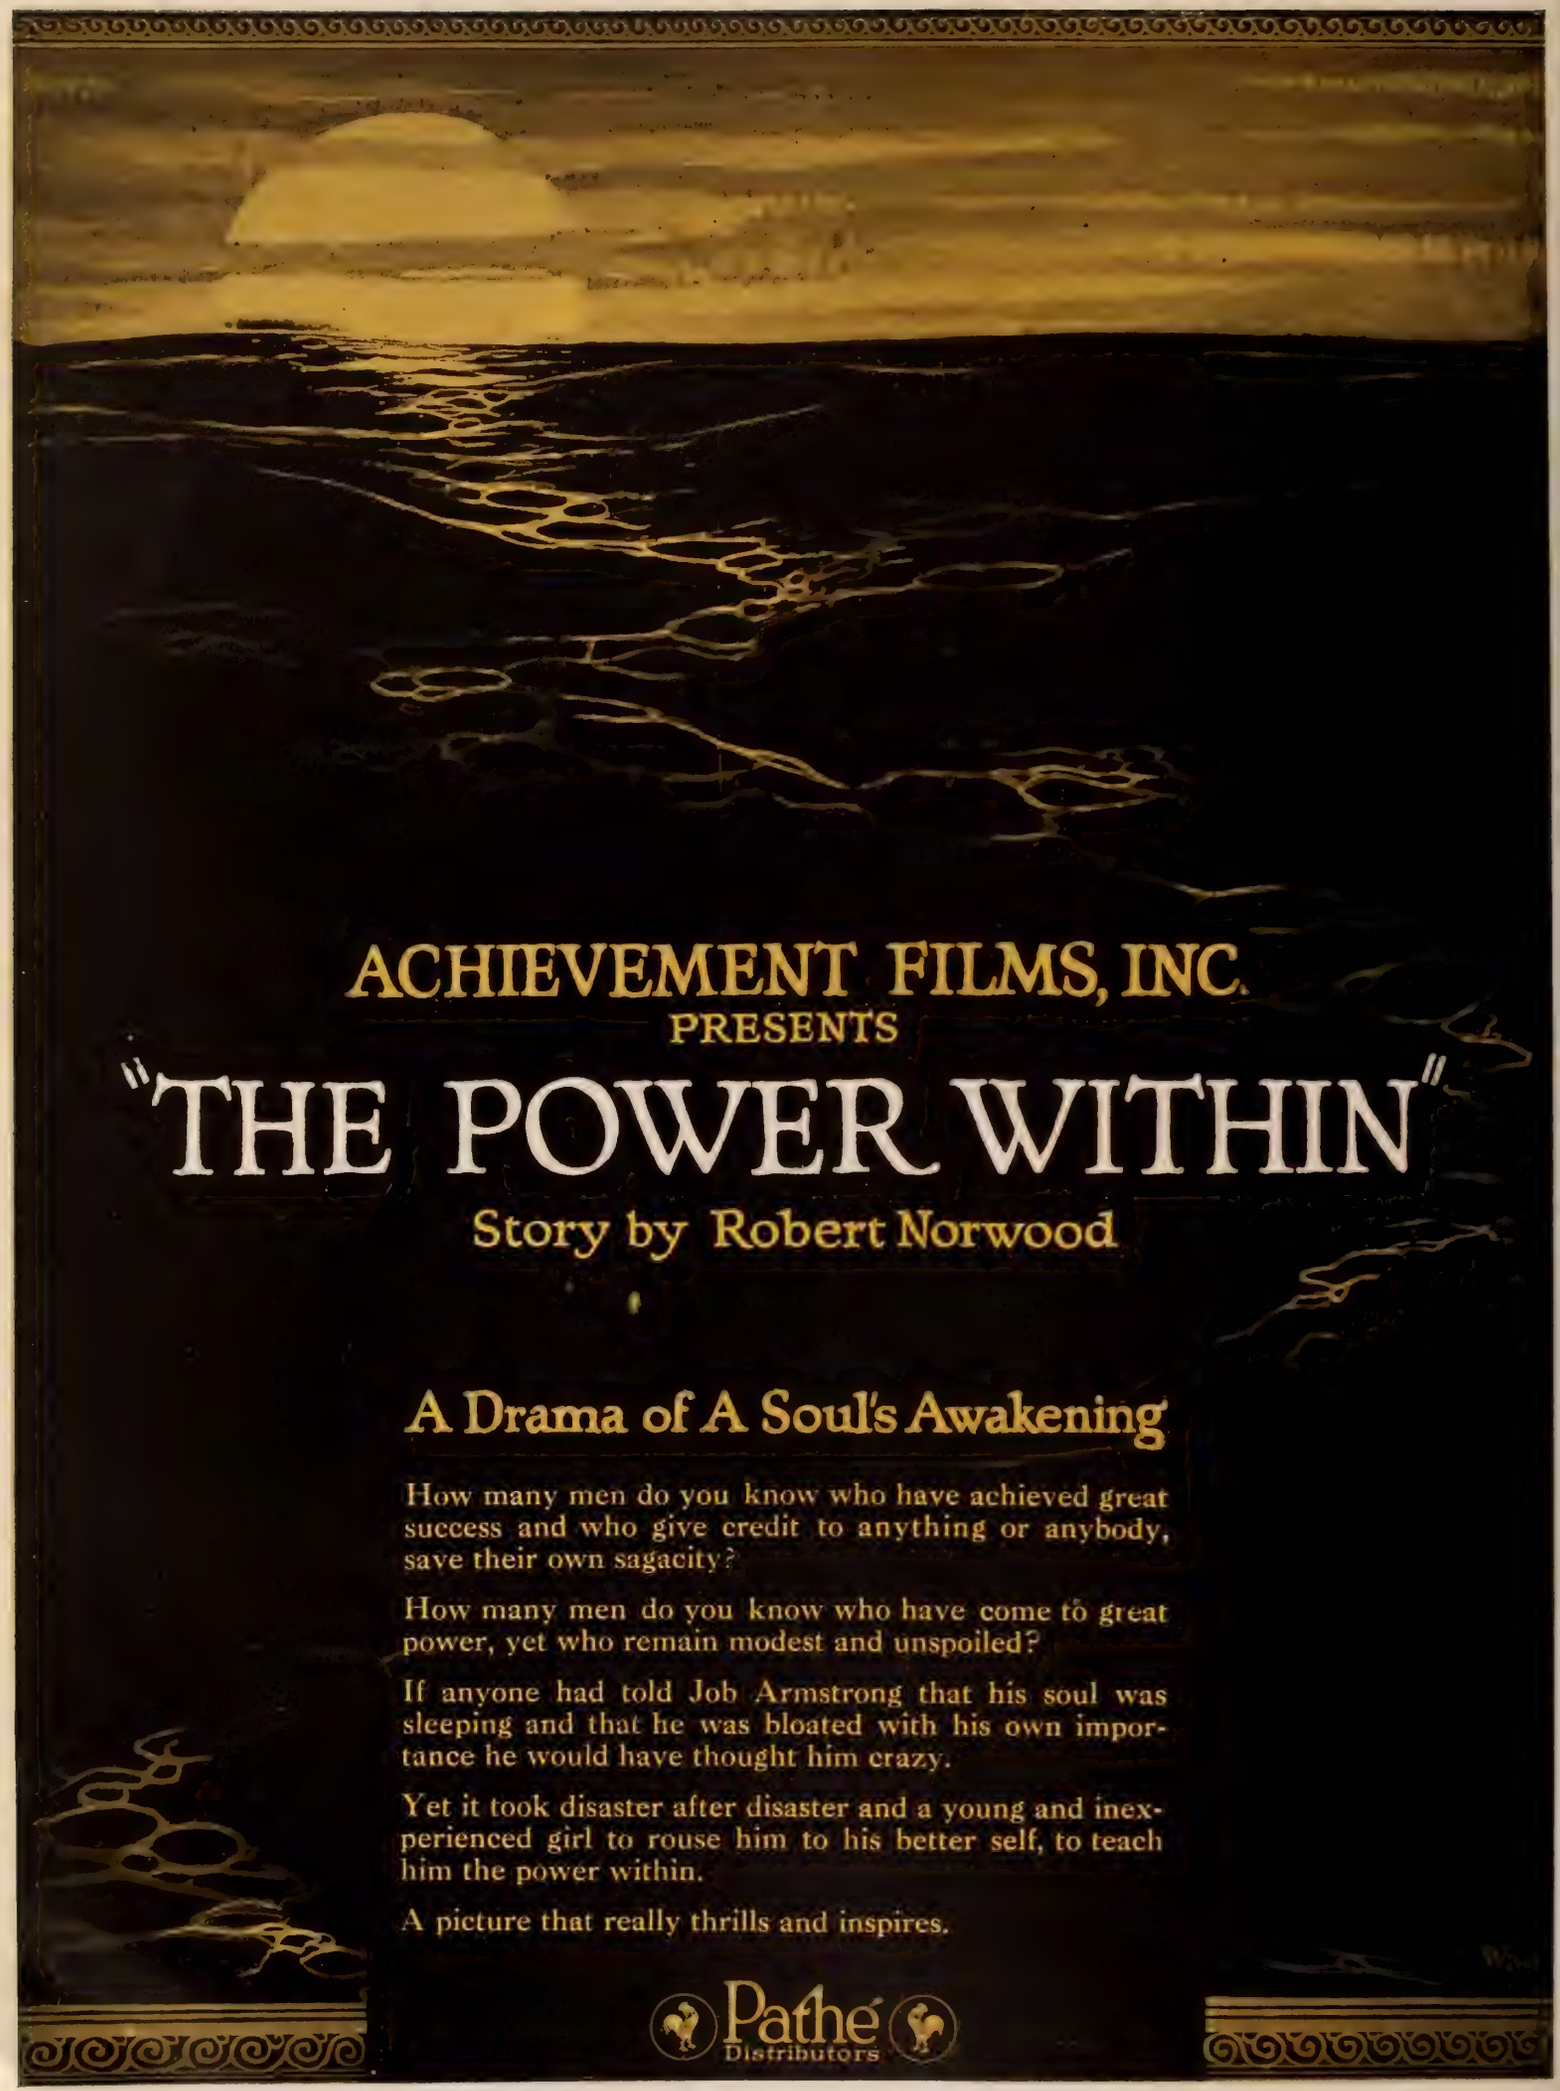
Now the Ku Klux makes its bow in comedy. "Snub" Pollard takes the part of the district attorney and attempts to prosecute a gang of automobile burglars. Marie Mosquini is the attorney for the defense. Every time the district attorney and the judge drive to court their car is stolen. The burglars, to protect themselves, "desert the pool rooms" and form a Klan. By mistake the costume of the "Chief Ku Ku" falls into the district attorney's hands and he rides out to collect evidence, but he is discovered and has a thrilling time avoiding the noose of a rope. The comedy is novel and timely. The action is fast and almost all the situations are funny.

WID'S "Fifteen Minutes"—Hal Roach-Pathe

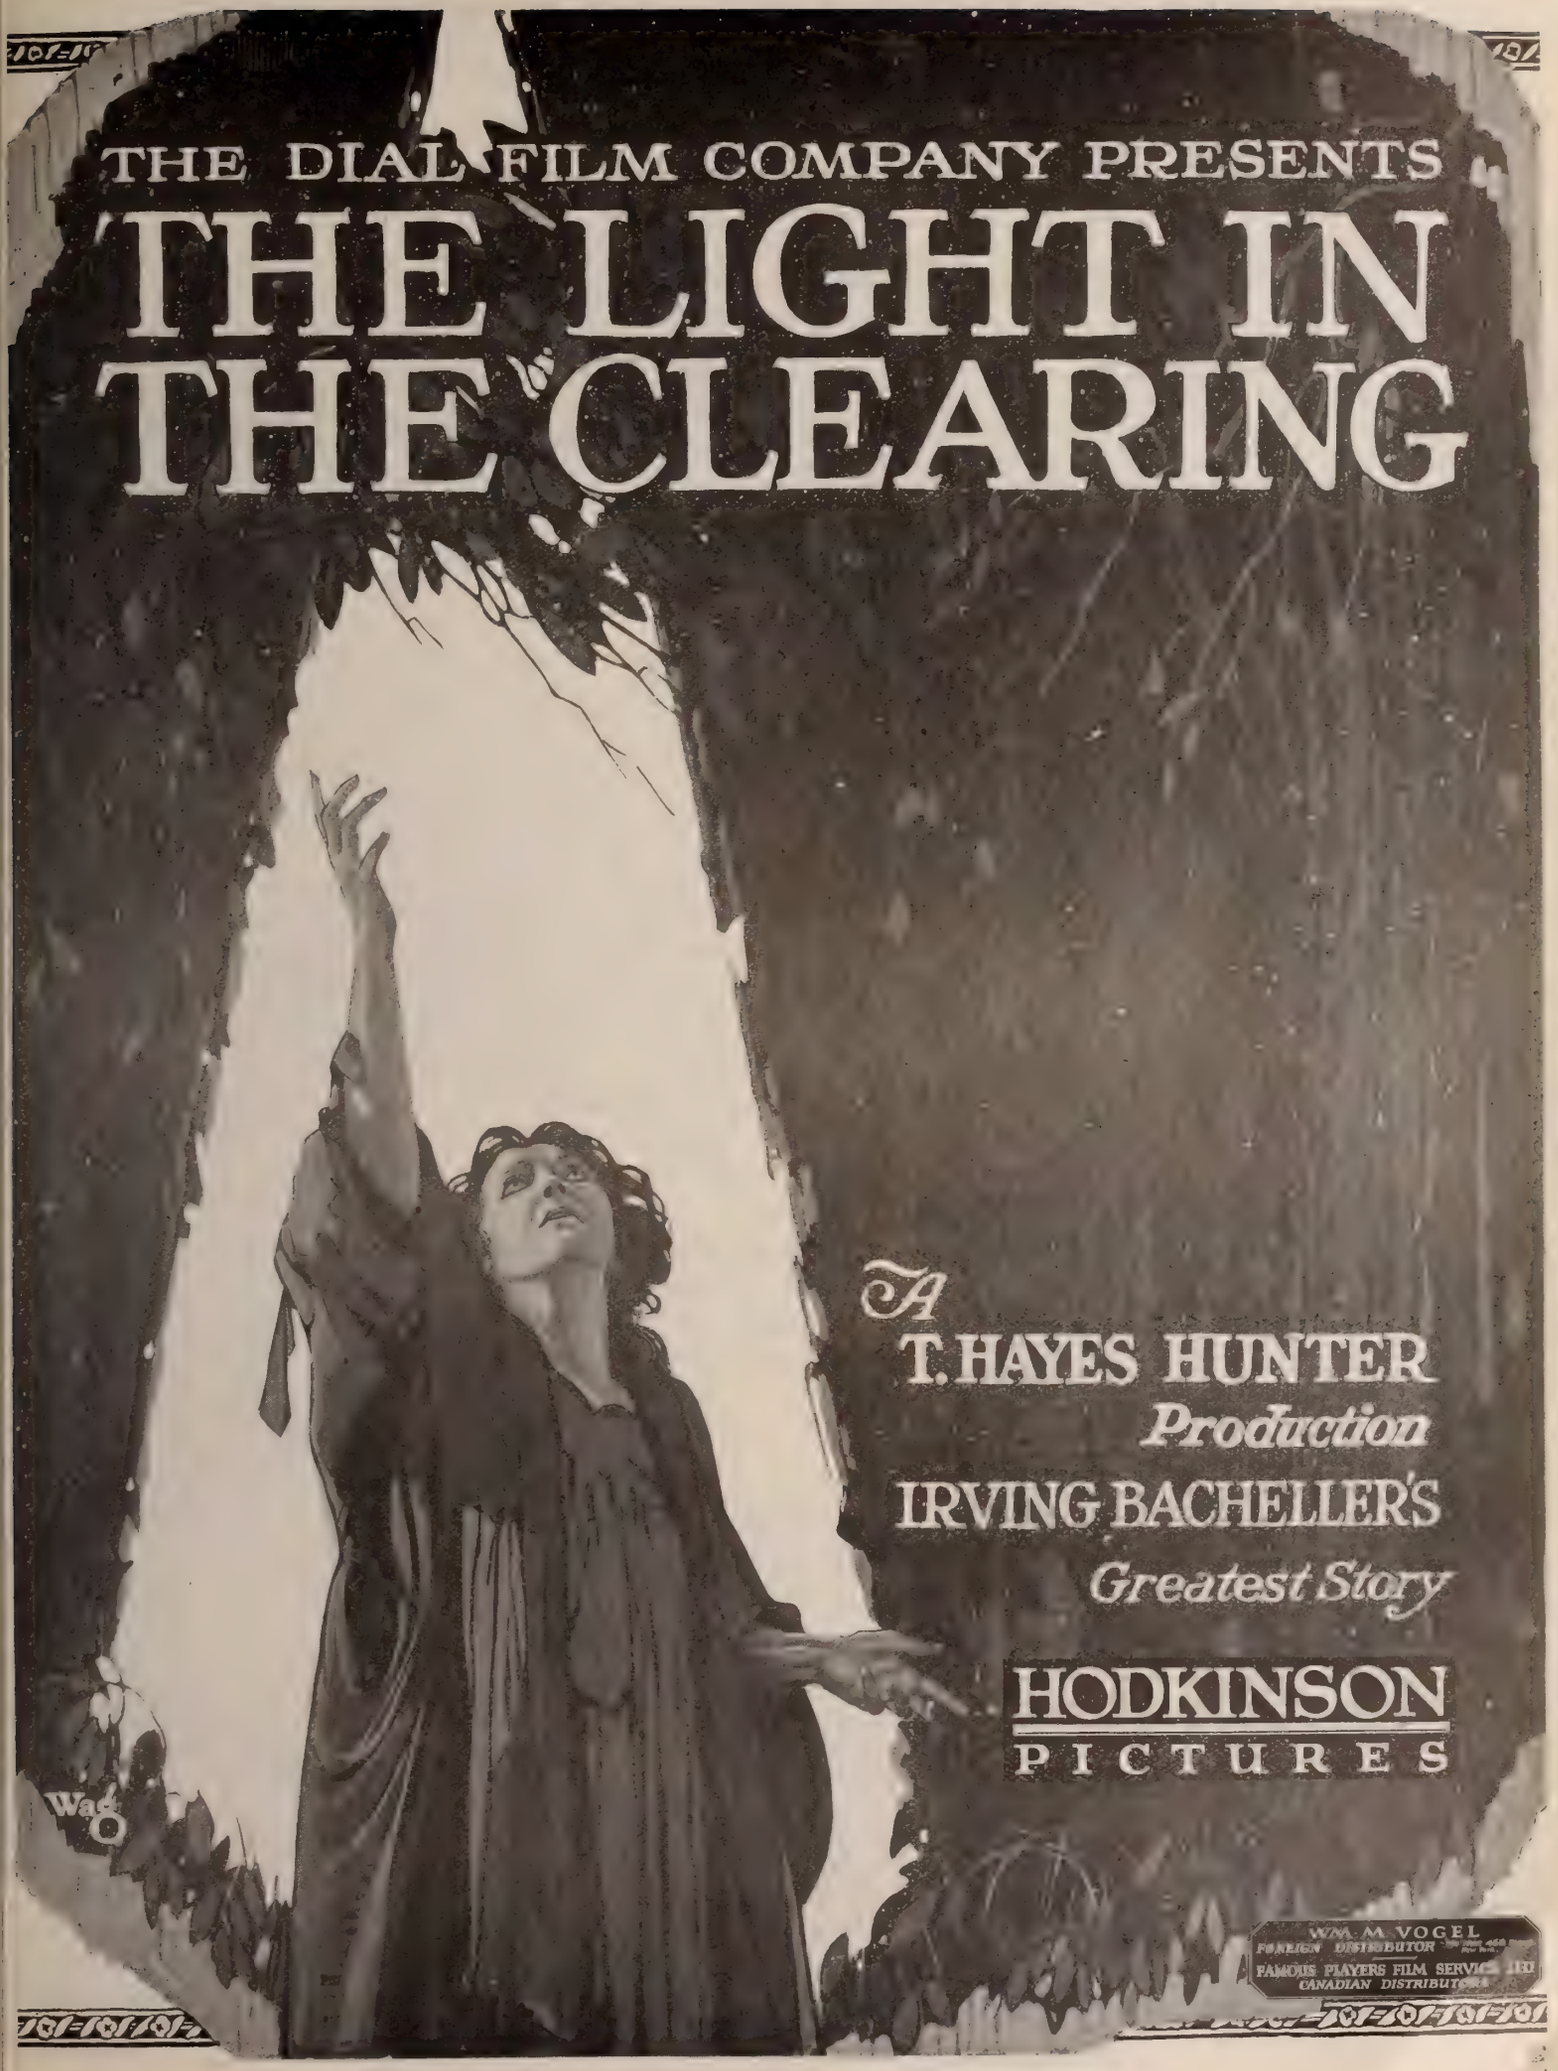
Type of production.....1 reel comedy



"Fifteen Minutes" is one of the best "Snub" Pollard has done. It is full of life, and judging from the laughs it got at its initial run in a Broadway house it should do well anywhere. Marie Mosquini takes the part of the wife who takes her husband shopping and allows him fifteen minutes rest in a "quiet little street." Then the action begins. It starts with a pail of water from an upper floor window and continues with a chase that seems to cover the entire city. At the end of fifteen minutes "Snub" finds himself back at his starting place. Some amusing double exposure work is introduced and the comedy stunts are well executed. The laughs are frequent and the action brisk. This is certainly one of the best of the series.

"Late Hours" M. P. News

(Eddie Boland—Hal Roach Comedy—Pathe)



THE dream situation is used in this latest opus from the Hal Roach lots starring Eddie Boland and his "sidekick," lil' Sunshine Sammy. Eddie arrives home late in the wee sma' hours to discover that his wife and the ever-faithful mother-in-law are waiting up for him. He sneaks into the cellar to avoid them and stumbles over the cat and falls down a flight of stairs. When the bottom is reached he finds a trap door which leads into a cave (after the Arabian Nights idea) and his eyes feast upon a group of Oriental maidens.

And at this point the comedy enters and proceeds with plenty of snap and ginger. Eddie awakens from his dream with the shock that the girls are hastening upstairs to mother-in-law. The author and director have injected some rattling good incident, besides giving it a tone of novelty and a praiseworthy setting. Book it and watch your crowd swallow it hook, line and sinker.—Length 1 reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"THE POWER WITHIN"
Story by Robert Norwood
A Drama of A Soul's Awakening
How many men do you know who have achieved great success and who give credit to anything or anybody, save their own sagacity?
How many men do you know who have come to great power, yet who remain modest and unspoiled?
If anyone had told Job Armstrong that his soul was sleeping and that he was bloated with his own importance he would have thought him crazy.
Yet it took disaster after disaster and a young and inexperienced girl to rouse him to his better self, to teach him the power within.
A picture that really thrills and inspires.

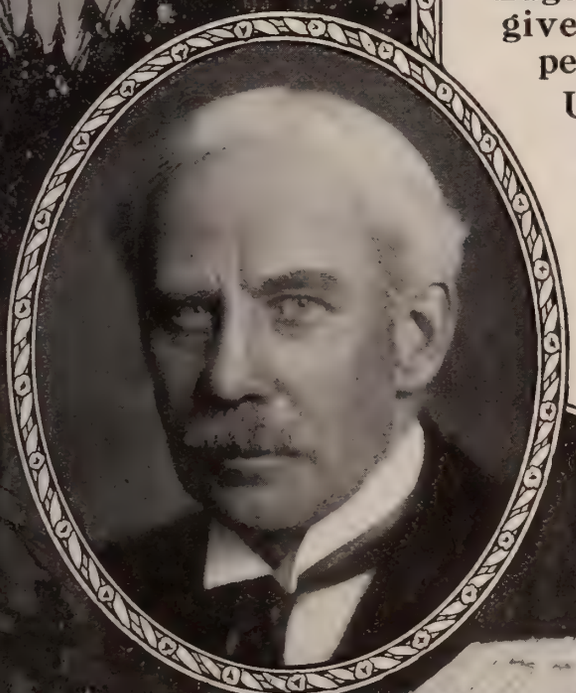
The LIGHT IN

THE STORY

"The Light in the Clearing" is a story of a great American statesman, Joseph Wright; of "Roving Kate," a harmless soul who, cast out by her father many years previous to the opening of the story, spends her time in searching for the child she lost twenty years before; of Bart Bayne who under the guiding hand of Wright, is destined to become a great political figure; of Ben Grimshaw, a selfish, tricky, wealthy man in this small New England town; of Amos Grimshaw, his son, who due to his father's bringing up becomes a ne'er-do-well, and of Sally, the girl for whose love there is strong rivalry between the two boys.



How the lives of these characters were interwoven with one another presents one of the most powerful stories ever adapted to the screen.

THE CLEARING

INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT THE PRODUCTION

T. Hayes Hunter, who will be remembered for his wonderful productions, "Earthbound" and "Desert Gold," and who staged that great Belasco success, "The Girl of the Golden West," spent one year and one month, and shot eleven hundred and eighty-seven scenes before he was satisfied that he had done justice to Mr. Bacheller's greatest novel. Mr. Hunter's directorial genius is shown further in the cast to whom he entrusted the portrayal of the characters in the story. Eugenie Besserer as "Roving Kate" gives one of the most finished performances seen this year.

Under Mr. Hunter's guiding hand, this simple but powerful story of American ideals comes to the screen as one of the finest productions ever made.

Greatest Story

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY

A GOOD PICTURE THAT WILL HOLD EVERY KIND OF HUMAN BEING IN EVERY KIND OF AUDIENCE. The screen can use more such stories, filmed as notable authors write them. Irving Bacheller's story is one of these. Mr. Hunter has sacrificed nothing of his abilities as a director in holding to the author's plan, and yet the result is a highly interesting picture whose suspense is almost unvarying from beginning to end. It is a melodrama, but melodrama of a finer sort, with a real plot and several unusually thrilling situations. Eugenie Besserer as Roving Kate, the crazed outcast daughter, registers brilliantly the most difficult part of the play. It is a great characterization of an unusually exacting role. Frank Leighton as Ben Grimshaw is close to Miss Besserer in achievement. The photography is excellent. The titling is good and the direction compares with the best of the year. The audience that is not pleased with this entertainment will be difficult to please with any picture.

—EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW.

POWERFUL MELODRAMA; SUPERIOR ENTERTAINMENT

There are reasons more definite than the "moralizing" trend of the times for sex plays and objectionable farce having faded into insignificance when it comes to pictures. Such offerings as "The Light in the Clearing" are more or less responsible. It is not difficult to forego one enjoyable form of entertainment if another, more interesting and of greater purpose, is substituted. A worthy example of this has been accomplished in the dramatization of Irving Bacheller's heralded story in the hands of the directorial genius, T. Hayes Hunter. His keen visualization is plainly evident. He has given picture followers another production that will add to his list of prize winners. If anything to hold the "atmosphere" were missing, we did not notice it. HE SELECTED A CAST THAT IS SECOND TO NONE. And one of the best things about the offering is the excellent photography.

—MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

This picture is adapted from Irving Bacheller's well-known story of the same name, and is easily ONE OF THE FEW REALLY BIG PICTURES OF THE YEAR. The production of this picture is a masterly achievement. T. Hayes Hunter's direction showing flashes akin to genius. Every member of the cast is deserving of individual praise, the fine work of George Hackathorne, in a very difficult role, being especially noteworthy. "THE LIGHT IN THE CLEARING" SHOULD MAKE A BIG IMPRESSION EVERYWHERE.

—HARRISON REPORTS.

A faithful and interesting photoplay has been made from Irving Bacheller's "The Light in the Clearing" by T. Hayes Hunter. The production is correct in local color and generous in its employment of a large and capable cast and impressive settings. The most dramatic figure in the cast is Eugenie Besserer as Roving Kate, a part requiring fine dramatic skill. This is furnished by Miss Besserer to the full.

T. Hayes Hunter has developed the story logically and in a manner that holds the attention because through a clever suspense you are kept in the dark as to the relations of the characters to each other until well on in the story. Clever characterizations are among the production's good points and a capable cast portrays Bacheller's people in splendid fashion. Eugenie Besserer offers an unusual pantomine in the role of the insane "Kate."

PICTURES

IT WAS about a year and a half ago that The Dial Film Company was ready to start work on a new picture. Our first search of course was for suitable story material. We eventually chose Irving Bacheller's "Light in the Clearing," first, because the story is a good clean story with plenty of punch and the human element throughout. Second, because it is one of the most popular novels of all times by a novelist of wide popularity. The book to date has been read by some 4,128,000 people and is soon to appear in its tenth edition. After this, we next searched the field of available directors and after careful consideration we obtained T. Hayes Hunter, who will be remembered as being the creator of such successes as "The Border Legion," "Desert Gold," "The Cup of Fury" and that never-to-be-forgotten masterpiece "Earthbound." Next we obtained the services of William R. Lighton, the Saturday Evening Post writer and well known scenarioist, to transform "The Light in the Clearing" into continuity form. Mr. Hunter then chose a cast, which in the words of several reviewers, "is second to none"—a cast in which are Eugenie Besserer, who will be remembered as "Rose Nell" in D. W. Griffith's "Scarlet Days" as well as in leading character roles with every big producer in the business; George Hackathorne, the well known character heavy, who has appeared in so many successes and who immediately after the completion of our production obtained the title role of "The Little Minister". Frank Leigh, dainty little Clara Horton, John Roseleigh, Arthur Morrison, Andrew Arbuckle, Alberta Lee, and others. In the making of the production neither money or time was spared to create the atmosphere which has been so highly commended upon by all who have seen the picture. The photography was placed in the hands of Abe Svholtz and one need only look at any one scene of the picture to be assured of its beauty and excellence. The picture was then titled by none other than Wells Hastings, formerly with D. W. Griffith and now supervising title editor for Realart. Many months were spent on the cutting of the production which has made the picture the wonderfully smooth flowing production that it is. The picture was then brought on to New York and placed in the hands of the Hodkinson organization for distribution. Special paper of real exploitation value has been prepared, together with all the other accessories which go so far in aiding the exhibitor to put the picture over right. The title itself has great box-office value, and will mean real money to the theatre owner who takes full advantage of its endless exploitation possibilities.

Special Service Section on "The Light in the Clearing"

"THE LIGHT IN THE CLEARING" is a New England story adapted from the novel of the same title by Irving Bacheller, a book that has been a favorite with millions of readers, one of the most popular of the "best sellers" and a standard work of fiction to be found in all public libraries.

The picturization is faithful to the original. No liberties have been taken with the plot, no new characters have been introduced and none of the important ones of the novel have been eliminated. Therefore the feature is one where those who have read the book and liked it, may be counted upon to be pleased also with the film version.

Director T. Hayes Hunter has selected his cast with due regard for types, as the author pictured them in his description and he has dressed his sets and costumed his players to follow out the same idea. "Roving Kate" is played by Eugenie Besserer; "Sally Dunkelberg," ingenue leading woman by Clara Horton; "Barton Baynes," juvenile lead by Edward Sutherland; "Squire Fullerton," character lead by J. Edwin Brown.

In filming the picture care has been taken to secure correct locations. The photography is clear and the direction painstaking as to details. As a whole it is a character study of New England life as it was in the 80's. The plot is melodramatic. The romance is incidental and interwoven is a theme to be summed up in the sentence: "Follow the still small voice."

The picture screens in seven reels and is presented as a T. Hayes Hunter Production with no star given the billing.

SELLING THE PICTURE

IN selling "The Light in the Clearing," the exhibitor should first consider the fame of the book and its author, the theme and its moral angle and figure on getting the moral and where possible the actual support of that class of people who are to be found in the churches, women's clubs, library associations and other civic enterprises of its kind, disregarding especially in the early part of the campaign some of the well established exploitation ideas, as applied to the average picture.

Immediately on booking the picture make your plans and be ready at least two weeks before your showing to start your campaign.

Your newspapers should carry your announcement of the booking to be followed with sufficient information from time to time, as to identify the book, its author and the dates the feature will play.

For a definite line of procedure we suggest the following: Announce that the picture will play certain dates. Make arrangements to furnish the libraries with enough extra copies of the novel to supply an increased demand from readers and then proceed to make the demand equal to the supply, by advertising what you have done and why and urge people to read the book before seeing the picture. It is probable that if you are judicious that you can get the librarian's help in this.

See all your book stores for tie-up windows and other advertising based on a cooperative basis. Get into the newspapers with stories of what the book stores do for you and what you do for them.

Arrange for a special showing for the classes of people to be found among the civic societies mentioned above. Make this a time when the "uplift" people can get together all in a bunch and then arrange for opinions from the leaders, to be used in your newspaper advertising. Play up the moral part of the story to them and carry the idea that you need their help in putting over a picture of this sort.

Things You Should Know About the Picture

AN adaptation of the novel by Irving Bacheller, author of such other well known novels as "Eben Holden," "D'ri and I," "Darrel of the Blessed Isles," "Keeping Up with Lizzie," the latter already made into a picture. Directed by T. Hayes Hunter, producer of "Earthbound," "The Cup of Fury," "The Border Legion," and "Desert Gold."

Enacted by an all-star cast in which Eugenie Besserer, Clara Horton, Edward Sutherland, George Hackathorne, Frank Leigh, and J. Edwin Brown, have about equal opportunity.

Screened in eight reels with character development at first and melodramatic climax prior to a satisfactory heart interest ending.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

IN your regular display space and readers stress the moral part of the picture less, and pay more attention to the regular fans.

Describe the offering as a New England drama, promising action by mentioning the threatened lynching of the murderer and the defense of the jail by the hero and heart interest by an outline of the character of "Roving Kate." Use stills that will show some of the characterizations and compare the feature with "Way Down East," "The Old Homestead" and other famous "down east" plays and pictures.

In selecting your head lines, give the title and the author the best end of it with nothing much for the players, except to list them, unless one or more happens to be popular with your fans.

Catch lines and selling talk should be of the homely, heart interest type with no attempt to be clever or jazzy. If "Earth-bound" made friends among your fans, let them know that this is by the same director and promise a picture as carefully produced as was the above.

OUTSIDE EXPLOITATION

WINDOW displays aside from the book store tieups should sell the rural atmosphere and bring the title to the fore.

Suppose with sand, a water color sky and horizon line, some twigs of evergreen trees, you construct a miniature forest, the idea being to leave a clearing in the center. Then with a light bulb or flash light throw a ray of light into your "clearing." This idea could be used as a teaser or identified by cards.

A good lobby display could be evolved from the same idea by increasing the size of the trees, the amount of sand and the woods perspective on canvass. The box office could be made into a cabin and thereby carry out the clearing idea still further. The light in the clearing would be easy in this instance by the use of a baby spot shooting down from among the trees. If you desire to play up the melodramatic angles of the offering, the crazy woman of the picture, "Roving Kate." could be imitated.

PRESENTATION AND HOUSE ATMOSPHERE

PRESENTATION of "The Light in the Clearing" is important. An atmospheric musical score is essential. This score should have a generous number of old fashioned tunes woven in and steer clear of popular numbers.

For a prologue, a number of different anles are offered. You can carry out a rural comedy idea, work on the spiritual side of the feature, make your number a tribute to the author of the book by quoting from the novel itself.

Of the three, it is probable that the rural comedy idea, with music would please the greatest number of fans, especially as there is little humor in the picture itself.

Highlights of the Production

NEW ENGLAND atmosphere and types faithfully portrayed. Theme founded on the principle of doing right regardless of the material consequences. Dramtic situations from the murder episode, the attempt at lynching the prisoner and the defense of the jail. The reconciliation of "Roving Kate" with her father and a happy ending to the romance.

The character acting of the entire cast and the attention to detail in the development of the story.

Suppose you were to build a set to represent a rural barber shop with the idea of having the village band meeting there prior to forming a parade to celebrate the "Squire's" election as governor?

You will need one barber chair of ancient style, a mirror to hang on the wall in front of it, a narrow shelf for the barber's tools, etc.

Let your curtain rise on the village barber shaving a customer, with a number of the "band boys" in startling colored uniforms, sitting around. Your barber is to be the leader of the band (this was a usual thing among rural bands of a few years past) and preferably be a cornet player. Dress him in the band uniform but at the time of discovery he has on his white barber coat with his uniform coat hanging on the wall.

Work up some comedy gags for your barber and his "patient" along the lines of cold lather, dull razors, overhot towels, etc., and let your "band boys" display impatience to get the parade started and thereby inform your audience of what you are shooting at. You might work in the village "Hi Holler," the ubiquitous checker players, the small town sport, etc.

After the barber has informed his band that there will be no parade until he has finished his tonsorial efforts, certain of your "band boys" can be formed into a male quartette with a guitar accompaniment, rendering old time favorites. Solos by various members of the band would fit in all right and the checker players and the town fool could be used for gags.

After the barber has finished his shaving job, he puts on his coat, brushes his hair and prinks up, playing up the comedy angles, grabs his cornet, lectures his players, etc., and forms them into line for the march. Music is given out and then they pass out playing "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," the music gradually growing fainter to give the impression that marchers have gone up the street to the new governor's home.

Use can be made of the town fool and the checker players, again to cover the band's exit and a country street backing previously not visible can be lit up to imitate a country town, election night celebration.

STUNT AND NOVELTY SUGGESTIONS

BALLYHOOS for this picture under ordinary circumstances do not seem advisable but for those who get results from this form of exploitation perhaps the best opportunity lies in the character of "Roving Kate." A woman made up to represent "Kate" could be sent out to wander around the streets, offering to tell fortunes, and giving out cards to passersby or when she has collected a crowd.

A selected mailing list of novel reading people, civic organization members, members of churches, etc., should be effective advertising. The message sent to this sort of residents should follow the same angles as the newspaper advertising and sell the picture from the standpoint of the theme, the fame of the author, the director and his previous production, "Earthbound," etc. No attempt at teaser stuff or alleged personal letters should be used unless it is the "personal recommendation" idea.

Another stunt which has been used with success on other New England locale pictures is special matinees for people who were born "Down East" with appropriate exercises and attention paid to the event so it becomes good newspaper copy. For instance you might have a "Maine Night," a "New Hampshire Night" and so on.

Eugenie Besserer Has Had Remarkable Career

"EUGENIE BESSERER had one of the most difficult roles ever attempted by an actress for the screen in portraying the pivotal character of 'Roving Kate' for in this she not only had to display emotions of many different types necessary to high light the story but back of all that she had to keep before the attention of the viewer the fact that she was insane. Her role was emotional plus, and necessarily sympathetic."

The above is a statement by T. Hayes Hunter concerning Miss Besserer's work in this T. Hayes Hunter Production. That Miss Besserer was equal to this display of emotion is not surprising to those who remember her work as Rosey Nell in "Scarlet Days" and Mrs. Hilton in "The Greatest Question" both of which were produced by D. W. Griffith.

Miss Besserer was born in Marseilles, France, of French parentage. Her mother was the one convent-bred daughter of a large family, and her father an aristocrat. The strength of character which enabled these two people of distinct classes to marry in defiance of a custom generations old is the same indomitable spirit which has enabled their daughter to achieve her ideals, in the face of adverse circumstances.

When little "Jennie," as Miss Besserer was called, lost her mother, the farm in France was left behind and the child was brought to Canada, to another farm. Later she went to New York and there her life-long desire to be an actress was first attained when she met McKee Rankin who persuaded her to play "Little Georgie" in the "Danities." After that she continued on the stage permanently with only a few interruptions, until her picture work began.

At seventeen Miss Besserer was the author and star of her own play; a one-act drama which she had based on fencing. A wide melodramatic experience has been hers. With the Pike Stock Company of Cincinnati and the Manchester Stock Company during long engagements Miss Besserer was called upon to portray roles ranging from queens to ragged urchins, traveling all over the world. The most notable of these tours was as Margaret Anglin's understudy, in Australia. When Miss Anglin returned to America Eugenie Besserer became the leading woman.

Ten years ago Miss Besserer began her picture work with the Selig Company, and since then her screen characterizations have exceeded even her success in legitimate work. In these ten years she has appeared in films for all of the leading producers making features on the West Coast. In recent months she played in "The Gift Supreme," "Her Story," "The Fighting Shepherdess" with Anita Stewart, took the part of Jezobel with Hayakawa in "The Brand of Lopez." In Clara Kimball Young's "Soul of Rafael" Miss Besserer appeared as "Dona Luisa," was a lead in "The Scoffer" made by Allan Dwan and appeared as the fortune teller in "What Happened to Rose." She played opposite Joseph Dowling in "The Sin of Martha Queed" for Allan Dwan and was the adventurous mother in "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway" for Charles Ray. L. J. Gasnier cast Miss Besserer for an important part in "Good Women," she played in "Seeds of Vengeance" an Ollie Sellers production, took a most important part in Selig-Rork's new "Rosary" and recently completed the role of Mrs. McKaye in R. A. Walsh's "Kindred of the Dust."

Miss Besserer's versatility seems almost unbounded, both in acting and make-up. She is so skillful that even those about the studio who know her best are often deceived.

The two roles played by Miss Besserer for Griffith, "Rosie Nell" in "Scarlet Days" and "Mrs. Hilton" in "The Greatest Question" and the part she has just played in "The Light in the Clearing" she believes will stand out as her best work for the screen.

Miss Besserer has a wonderful home in the foothills where she spends all of the time not engaged in picture work serving in the capacity of architect and landscape artist for her beautiful estate.

Sunlight Arc Used to Fine Effect

THE Sunlight Arc was used to supply the excellent lighting effects which characterize "The Light in the Clearing." And, as usual, the use of Sunlight is easily seen in the fine photography and delicate shading in each of the individual scenes.

The Sunlight Arc company deserves the credit for installing the lights which were used to photograph the arms conference in Washington.

Elinor Glyn to Assist in Production

Arriving from London last Tuesday, Elinor Glyn, noted author, who is writing for Paramount pictures, stayed in New York only a day before hurrying on to the Lasky studio in Hollywood, where she will assist in the production of her story, "Beyond the Rocks," in which Gloria Swanson will star.

Mrs. Glyn reached Los Angeles Sunday afternoon and was scheduled to begin work immediately in collaborating with Sam Wood, the director, who already has taken a few scenes in the production.

Hackathorne in Difficult Role

ALMOST difficult role in the film production of "The Light in the Clearing" is the portrayal of the character of Amos Grimshaw, which because of the nature of the characterization is both a heavy and a sympathetic role. The youth is bad because of heredity, environment and the need of good motherly and fatherly care. Because the youth failed to receive the paternal advice he became bad following in the footsteps of his father, the rotter of the story. To make all possible of this part it was necessary the player should so interpret the role that it would draw sympathy from the audience. In such a manner has George Hackathorne played this part and Director J. Hayes Hunter believes it is the greatest youthful characterization of Hackathorne's screen career.

George Hackathorne first focussed the attention of photoplay lovers upon himself by his clever impersonation of Sid Sawyer, Tom's brother, in "Tom Sawyer" and "Huck and Finn" but young Hackathorne was well known in vaudeville and stock circles, in spite of his youth, long before he became enthusiastic about the possibilities of having a camera for his only audience. Also, George was a successful author, producer and soloist before the world of picture fans discovered him.

In fact, George Hackathorne's career started upon the night when his mother took him to see his first Shakesperean play. From that night on nothing has been able to swerve George from the then formed ambition to become a great actor. Instead of playing football and monkeying with mechanical toys as other boys did, little George spent his time in the library pouring over books of drama and reading endless plays, studying the stage with all the avidity that his schoolmates bestowed upon dime novels. When he was but fifteen he had written and produced two successful one-act plays, and has ever since regarded study and writing with an interest second only to that of his profession as an actor.

Nature endowed George Hackathorne with a splendid baritone voice, and a very musical speaking voice, which he has carefully developed into a great asset. Even since he has become so enthusiastic about his photoplay work, Mr. Hackathorne has kept in trim for the stage by volunteering his services for numerous war benefit performances, and by playing with marked success in many of the sketches and plays produced by the Community Theatre Players in Hollywood.

A juvenile man who can play characters ranging in age from fifteen to fifty with equal ability is indeed exceedingly rare, and George Hackathorne is just such an individual. He played the sympathetic juvenile character role in Lois Weber's "What Do Men Want;" the character part of Arlas the hunch back in Allan Dwan's "The Sin of Martha Queed." In the Benjamin Hampton Production of Stuart Edward White's story "The Grey Dawn" he enacted the part of Calhoun Bennett, a sympathetic character role. Recently he played the name role opposite Betty Compson in the Paramount Production of "The Little Minister" and he is just now finishing the part of a dual characterization of Jamie Logan in the Universal special all star production of "Human Hearts."

Milne and DeCasseres in Titling Business

Peter Milne and Benjamin DeCasseres, who were formerly with the Famous Players-Lasky staff at the Long Island studio, have joined forces and established themselves in the business of free-lance editing and titling. Mr. Milne has had wide experience in the film business, and Mr. Casseres before entering the picture field has had an extensive career as a newspaperman.

Arthur Rankin in Support of Viola Dana

The engagement of Arthur Rankin to appear in support of Viola Dana in "The Five Dollar Baby," a Harry Beaumont production for Metro, brings another member of the Barrymore-Drew-Rankin family to the theatre.

Mr. Rankin begins his career with the organization that sponsored Ethel Barrymore and Lionel Barrymore in their motion picture activities.

Unique Lighting Effects in Hodkinson Special

The many thousands of feet of film which were used by the Dial Film Company in making the picturization of "The Light in the Clearing" were all developed by Clunes Studios in Hollywood. Quick and good work was vitally essential in the developing and printing of each day's work in order that Mr. Hunter and Mr. Scholtz could see the finished work on the screen, and give their approval on the previous day's work. This work was done in a very efficient manner by Clunes and it has added much to the excellent photography which is one of the outstanding features of "The Light in the Clearing."

Many scenes in "The Light in the Clearing" called for unique lighting effects. Night scenes of large street sets, long shots of wooded roads, and silhouette effects had to be lighted to give moonlight effects. In taking these scenes Mr. Hunter found the Sun Light Arc to be the best suited light. The shots in many instances were so long that the powerful Sun Arc was the only light capable of throwing a strong enough light, and it is due to this light that the remarkable effects in "The Light in the Clearing" were made possible.

Henry O. Bollman, the business manager of The Dial Film Company has the distinction of being the youngest executive in the motion picture business. After leaving Cornell Mr. Bollman went to the West Coast to assist his father, Otto Bollman, in the production of Dial features.

Gentlemen:-

I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation for the laboratory work which you did on our last production "The Light in the Clearing". The negative has been very carefully inspected and approved as excellent. Fine laboratory work is very essential to big productions and your work is certainly way above the average.

Your service was also very prompt and the interest you showed in doing everything in the best manner is most assuredly going to show in the finished product. It means a lot to a producer to know that his "rushes" are going to be delivered as promptly as could be wished and means much to us in the saving of time and expense. In closing let me say that I hope we may have the pleasure of having more work done at your laboratory in the near future.

Sincerely yours,

Henry O. Bollman

Gentlemen:-

In our forthcoming T. Hayes Hunter production "The Light in the Clearing" we had many night scenes, long shots of streets and woods which called for flood lighting and occasionally silhouette effects which required an even, strong back light.

We found in taking these scenes that the sunlight arc is by far most efficient and practical form of lighting to use, and I know that the results can be readily seen in our finished product. Also for anyone who really studies lighting your arc becomes adaptible to almost every form of lighting required in the making of big productions today. In closing let me say that we owe you many thanks for the results that we have been able to obtain through the use of your light.

Cordially yours,

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

J. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVENUE

Earl Silverman, brother of Eddie, the popular manager of Selznick's exchange at Chicago, is now connected with the booking department of First National.

Ralph Bradford, one of the most widely known and popular exchange men in Chicago, has been appointed sales manager of Celebrated Players by President J. L. Friedman, and already has assumed his new duties. Mr. Bradford was formerly manager of Famous Players-Lasky exchange and has held other important positions in the Windy City. Mr. Bradford has a sales staff of nine men to look after, and a large list of feature nd short releases to offer theatre owners.

Manager Clyde Eckhart, of Fox's Chicago exchange, has made a remarkable record in booking "Over The Hill," which will go into forty Chicago houses for a solid week's run shortly after the holidays. This will be the first time that a picture has appeared in such a number of houses and where forty prints will be used at the same time. The contracts, according to Mr. Eckhart, are on a percentage basis and he believes a tremendous business will be done as the cumulative publicity given by the forty theatres' advertising, as well as the additional advertising which will probably be done by Fox during the week, will lead the motion picture public of Chicago towards these theatres. "Over The Hill" has also been booked into nine Milwaukee theatres for a week's run and Manager Eckhart states that additional theatres in Chicago may be booked between now and the date fixed for "Over The Hill" Week in Chicago.

Manager Sid Goldman, of Wid Gunning's local exchange, is another manager who is putting them over and reports that he will work thirteen prints of "What Do Men Want?" in the Chicago territory, beginning next week. This picture made an exceptionally fine box office record at its down town run in the Bijou Dream.

E. W. Johnson, who has a wide acquaintance in Chicago territory, has joined the staff of W. W. Hodkinson's exchange as a salesman.

Manager Given, of Paramount's Chicago exchange, has received word from Sam Katz that the first four days' attendance records at the Riviera and Central Park, at which "The Sheik" is being shown, indicated that it would break all house records. Reports coming in from key centers throughout the territory show that "The Sheik" is one of the biggest, if not the greatest, business getters of the year and has made money for exhibitors wherever shown.

Manager Gallas, of Robertson-Cole, has recently added two salesman to his staff. They are J. J. Lynch, who is a brother of E. T. Lynch, of the Tiffin, and who is just entering the exchange field as a salesman, he having been connected with the Western Electric Company for ten years; and Charles Dingman, formerly with First National and Famous Players-Lasky Chicago exchanges. Both will cover Illinois territory.

Fred Gilman Jopp, well known magazine feature writer, is now located in Chicago and it is understood will get material for stories featuring the motion picture industry in various national magazines.

G. E. Cummings, one of the Famous Players-Lasky directors, and a brother of Irving Cummings, is in Chicago for a visit and will remain over the holidays. Mr. Cummings is seeing Chicago in real tourists' style, and has the leading theatres, museums and parks on his schedule of sight seeing expeditions. He will return to the coast to resume work on Paramount pictures early in the new year.

Albert Deane, publicity director of Paramount in Australia, passed through Chicago this week en route to New York, where he will remain for sometime. Mr. Deane commented on the fact that Australian motion picture fans are more avaricious thon those in America and demand two full features at every show. He also states that no Sunday performance are held as the entire population of the cities and towns go to the country on that day and it is impossible to get them to attend the theatres.

H. A. Gundling has sold his handsome 785 seat theatre, the Bryn Mawr, located the street of the same name, to Abe Gumbiner, who already has taken over the management of the house.

"Conflict," the Universal Jewel feature, starring Priscilla Dean, broke all attendance records at the Orpheum Saturday, according to Ralph Kettering, of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer organization. It is stated that the Orpheum took in four hundred dollars more with this feature on Saturday, with an admission price of thirty-nine cents, than the Randolph collected with a fifty cent rate and playing one of the biggest pictures of the year. One of the features of the Orpheum lobby was the mechanical picture of Priscilla Dean in her wild ride on the plunging logs down the river gorge. The contrivance shows the water rushing down the river and the logs tumbling about in wild confusion, and constantly drew crowds into the lobby. The picture is playing to such splendid business that Jones, Linick & Schaefer have arranged for an indefinite run at this house.

C. L. Filkins, veteran Chicago film salesman, has joined the Pathe short subject staff, and will cover northern Illinois, for that department of the Pathe exchange.

Eric Schey, treasurer of the Goldwyn Film Corporation, was a Chicago visitor this week, making his headquarters at the local exchange.

The Pathe trade showing at Aryan Grotto on Monday of this week, was a success both in point of attendance and interest. Two Harold Lloyd comedies, "Never Weaken," and "A Sailor Made Man," the latter of which made a big hit with exhibitors, and several reels of "White Eagle," the big, new Pathe serial, were screened. Manager Martin made an interesting address on the wider use of serials and Victor M. Shapiro, exploitation manager of Pathe, made a trip on from New York to tell the assembled exhibitors about the exploitation possibilities of "White Eagle." Another feature of the showing was the appearance on the stage of Chief Little Chief, a full blooded sioux indian, who was attired in warrior regalia and rode a "Bill Harte" pinto cow pony. Indian and pony are one of the exploitation features which exhibitors can obtain from the Pathe exchange to help them put over "White Eagle."

Charles Phillips, of Robertson-Cole organization, has arrived at the Chicago office from New York to act as exploitation and publicity representative in this territory and will aid exhibitors in advertising and exploiting Robertson-Cole pictures, which they have booked.

Louis Laemmle, of Universal Film exchange, is at home, ill with tonsilitis. He hopes to be back at the office, however, within a week or ten days.

The joint grievance committee of the Chicago Film Board of Trade and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois, has held two meetings to date, at which a number of controversies between exhibitors and exchange men were arbitrated and according to reports, the decisions arrived at were satisfactory to all parties concerned. The Chicago branch of the Hoy Agency, which operates in conjunction with the National Film Association, for the benefit of exchanges and exhibitors, will be opened immediately after the first of the year and Secretary I. R. Lesserman, of the Chicago Film Board, which is associated with the National Association, is looking for quarters for the agency. It is understood that Mr. Hoy, himself, will come on to get the work started and install a local manager.

CALIFORNIA FILM CARRIES BIG WALLOP

Magazine readers who got a kick out of the "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" stories written by George Randolph Chester will get a whale of a wallop out of the picture play at the California Theater this week.

The picture is "The Son of Wallingford," a Vitagraph production made under the personal direction of George Randolph Chester himself, with the able assistance of Mrs. Chester.

In time it carries the view further along in the years of the life of J. Rufus Wallingford and "Blackie" Daw, dealing, as it does, with the adventures of Jimmie Wallingford, the son of J. Rufus, and "Toad" Jessup, the ward of the two schemers, when Jimmie, close to man's estate and driven to desperation by his father's fear of his "lobeless" ear and the potential criminal tepdencies it betokens, leaves home and starts out on his own account.

FAMILIAR CHARACTERS

All the familiar characters are there, with a few not in the original stories but added for romantic and photodramatic interest. J. Rufus, whse wildcat schemes, in spite of their nefarious intent, had a habit of turning out all to the good, is acted by Wilfred North, who looks as though he might have stepped out of the original illustrations of the printed story. "Blackie" Daw, his partner in doing others "good," always the optimist with the unfailing smile and inevitable saxophone, is brought to life by George Webb, who gives the character a remarkable portrayal.

Fannie (Mrs. Wallingford) and Violet Bonnie (Mrs. Blackie) are in the capable hands of Florence Hart and Lyla Leslie, respectively. The familiar bald head of "Onion" Jones is found on the shoulders of Bobby Mack.

Tom Gallery is Jimmie Wallingford and Antrim Short is "Toad" Jessup. Both players are particularly well fitted for their parts and look just as one would imagine the two youngsters would look as young men.

TYPICALLY WALLINGFORD

The interpolated characters are Mary Curtis, appealingly played by Priscilla Bonner, with whom Jimmie falls in love when he sets out to seek his fortune, while Andrew Arbuckle as her father, on whose land Jimmie strikes oil, and makes the whole town rich and happy, except, of course, Henry Begoode, the local magnate and tightwad (played by Van Dyke Brooke), and his son Bertram (Sydney D'Albrook), who through their own greed fell victim to the scheming of J. Rufus.

The story as screened is full of the typical Wallingford comedy, plus a delightful romance between Jimmie and Mary and the biggest kind of a thrill with which it is climared when a burning lake of oil threatens the life of the three younger characters, while the hands of a mob, frenzied by the supposed loss of their money, are at the throats of J. Rufus and "Blackie," with "Onion" Jones to the rescue.

The picture is billed as a 100 per cent picture and it lives up to the billing. It has everything that a picture should have to gain the enthusiastic approval of the "90 per cent" as well as those high brows who have a saving sense of humor and can rise to a real thrill. A laugh, a sob clutching at the throat, a pull at the heart strings, a shudder, a thrill—what more could a film fan want in a picture? And they can find all those in many fold at the California this week.

On the music program Henri Le Bonte, a splendid tenor, is singing "On the Road to Mandalay" and "I Hear You Calling Me." Herman Heller conducts the California orchestra through selections from "Carmen" (Bizet) and the popular Fox trot, "Bimini Bay."

The usual news weekly and other short reel subjects are also screened.
